I. INTRODUCTION

The five Complaints in these matters make a variety of allegations against a number of Respondents with one universal area of overlap: all five Complaints allege that Correct the Record ("CTR") made, and Hillary Clinton's authorized committee, Hillary for America and Elizabeth Jones in her official capacity as treasurer ("HFA"), accepted, impermissible in-kind contributions by coordinating on CTR's activities in support of Clinton. The Complaints allege widespread violations because CTR's very purpose was to fully coordinate its activities with the Clinton campaign, citing a 2015 CTR press release describing itself as a "strategic research and rapid response team designed to defend Hillary Clinton" that "will be allowed to coordinate" with her campaign.⁵ Complainants, with varying degrees of specificity, allege that CTR's expenditures for activities such as opposition research, strategic message development and deployment, surrogate media training and bookings, video production, fundraising, "rapid response" outreach to press, and a social media defense team were in-kind contributions to HFA.

⁵ MUR 6940 Compl. at 2 (describing CTR Press Release, "Correct the Record Launches as a New Pro-Clinton SuperPAC" (May 12, 2015) and attaching that press release as Exhibit A to the Complaint).

1 either directly or in the form of coordinated expenditures because CTR regularly and publicly
2 acknowledged that it could coordinate its activities with HFA and did, in fact, do so.

3 CTR and HFA argue that CTR's expenditures are not in-kind contributions because CTR 4 limited its activities to communications that would not qualify as contributions if coordinated.
5 Specifically, they note that because CTR's communications were distributed on its own websites 6 or on free online platforms such as Twitter, Facebook, and YouTube, CTR's activity does not 7 meet the coordinated communication definition in the Commission's regulations. These 8 Respondents additionally assert that, for a smaller category of CTR's activity comprised of 9 research and tracking materials, HFA paid for the materials and there is no factual basis for 10 determining that HFA paid CTR less than fair market value for HFA's use of that material.

11 The available information indicates that CTR raised and spent approximately $9 million 12 on a wide array of activities, most of which are not fairly characterized as "communications," in 13 furtherance of its stated mission of working in support of Clinton's candidacy in coordination
14 with HFA. As such, these payments for CTR's coordinated activities constitute coordinated 15 expenditures and thus contributions to HFA. On this basis, we recommend that the Commission 16 find reason to believe that CTR and HFA violated the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, 17 as amended (the "Act"), by making and accepting, respectively, in-kind prohibited and excessive 18 contributions and by failing to disclose those contributions.

19 In addition to the allegations regarding CTR, some of the five Complaints make 20 allegations as to other Respondents including: 1) that American Bridge 21st Century 21 ("American Bridge") impermissibly coordinated with HFA;⁶ 2) that Hillary Clinton, David ⁶ See MUR 7160 Compl. at ¶ 23.

1 Brock (CTR's founder and chairman), and other individuals who were officers or employees of 2 CTR or HFA impermissibly coordinated through their personal actions;⁷ 3) that DNC Services 3 Corp./Democratic National Committee ("DNC") impermissibly coordinated with HFA;⁸ and 4 4) that CTR and Priorities USA had impermissible financial backing by foreign nationals.⁹

5 We recommend the Commission dismiss the allegation that American Bridge 6 impermissibly coordinated expenditures, take no action at this time with respect to Hillary 7 Clinton, David Brock, and the other named individual Respondent employees and officers of 8 HFA and CTR, and find no reason to believe that CTR and Priorities USA violated 52 U.S.C.
9 § 30121 by accepting foreign national contributions. We further recommend that the 10 Commission take no action at this time as to the DNC-related coordinated allegations in MURs 11 7160 and 7193, pending resolution of overlapping (and broader) allegations made in MURs 7304
12 and 7331 that the DNC systematically and impermissibly coordinated with HFA.¹⁰

II. FACTUAL AND LEGAL ANALYSIS

A. There is Reason to Believe that CTR Impermissibly Coordinated With HFA

1. Factual Background

On April 13, 2015, Hillary Rodham Clinton filed a Statement of Candidacy with the Commission for the 2016 presidential election, designating HFA as her principal campaign committee.¹¹

Less than a month later, on May 12, 2015, CTR, then a project of American Bridge,¹² issued a press release announcing that it was splitting off from American Bridge and registering with the Commission as “a separate SuperPAC.”¹³ The next day, May 13, 2015, CTR registered as a non-profit corporation in Washington, D.C.; on June 5, 2015, CTR registered with the Commission as a “hybrid” political committee with a “Carey” non-contribution account.¹⁴

In the press release announcing its establishment as a separate committee, CTR president Brad Woodhouse stated that CTR would “work in support of Hillary Clinton’s candidacy for ¹¹ Hillary Rodham Clinton Statement of Candidacy (Apr. 13, 2015).

