Re: ADR 332 (PMUR 427), Leo Burnett
Worldwide, Inc. Leo Burnett USA, Inc.,
Raymond T. DeThorne

Dear Ms. Fraser:

On behalf of our clients, Leo Burnett USA, Inc. and Raymond T. DeThorne ("Respondents"), enclosed please find a $2,500 check in settlement of the above-captioned matter.

Pursuant to your request to provide the dates on which the terms of paragraph 6 were satisfied, on March 14, 2007, counsel for Respondents requested that the National Republican Congressional Committee disgorge $10,000 to the U.S. Treasury. Furthermore, Respondents developed and approved the attached corporate guidelines and they will be distributed in the course of Leo Burnett USA, Inc.'s usual practice in such matters.

Thank you for your assistance in this matter and please feel free to contact me if you have any further questions.

Sincerely,

Eric S. Brown

Political Participation and Contributions

Voting, keeping informed on national and international affairs, participating in civic bodies and social organizations, and contributing to the candidates or political party of one's choice are the rights of every citizen. Leo Burnett USA, Inc. encourages employees' participation in political activities, and employees do so as private citizens and not as company representatives. Personal decisions to contribute within legal limits, or not to make contributions at all, will not influence any aspect of employment. By law, employees who decide to contribute to federal candidates, national political parties, and federal political action committees must not request, and Leo Burnett USA, Inc. will not provide, corporate reimbursement for their personal contributions to these organizations. Decisions to make corporate contributions to state and local candidates and organizations, when allowed by law, are in all cases to be reviewed by the legal department to ensure full compliance with all applicable legal requirements. More information on campaign finance law is available from the Federal Election Commission at its website, <http://www.fec.gov>.
