FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION
FACTUAL AND LEGAL ANALYSIS

RESPONDENT: Douglass Lawrence

MUR: 5573

I. INTRODUCTION

This matter was generated by the Federal Election Commission ("Commission") pursuant to information ascertained in the normal course of carrying out its supervisory responsibilities.

II. FACTUAL SUMMARY

A. Background

Westar Energy, Inc., formerly known as Western Resources, Inc., is a Kansas public corporation headquartered in Topeka.¹ It is the largest electricity provider in Kansas, serving more than 600,000 customers and employing more than 2,000 people.

Westar has been politically active since the late 1980s, mostly as an advocate for public utility deregulation. The company's political activities have included direct corporate contributions to state and local candidates (permitted under state law), contributions from Westar's separate segregated fund, most recently known as the Western Resources Political Action Committee ("Westar PAC"), to federal candidates, and earmarked contributions from Westar executives to federal candidates, primarily within the Kansas congressional delegation. Notably, after 1998, employee contributions to the Westar

PAC declined significantly and individual earmarked contributions from Westar executives increased in their place.²

B. 2002 Contribution Activity

In late 2001, Congress considered a major energy deregulation bill that had significant consequences for Westar. The press reported that an early version of the Energy Bill, proposed by Rep. Joe Barton, would have exempted any subsidiary or affiliate of a utility holding company from Securities and Exchange Commission oversight under the Investment Company Act of 1940 ("ICA").³ Along with a widely accepted effort to repeal the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935, the ICA exemption provision would have allowed utility companies to create and own investment companies that would not be subject to any federal regulatory oversight.⁴ Westar was interested in getting this legislation enacted.⁵

Because of strong opposition from several congressional members and the SEC, neither the Senate nor House versions of the Bill contained the industry-wide exemption.⁶ Consequently, Westar and its outside lobbyist, Richard Bornemann of Virginia-based Governmental Strategies,

² On March 29, 2001, the PAC notified the Commission that it was terminating effective December 31, 2000. Westar has resurrected a PAC, the Westar Energy Employees Political Action Committee, which filed its Statement of Organization with the Commission on October 3, 2003.

⁶ See, e.g., Testimony Concerning H.R. 3406 and Repeal of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935 and Testimony Concerning The Enron Bankruptcy, the Functioning of Energy Markets and Repeal of the Public Utility Holding Company Act of 1935: Hearings Before the House Comm. on Energy and Commerce, Subcomm. on Energy and Air Quality (Dec. 13, 2001, and Feb. 13, 2002) (statements of Isaac C. Hunt, Jr., Commissioner, U.S. Securities and Exchange Commission).

Inc., apparently devised a political strategy to try to preserve the exemption in the legislation. This strategy included the making of contributions to the political committees of key legislators behind the Bill. Toward this end, on April 23, 2002, Bornemann submitted a memorandum to Douglass Lawrence, Westar's then-Vice President of Government Affairs, outlining a plan to have Westar make contributions to Rep. W.J. "Billy" Tauzin, Rep. Joe Barton, Rep. Michael G. Oxley, Rep. Richard Burr, Sen. Richard C. Shelby, House Majority Leader Tom DeLay, and to these legislators' designees. The memorandum recommended that Westar executives or Westar PAC give $31,500 to these specific candidates and that Westar make a $25,000 contribution in nonfederal funds to Rep. DeLay's Texans for a Republican Majority PAC. The stated purpose of the proposed contributions was "to develop a significant and positive profile for the Company's federal presence."

Shortly thereafter, Lawrence devised a payment schedule for thirteen Westar executives at the Vice President level or above to make individual contributions to the targeted legislators.⁷ Based on their salaries, Lawrence asked executives to give specific amounts to specific candidates. Lawrence made these solicitations by internal office memoranda and email. In one such inter-office memorandum dated May 17, 2002, and entitled "Suggested Campaign Contributions," Lawrence tied the solicitation to the pending Energy Bill and its impact on Westar's financial restructuring plan. The memorandum had three attachments: the first attachment showed the total amount of Westar contributions as outlined by Bornemann and each executive's pro rata "suggested" share; the second attachment outlined the "first round" of contributions and listed the recipient committees and the amount each executive should contribute; the third attachment spelled out to whom each executive should write a check (or checks) and the specific amount. Lawrence asked the executives to "Please forward your personal check as soon as possible to my attention." Lawrence sent similar solicitations in July and late-October/early November 2002.

In response to these solicitations, each executive made the requested contributions, though some gave more or less than the requested amount. Chart 1 below sets forth the total amounts requested from and contributed by the executives who participated in the plan. Chart 2 below sets forth the committees that received contributions pursuant to the contribution plan.

After the executives submitted the contribution checks, Lawrence reportedly collected the contributions and sent them as a bundle to the recipient committees. In at least some cases, Lawrence forwarded the contribution checks to Bornemann to be hand-delivered to the candidates at fundraising events. Contributions were delivered to the targeted legislators at varying times through late 2002.

C. The Special Report

In September 2002, the U.S. Attorney's Office in Topeka served subpoenas on Westar seeking information about Westar's business practices.

⁸ In addition, in May 2002, Westar gave a $25,000 contribution to Rep. DeLay's Texans for a Republican Majority.