1 President, aggressively responding to false attacks and misstatements” of her record.¹⁵ CTR 2 described itself in this press releases as “a strategic research and rapid response team designed to 3 defend Hillary Clinton from right-wing baseless attacks.”¹⁶ CTR further stated it would not be 4 engaged in “paid media and thus, will be allowed to coordinate with campaigns and Party 5 Committees.”¹⁷ In another statement to the press days after the press release, a CTR 6 spokesperson asserted that “FEC rules permit some activity – in particular activity on an 7 organization’s website, in email, and on social media – to be legally coordinated with candidates 8 and political parties.”¹⁸

9 CTR raised $9.63 million and spent $9.61 million during the 2016 election cycle.¹⁹ Of 10 that amount, all but $7,131 in receipts and $4,580 in expenditures were deposited into and spent 11 from CTR’s non-contribution account.²⁰ CTR, as a hybrid committee, accepted contributions to 1 its non-contribution account from otherwise impermissible sources²¹ and in amounts that would 2 otherwise be in excess of the Act's contribution limits.²²

3 CTR's and HFA's FEC disclosure reports reflect only two transactions between them,
4 both near the time that CTR split from American Bridge. On May 27, 2015, HFA disbursed
5 $275,615 to CTR for "research, non-contribution account"²³ and on July 17, 2015, HFA 6 disbursed $6,346 to CTR for "research services."²⁴ Although an unnamed HFA official was 7 reported to have stated that HFA would purchase from CTR "any nonpublic information of 8 value" that CTR shared with it, it is not clear that the two reported HFA disbursements to CTR 9 are for that purpose.²⁵

10 CTR's reported disbursements provide information about the scope and manner of CTR's 11 activities. CTR reports 2015-2016 payments for some communication-specific purposes such as 12 "graphic services" and "web hosting" but the bulk of CTR's reported disbursements are for 13 purposes that are not communication-specific, including payroll, salary, travel, lodging, meals, 14 rent, fundraising consulting, computers, digital software, domain services, email services, 15 equipment, event tickets, hardware, insurance, office supplies, parking, and shipping in addition

2 “communication consulting and travel.”²⁶

3 Further, the Complaint in MUR 7146, relying on public reports and CTR’s statements,
4 notes several expenditures CTR made for internet communications, including for the production
5 costs for a YouTube video and for emails to reporters “at the rate of about one every four 6 minutes” during a Trump speech.²⁷ That Complaint also lists several examples of CTR’s
7 expenditures for non-communication activities in support of Clinton’s candidacy during the 2016
8 election cycle, including that CTR:²⁸

- 9 • Employed staff to: (1) conduct “opposition research,” (2) run a “30-person war room”
10 to defend Clinton during hearings before the House Select Committee on Benghazi, 11 including blasting reporters with “46 research-fueled press releases, fact-checks, 12 reports, videos and other multimedia releases during the hearing,” and distributing a 13 140-page opposition research book to a variety of media outlets “that impugns the 14 character of Republicans on the committee,”²⁹ and (3) “develop relationships with 15 Republicans,” “sleuth out confidential information from the Trump campaign,” and 16 distribute that information to reporters;
- 17 • Conducted talking-point tutorials and media-training classes for Clinton surrogates 18 led by an expert specializing in coaching people for television interviews;
- 19 • Employed and deployed “trackers” to travel to states across the country to record the 20 public events of Clinton’s opponents;
- 21 • Employed and deployed “trackers” to travel to states across the country to record the 22 public events of Clinton’s opponents;

²⁷ See, e.g., MUR 7146 Compl. at ¶¶ 5, 35, 90 (noting approximately $300k for video production expenses).

²⁹ According to the MUR 7146 Complaint, the effort later won Correct the Record a gold “Pollie” award from the American Association of Political Consultants for “Most Original/Innovative Collateral Material,” since “the book and rapid-response efforts received extensive earned media coverage [including 30 mentions on TV]” and successfully “shift[ed] the narrative . . . about the politically-fueled investigation.” MUR 7146 Compl. at ¶ 38. That Complaint notes that CTR’s Benghazi activity did not win a Pollie in any of the “dozens” of “Internet/Digital” categories. Id.

- Commissioned a private polling firm to conduct polls that showed Clinton winning a Democratic debate; and
- Paid a consulting firm “to help oversee an aggressive surrogate booking program, connecting regional and national surrogates with radio and television news outlets across the country in support of Hillary Clinton.”³⁰

CTR and its officers’ public statements further explain the manner in which CTR coordinated with HFA while conducting its activities. For example, Brock, in a December 2016 podcast interview with a reporter, discussed how CTR actually had coordinated with HFA.³¹ Brock explained that “the coordinated status was, you’re basically under their thumb but you don’t have to run everything by them.”³² Brock also acknowledged that he would pick up the phone and talk to Clinton campaign manager Robbie Mook and occasionally campaign chairman John Podesta. Brock related, as an example, that when he publicly raised the absence of Bernie Sanders’ medical records without first discussing the issue with HFA, “John [Podesta] tweeted that I should chill out and that we weren’t running a fitness, physical fitness test for presidency or something like that.” Brock added that “I took my lumps and then I obeyed. And so, the out-of-box thinking, that one might have had or the more aggressive things one might have had, basically that ended.” Brock discussed another example of CTR’s apparent deference to HFA on whether to mount a defense of the Clinton Foundation. Brock described a conversation he had with HFA campaign manager Mook in which the two disagreed about CTR’s defense

1 activities; Brock explained that ultimately CTR did not defend the Clinton Foundation because 2 "we are a surrogate arm of the campaign and you need the Campaign on board for this."³³

3 The internal communications of HFA further explain the scope of the coordination
4 between CTR and HFA on some of CTR's activities. An internal HFA memo dated July 25,
5 2015, describes steps for defending Clinton against attacks and includes HFA's expectations
6 concerning CTR's role in these plans.³⁴ The Memo proposes to counter "pay-to-play" attacks 7 against Clinton, including attacks concerning the Clinton Foundation, "through work of CTR and 8 other allies."³⁵ Although the Memo does not specify the manner in which CTR would do this,
9 the Brock interview, discussed above, goes into further details. The Memo also states that HFA 10 will "[w]ork with CTR and DNC to publicize specific GOP candidate vulnerabilities on issues of 11 transparency, ethics, and donor favoritism." Other HFA Memo entries closely correlate with 12 CTR's activities listed above, such as defending Hillary Clinton in the Benghazi hearing by 13 "using outside voices, groups and the campaign to undermine and destroy the credibility of 14 Gowdy's Benghazi investigation before HRC's appearance in October. Tactics can include 15 briefing editors on the facts, calculator on time and money spent, reports from outside groups, 16 opeds and blanketing of TV with surrogates."³⁶

The allegations in the MUR 7160 Complaint are supported exclusively by internal materials released on Wikileaks. The allegations in the MUR 7193 Complaint appear to be based on the same source materials, although the MUR 7193 Complaint sources its information to "emails" or "memos" without further citations.

1 Another internal HFA communication discusses the use of Governor Jennifer Granholm
2 as a surrogate while she is paid by CTR; after discussing that the employment by CTR would 3 preclude HFA from calling Granholm a spokesman or scheduling her, Charlie Baker, identified 4 in the MUR 7160 Complaint as HFA's Chief Administrative Officer, notes: "If she were at 5 Correct the Record we could at least make sure her speaking and media opportunities met our 6 needs/requests."³⁷ Additionally, HFA's Christina Reynolds, on November 3, 2015, emailed an 7 HFA meeting agenda which included a proposed discussion about which "Tactics on attacks"
8 "should go through HRC, surrogates, DNC, CTR."³⁸ Additionally, a January 4, 2016, HFA
9 email proposes a call to "figure out how we're going to rally the troops to defend" an anticipated
10 attack on a Clinton aide and notes: "We will need to engage CTR and Media Matters as well."³⁹
11 The Complaint in MUR 7160 also cites to an internal HFA email in which HFA staffer Karen
12 Finney volunteers to "reach out to David" Brock about responding to an attack against Clinton's 13 husband.⁴⁰

14 Communications between HFA and CTR also provide further explanation of the manner
15 and scope of CTR's coordination with HFA in CTR's activities. For example, CTR fundraiser
16 Mary Pat Bonner, in an attachment labeled "CTR Update" to a December 2015 email to John 17 Podesta, details many of the research, surrogacy, and consulting activities described above in a

2 structure "allows CTR to retain its independence but coordinate directly and strategically with 3 the Hillary campaign."⁴²

4 2. Legal Analysis

5 The Complaints allege that CTR made, and HFA accepted, impermissible in-kind 6 contributions by coordinating activities in support of Clinton's presidential candidacy. Hybrid 7 political committees, like CTR, are prohibited from making contributions, including in-kind 8 contributions, to candidates and their authorized committees from their non-contribution 9 accounts.⁴³

10 Under the Act, the terms "contribution" and "expenditure" include "anything of value" 11 made by any person for the purpose of influencing an election.⁴⁴ The term "anything of value" 12 includes in-kind contributions.⁴⁵ In-kind contributions result when goods or services are 13 provided without charge or at less than the usual and normal charge,⁴⁶ and when a person makes

1 an expenditure in cooperation, consultation or in concert with, or at the request or suggest of a