25044121083

On April 29, 2003, the Special Committee presented the Westar Board of Directors with the results of its investigation in an almost 400-page report (“Special Report”).¹¹

The Special Report describes organized efforts by Lawrence and Lawrence's predecessor, Carl Koupal, between 2000 and 2002 to make contributions to state and federal candidates who were in positions to benefit Westar. Id., at 341-344.

According to the Special Report, "management had a practice of soliciting individual officers for recommended political contributions earmarked for particular candidates." See id., at 342. The Special Committee interviewed many of the executives who were asked to make contributions and reviewed relevant documents, including email communications.

the Special Report noted that "employees indicated in interviews that they could refuse to make contributions to a particular candidate" and "none of the officers we spoke to reported having been told that his or her job would be in jeopardy or that there would be any other form of retribution if he or she did not contribute." Id. In conclusion, the Special Committee recommended that Westar hire election counsel to further analyze the events. Id., at 348-349.

In May 2003, Westar posted the Special Report and the accompanying 246 exhibits on Westar's website. Soon thereafter, news stories and editorials began appearing in the media about the Special Report's revelations; most of the articles focused on the 2002 political contribution activity that seemed directly tied to the Congressional assistance Westar received during negotiations on the Energy Bill.¹³ Consequently, many of the legislators who received Westar contributions faced allegations by public interest groups and other legislators that they were bribed for their votes and should be investigated for ethics violations.¹⁴ Public attention also fell upon Westar's lobbyist, Richard Bornemann, for devising the contribution plan.¹⁵ In an apparent response to the negative public attention, some legislators disgorged their Westar contributions by donating an equivalent dollar amount to charity.¹⁶

Edsall and Juliet Eilperin, Agency Questions Westar Provision; Executives Called Real Beneficiaries, The Wash. Post, June 14, 2003, at A4; Westar Drops Former V.P.-Turned-Lobbyist, Finds Itself in Growing Public Political Scandal, Electric Utility Week, June 16, 2003, at 1.

Edsall, Westar a Saga of Money's Role on Hill; Some Demand Probe as GOP Lawmakers Say No Legislative Deals Were Made, The Wash. Post, June 23, 2003, at A5. For example, Public Citizen filed a complaint with the Department of Justice's Office of Public Integrity and posted the complaint on its website. In a June 2003 document posted on its website, Public Citizen said that it "requests" the FEC to investigate Westar and the legislators' potential breaches of campaign finance laws. Public Citizen never filed a complaint with the Commission.

¹⁶ See, e.g., Thomas B. Edsall, Westar a Saga of Money's Role on Hill; Some Demand Probe as GOP Lawmakers Say No Legislative Deals Were Made, The Wash. Post, June 23, 2003, at A5. Research of FEC disclosure report databases revealed no refunds to Westar executives. Research also revealed that Rep. Burr's Next Century Fund and Team Sununu appear to have disgorged $1,000 Westar contributions to charitable organizations, and Rep. Dennis Moore appears to have disgorged $1,800 out of $2,750 he received from Westar.

FEC disclosure reports disclose a few additional instances of apparent bundled contributions from Westar executives in 2002, where two or more Westar executives made contributions at or around the same time to the same committee.¹⁷

III. LEGAL ANALYSIS

Lawrence, helped select the candidates to whom contributions should be made. Lawrence acted as a conduit or intermediary by collecting earmarked contribution checks from Westar executives and forwarding them as a package to various recipient committees or to Bornemann who then delivered the checks to the recipient committees.

Corporations are prohibited from acting as conduits for contributions earmarked to candidates or their authorized committees. See 11 C.F.R. § 110.6(b)(2)(ii). In addition, the prohibition against corporate contributions embodied in 2 U.S.C. § 441b(a) includes the facilitation of earmarked contributions by a corporation and its officers, directors, or agents. See 11 C.F.R. § 114.2(f)(1). Examples of facilitation include directing subordinates to plan, organize, or carry out a fundraising project as part of their work responsibilities, using corporate resources and providing materials for the purpose of transmitting or delivering contributions, such as stamps, envelopes or other similar items, or using coercion to urge individuals to make contributions. 11 C.F.R. §§ 114.2(f)(2)(ii) and 114.2(f)(2)(iv).

¹⁷ Based on disclosure reports, the following additional seemingly bundled contributions occurred: Jan. 9, 2002, $1,000 from 2 executives to Moran for Kansas; Jan. 10, 2002, $1,200 from 2 executives to Jim Ryun for Congress; Feb. 5, 2002, $1,200 from 2 executives to Tiahrt for Congress; and Feb. 23, 2002, $1,200 from 2 executives to Sam Brownback for U.S. Senate.

Lawrence solicited, collected and bundled the earmarked contributions from Westar executives using corporate resources and at the request and direction of Westar

Thus, Lawrence, acting in his corporate capacity, acted as a conduit and facilitated the making of corporate contributions by forwarding individual earmarked contributions to political committees on behalf of Westar.

IV. CONCLUSION

Accordingly, there is reason to believe that Douglass Lawrence violated 2 U.S.C. § 441b(a) and 11 C.F.R. §§ 110.6(b)(2)(ii) and 114.2(f), as an officer and agent of Westar, by participating in and/or consenting to corporate facilitation and improper conduit activity.