3 Expenditures for "coordinated communications" are addressed under a three prong test at 4 11 C.F.R. § 109.21 and other coordinated expenditures are addressed under 11 C.F.R.
5 § 109.20(b). The Commission has explained that section 109.20(b) applies to "expenditures that 6 are not made for communications but that are coordinated with a candidate, authorized 7 committee, or political party committee."⁴⁸ Under the three-prong test for coordinated 8 communications, a communication is coordinated and treated as an in-kind contribution when it 9 is paid for by someone other than a candidate, a candidate's authorized committee, a political 10 party committee, or the authorized agents of either (the "payment prong"); satisfies one of five 11 content standards (the "content prong"), and satisfies one of five conduct standards (the "conduct 12 prong").⁴⁹ A communication must satisfy all three prongs to be a "coordinated communication."

13 Any person who is otherwise prohibited from making contributions to candidates under 14 the Act or Commission regulations is prohibited from making an in-kind contribution in the form 15 of paying for a coordinated communication or coordinated expenditure; similarly, in-kind 16 contributions from permissible sources are subject to the Act's contribution limits.⁵⁰

1 The available information shows that CTR systematically coordinated with HFA on its 2 activities. From its first week of existence as a "separate" entity, as evidenced by the press
3 release announcing its establishment, CTR has consistently stated that the entirety of its work
4 would be made for the purpose of benefiting Clinton and in coordination with her campaign.⁵¹
5 Brock publicly explained the "coordinated status" of CTR and described CTR as "a surrogate 6 arm" of HFA.⁵² Moreover, these representations by CTR are not the puffery of an entity acting 7 outside the attention of HFA; communications by and with senior HFA personnel confirm that 8 CTR and HFA had a close relationship and worked together to benefit HFA. Internal memos 9 and emails from both HFA and CTR discuss coordination, generally and with respect to 10 particular activities, between the committees.⁵³ For example, as described above, CTR
11 fundraiser Bonner explained in a communication sent to HFA Chair Podesta that CTR's structure
12 as a SuperPAC "allows CTR to retain its independence but coordinate directly and strategically 13 with the Hillary campaign."⁵⁴ And the record includes several examples of how HFA and CTR 14 coordinated on specific activities. Internal documents, for example, set out HFA's strategy for 15 outside groups to carry out the Benghazi response and public information shows that CTR later

3 The record contains additional information about the extent of CTR and HFA interaction
4 during the course of the coordinated activity in order to ensure that HFA's needs were met. In 5 fact, it appears that part of HFA's strategy in outsourcing certain activities to CTR was to give 6 CTR some level of freedom to accomplish HFA's goals while maintaining communication 7 between CTR and HFA as necessary to ensure CTR's ongoing concert with HFA's needs. For 8 example, an internal HFA email between HFA staff suggests having former Michigan Governor 9 Granholm work with CTR because "[i]f she were at Correct the Record we could at least make 10 sure her speaking and media opportunities met our needs/requests."⁵⁶ Brock's post-election 11 podcast provides several examples of how HFA would "make sure" that CTR activity met 12 HFA's needs. In the podcast, Brock details several interactions with senior HFA personnel, 13 including about CTR's activity regarding attacks on the Clinton Foundation, before concluding 14 that "the coordinated status was, you're basically under their thumb but you don't have to run 15 everything by them."⁵⁷ In that same podcast interview, Brock described an instance where he 16 was "under the thumb" of HFA and chastised by John Podesta for CTR's public comments on

1 Bernie Sander's failure to make his medical records public; according to Brock, CTR "obeyed"
2 Podesta and ended the "more aggressive things one might have had."

3 HFA and CTR urge the Commission to dismiss the alleged violations premised on facts 4 drawn from documents hacked by Russian intelligence services in connection with a broader 5 attack on the 2016 presidential election and published on Wikileaks, which it argues are 6 unreliable.⁵⁸ Strictly speaking, the case law indicates that federal agencies may consider stolen 7 documents in administrative proceedings, so long as the agency was not involved in the 8 underlying criminal act.⁵⁹ Even without the Wikileaks information, however, the record contains 9 ample evidence, in the form of press releases and public interviews with CTR officers, as well as 10 public tweets, as Brock referenced in his podcast interview, to support a coordination 11 determination. In fact, the non-Wikileaks information detailed above shows that CTR existed 12 solely to make expenditures in cooperation, consultation or concert with, or at the request or 13 suggestion of Clinton and HFA and that it conducted its activities, as Brock phrased it, under 14 HFA's thumb.

15 CTR and HFA make a number of arguments as to why none of CTR's over $9 million in 16 expenditures constitute in-kind contributions to HFA. The primary argument is that CTR's

Fed. Trade Comm'n*, 397 F.2d 530, 533 (7th Cir. 1968). HFA further argues that admitting the documents would detract from the FEC's core purpose of ensuring election integrity. MUR 7160 HFA Resp. at 1-3; MUR 7193 HFA Resp. at 2-3. The Ninth Circuit in S. Bay Daily Breeze rejected a similar argument that using stolen documents would undermine the National Labor Relation Board's goal of fostering "industrial peace." *S. The Court of Appeals advised that the Board could achieve the same goal by enforcing the statute against the respondent. Id.; see id. (recognizing that the illegal act is prohibited by other statutes).

1 expenditures are not in-kind contributions because CTR limited its activities to communications 2 that do not meet the "coordinated communication" three-prong test.⁶⁰ The content prong of the 3 "coordinated communication" test at section 109.21(c) limits application of the rule to either 4 "electioneering communications"⁶¹ or "public communications" that satisfy certain other content 5 requirements.⁶² By definition, an "electioneering communication" includes only certain 6 broadcast, cable, or satellite communications,⁶³ which the Complaints do not allege CTR to have 7 made. And, by definition, a "public communication" "shall not include communications over the 8 Internet, except for communications placed for a fee on another person's Web site."⁶⁴ CTR 9 argues that, because none of its expenditures for communications were for electioneering 10 communications or public communications, it cannot have made "coordinated communications."
11 CTR further asserts that costs associated with producing research and materials distributed free 12 online, including, for example, the costs of conducting a poll whose results were posted on 13 CTR's website, are similarly costs of internet activities not fairly within the definition of "public 14 communication."⁶⁵

15 In support of its argument, CTR cites several MURs involving individual or occasional 16 communications from third parties allegedly coordinated with candidate committees, where the 17 Commission found that the communications were not public communications and thus did not ⁶⁰ See, e.g., MUR 7146 CTR Resp. at 1-5; MUR 7146 HFA Resp. at 1-7.

1 satisfy the coordinated communications test.⁶⁶ While CTR and HFA are correct that the scope of 2 the "coordinated communication" rule is limited to those communications enumerated therein, 3 this argument fails to address CTR's non-communication expenditures made in coordination 4 with HFA.

5 Contrary to CTR's argument, available information supports the conclusion that much of 6 CTR's approximately $9 million in disbursements for activity during the 2016 election cycle
7 cannot fairly be described as for "communications," public or otherwise, unless that term covers 8 almost every conceivable political activity.⁶⁷ Take, for example, the costs CTR incurred for 9 placing poll results on its own website, which CTR argues cannot be deemed coordinated. CTR
10 is correct that the costs for the online placement of the poll results on its own website would not 11 be a cost for a "public communication" under 11 C.F.R. § 100.26, but this has no bearing on the 12 conclusion that CTR's payment for the underlying polling, made in coordination with HFA as it
13 appears all CTR activity was, would be a coordinated expenditure under 11 C.F.R. § 109.20(b)
14 and, thus, an in-kind contribution. The fact that the polling results were subsequently transmitted 15 over the internet does not retroactively render the costs of the polling a "communication" cost.⁶⁸

⁶⁶ See MUR 7146 CTR Resp. at 3-4.

Moreover, CTR does not even attempt to explain how other costs it paid, such as the costs for staff to “develop relationships with Republicans” or for “trackers” to travel across the country to Clinton’s opponents’ campaign events, are fairly “communication” costs. CTR reported disbursing over $589,000 for the purpose of “travel” in 2015-2016;⁶⁹ these are not disbursements for “communications” costs.

Analyzing CTR’s payments for its coordinated activity under the “coordinated expenditure” provision, rather than the “coordinated communication” provision is consistent with prior matters. In one matter cited by CTR, the Commission found reason to believe that a party committee made, and a candidate committee received, an excessive contribution in the form of coordinated expenditures relating to a voter canvassing effort, an activity involving a communicative element.⁷⁰ In that matter, the party paid employees to canvass potential voters, arranged for housing for some canvassers, and opened field offices to support volunteers’ canvassing effort, all non-communication expenses serving subsequent communications that were not “public communications.” The Commission’s Factual and Legal Analysis in that matter states that disbursements for activities that are not communications (the party committee also engaged in a telephone bank, which the Commission determined should be treated under the “party coordinated communication” framework) should be treated as coordinated expenditures ⁷⁰ MUR 5564 (Alaska Democratic Party) (later dismissed at the conciliation stage).

1 under 11 C.F.R. § 109.20(b).⁷¹ Following the approach taken in that matter requires concluding 2 that CTR's payments, made in coordination with HFA, for the costs of activities in support of 3 Clinton's election such as the conduct of polls, the payment and training of staff, and the hiring
4 of consultants to support the general activities of the committee, are properly analyzed as in-kind
5 contributions to HFA under the coordinated expenditure provision of 11 C.F.R. § 109.20(b)
6 rather than the coordinated communication provision of 11 C.F.R. § 109.21.

7 CTR also makes a number of arguments with respect to some of its specific programs or 8 activities. First, CTR asserts that its surrogate trainings do not constitute coordinated 9 expenditures and therefore contributions to HFA because CTR trained volunteers but not 10 "official Clinton surrogates (as identified by HFA) or HFA staff."⁷² But the available 11 information indicates that CTR worked closely with HFA in all of its activities, including its 12 surrogacy efforts, regardless of the persons serving as surrogates, and that HFA was well aware 13 of CTR's surrogacy activities and attempted to "make sure" CTR surrogates "met our 14 needs/requests."⁷³ As with the polling costs discussed above, CTR's expenditures for the 15 management of its surrogate program, including costs it incurred for salary to its employees and 16 payments to outside consultants, are not, themselves, expenditures for communications, though

The vote failed 3-1. See MUR 5564 Commission Certification (Nov. 29, 2007). CTR cites the MUR 5564 SOR by Commissioner Lenhard, who opposed the recommendation, see MUR 7146 Resp. at 3 n.19, although two other Commissioners penned an SOR supporting it (SOR by Cmrs Mason and von Spakovsky).

⁷² MUR 7146 CTR Resp. at 5. CTR does not explain a legal basis for this distinction.

⁷³ See MUR 7160 Compl. ¶ 23 (citing WIKILEAKS – THE PODESTA EMAILS, <https://www.wikileaks.org/podesta-emails/fileid/5636> (subject: "Info for Tonight") (go to attachment tab, attachment labeled "CTR Update.docx") for CTR "core function and products" including "more than 300 surrogates"); id. at ¶ 20 (citing WIKILEAKS – THE PODESTA EMAILS, <https://wikileaks.org/podesta-emails/emailid/16024> (subject: "Re:") (regarding Gov. Granholm's surrogacy); MUR 7193 Compl. ¶ 7.

1 some of the surrogates trained in that program may have made subsequent communications that 2 may or may not have been within the definition of "public communication." And, as shown in 3 MUR 5564 (Alaska Democratic Party), discussed above, a party committee's payments, in 4 coordination with a candidate committee, for the costs of volunteers' activities in support of that 5 candidate are in-kind contributions to the candidate committee.⁷⁴

6 Second, CTR argues that its contacts to reporters are not public communications and 7 therefore are not in-kind contributions.⁷⁵ But paying CTR staffers for this activity – activity that 8 HFA appeared to depend on CTR to conduct – is more akin to a non-coordinated in-kind 9 contribution such as paying for personal services rendered to a political committee without 10 charge than to a coordinated mass communication to the general public.⁷⁶ HFA and CTR's
11 insistence that these, and all of CTR's costs, be analyzed only through the lens of the "public 12 communication" definition does not withstand scrutiny. The costs CTR incurred to train and pay 13 staffers to engage in private communications with reporters are not fairly analyzed as the costs of 14 "public communications," a term which the Commission has explained encompasses paid 15 advertising for "mass communication."⁷⁷ Although reporters may report in media that utilizes 16 "mass communication," the public relations efforts of CTR in speaking, behind the scenes, with 17 such reporters is not CTR's own "mass communication."⁷⁸ Indeed, the Commission has, in the ⁷⁴ See also MUR 7035 (Australian Labor Party, et al.) (accepting conciliation agreements for violations of foreign national prohibition resulting from foreign national's payment of costs underlying volunteers' activities, including canvassing and other communications, for presidential campaign committee).

⁷⁵ See CTR MUR 7146 Resp. at 4-5.

⁷⁶ See 52 U.S.C. § 30101(8)(A)(ii) (including payment for personal services in "anything of value").

⁷⁷ See, Internet Communications, 71 Fed. Reg. 18589, 18594 (Apr. 12, 2006) ("2006 Internet E&J").

⁷⁸ Similarly, CTR's assertion that the Act's press exemption applies to its contacts with reporters is equally unavailing. See CTR MUR 7146 Resp. at 4-5. The salary and related costs that CTR paid, in coordination with

1 context of communication-adjacent activity such as campaign events or rallies that are not
2 themselves "mass communications," deemed the provision to a campaign committee of back-end 3 costs such as labor in support of such events or activities to be the provision of an in-kind 4 contribution.⁷⁹

5 At its core, CTR existed for only one purpose – to elect Clinton – and it accomplished its 6 purpose via openly coordinating its efforts with HFA. CTR and HFA would have their purported
7 lack of "public communications" swallow the Act's longstanding prohibition on coordinated 8 expenditures. This position does not withstand scrutiny. CTR's characterization of most of its 9 activity as communications is inconsistent with CTR's known activity, CTR's reported

HFA, for its employees to call reporters are not costs incurred by the media entities employing those reporters, which is the entity that can claim the press exception. See 11 C.F.R. § 100.73.

Additionally, it is advisable that the SSF pay for rooms and equipment in advance to avoid a prohibited contribution from the organization.").

1 disbursements for that activity, and the Commission's approach to coordinated expenditures as 2 in-kind contributions.

3 The scale of the close coordination between CTR, a hybrid committee that accepted 4 corporate funds and contributions from individuals in excess of the Act's contribution limits, and 5 HFA suggests that most of CTR's entire range of activity during 2015-16 represents coordinated 6 expenditures and therefore a contribution to HFA. Accordingly, we recommend that the 7 Commission find reason to believe that Correct the Record made unreported excessive and 8 prohibited in-kind contributions in violation of 52 U.S.C. §§ 30116(a), 30118(a) and 30104(b)
9 and that Hillary for America accepted unreported excessive and prohibited in-kind contributions 10 in violation of 52 U.S.C. §§ 30116(f), 30118(a) and 30104(b).

11 B. The Commission Should Dismiss the Allegation that American Bridge
12 Impermissibly Coordinated With HFA

13 The Complaint in MUR 7160 alleges that American Bridge impermissibly coordinated 14 with HFA in the same manner that CTR and HFA coordinated. In support of this allegation, the 15 Complainant cites a Wikileaks email from fundraiser Bonner to HFA Chair Podesta about a 16 fundraising event that evening, noting which attendees were the "best hits for both Correct the 17 Record and American Bridge on the Presidential."⁸⁰ The Complaint notes that four of the 18 referenced persons gave $725,000 to American Bridge, but does not provide any information 19 about whether Podesta interacted with those persons or solicited funds from them.

20 The facts alleged in the Complaint present indicia of interaction between HFA and 21 American Bridge at the highest levels of those committees but do not present sufficient 22 information from which to conclude that HFA coordinated its activities so that American ⁸⁰ See MUR 7160 Compl. at ¶ 23.

1 Bridge's expenditures should be considered in-kind contributions to HFA. We therefore 2 recommend that the Commission dismiss the allegations regarding the interactions between HFA
3 and American Bridge, as a matter of prosecutorial discretion, pursuant to Heckler v. Chaney, 470
4 U.S. 821 (1985).⁸¹

5 C. There is No Reason to Believe that CTR and Priorities USA Accepted Foreign 6 National Contributions

7 The Complainant in MUR 7097 alleges, citing unnamed "sources in Saudi Arabia," that 8 CTR and Priorities USA appear to "have foreign backing." The Complaint specifically alleges, 9 based on an unidentified Saudi Arabian source of the Complainant, that Talal Bin Abdulaziz, 10 who the Complaint asserts is a minister to the Saudi Royal Family, "has put $30-40 million 11 behind Mrs. Clinton, among others" possibly via charity. Because the information is vague and 12 unsupported, we recommend that the Commission find no reason to believe the allegation that 13 CTR and Priorities USA violated 52 U.S.C. § 30121 by accepting foreign national 14 contributions.⁸²

15 III. PROPOSED INVESTIGATION

16 The proposed investigation would focus on assessing the extent of CTR's contribution to 17 HFA. We request authority to conduct formal discovery, if needed.

⁸¹ See also Statement of Policy Regarding Commission Action in Matters at the Initial Stage in the Enforcement Process, 72 Fed. Reg. 12546 (Mar. 16, 2007)(stating that the Commission will dismiss when the matter does not merit further use of the Commission resources, due to factors such as the vagueness or weakness of the evidence).

7 I. INTRODUCTION

8 The Complaints in these five matters allege that Correct the Record and Elizabeth Cohen 9 as its treasurer ("CTR") made impermissible in-kind contributions to Hillary Clinton's 10 authorized committee, Hillary for America and Elizabeth Jones in her official capacity as 11 treasurer ("HFA") by coordinating on CTR's activities in support of Clinton. The Complaints 12 allege widespread violations because CTR's very purpose was to fully coordinate its activities 13 with the Clinton campaign, citing a 2015 CTR press release describing itself as a "strategic 14 research and rapid response team designed to defend Hillary Clinton" that "will be allowed to 15 coordinate" with her campaign.¹ Complainants, with varying degrees of specificity, allege that 16 CTR's expenditures for activities such as opposition research, strategic message development 17 and deployment, surrogate media training and bookings, video production, fundraising, "rapid 18 response" outreach to press, and a social media defense team were in-kind contributions to HFA
19 either directly or in the form of coordinated expenditures because CTR regularly and publicly 20 acknowledged that it could coordinate its activities with HFA and did, in fact, do so.

21 CTR argues that its expenditures are not in-kind contributions because it limited its 22 activities to communications that would not qualify as contributions if coordinated. Specifically, 23 CTR notes that because its communications were distributed on its own websites or on free

¹ MUR 6940 Compl.at 2 (describing CTR Press Release, "Correct the Record Launches as a New Pro-Clinton SuperPAC" (May 12, 2015) and attaching that press release as Exhibit A to the Complaint).

1 online platforms such as Twitter, Facebook, and YouTube, its activity does not meet the 2 coordinated communication definition in the Commission's regulations. CTR additionally 3 asserts that, for a smaller category of CTR's activity comprised of research and tracking 4 materials, HFA paid for the materials and there is no factual basis for determining that HFA paid 5 CTR less than fair market value for HFA's use of that material.

6 The available information indicates that CTR raised and spent approximately $9 million 7 on a wide array of activities, most of which are not fairly characterized as "communications," in 8 furtherance of its stated mission of working in support of Clinton's candidacy in coordination
9 with HFA. As such, these payments for CTR's coordinated activities constitute coordinated 10 expenditures and thus contributions to HFA. On this basis, the Commission finds reason to 11 believe that CTR violated the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as amended (the "Act"), 12 by making in-kind prohibited and excessive contributions and by failing to disclose those 13 contributions.

14 In addition, the Complaint in MUR 7097 alleges that CTR had impermissible financial 15 backing by foreign nationals.² For the reasons discussed below, the Commission finds no reason 16 to believe that CTR violated 52 U.S.C. § 30121 by accepting foreign national contributions.
17

II. FACTUAL AND LEGAL ANALYSIS

A. There is Reason to Believe that CTR Impermissibly Coordinated With HFA

1. Factual Background

On April 13, 2015, Hillary Rodham Clinton filed a Statement of Candidacy with the Commission for the 2016 presidential election, designating HFA as her principal campaign committee.³

Less than a month later, on May 12, 2015, CTR, then a project of American Bridge,⁴ issued a press release announcing that it was splitting off from American Bridge and registering with the Commission as “a separate SuperPAC.”⁵ The next day, May 13, 2015, CTR registered as a non-profit corporation in Washington, D.C.; on June 5, 2015, CTR registered with the Commission as a “hybrid” political committee with a “Carey” non-contribution account.⁶

In the press release announcing its establishment as a separate committee, CTR president Brad Woodhouse stated that CTR would “work in support of Hillary Clinton’s candidacy for

³ Hillary Rodham Clinton Statement of Candidacy (Apr. 13, 2015).

⁴ Correct the Record was reportedly created in 2013 as a project of American Bridge, which itself was also founded by CTR founder and Chairman Brock, as “a dedicated research and response communications project to prevent Republicans from denigrating potential Democratic candidates from baseless attacks, while potential Republican candidates reinvent themselves and their records without scrutiny.” MUR 7146 Compl. at ¶ 7 (citing Michael Cook, Arkansas Democrats Helping ‘Correct the Record,’ TALK BUSINESS, Nov. 20, 2013); see also Aaron Blake, Top Hillary supporters launch ‘Correct the Record’ Effort, WASHINGTON POST (Nov. 1, 2013).

⁶ Statement of Organization, Correct the Record (June 5, 2015). The Commission issued guidance on the formation and operation of hybrid political committees following its agreement to a stipulated order and consent judgment in Carey v. FEC, Civ. No. 11-259-RMC (D.D.C. 2011), in which a non-connected committee sought to solicit and accept unlimited contributions in a separate bank account to make independent expenditures. See Press Release, FEC Statement on Carey v. FEC, Reporting Guidance for Political Committees that Maintain a Non-Contribution Account (Oct. 5, 2011), available at <http://www.fec.gov/press/press2011/201111006postcarey.shtml> (“Carey Press Release”).

1 President, aggressively responding to false attacks and misstatements” of her record.⁷ CTR 2 described itself in this press releases as “a strategic research and rapid response team designed to 3 defend Hillary Clinton from right-wing baseless attacks.”⁸ CTR further stated it would not be 4 engaged in “paid media and thus, will be allowed to coordinate with campaigns and Party 5 Committees.”⁹ In another statement to the press days after the press release, a CTR 6 spokesperson asserted that “FEC rules permit some activity – in particular activity on an 7 organization’s website, in email, and on social media – to be legally coordinated with candidates 8 and political parties.”¹⁰

9 CTR raised $9.63 million and spent $9.61 million during the 2016 election cycle.¹¹ Of 10 that amount, all but $7,131 in receipts and $4,580 in expenditures were deposited into and spent 11 from CTR’s non-contribution account.¹² CTR, as a hybrid committee, accepted contributions to

2 otherwise be in excess of the Act's contribution limits.¹⁴

3 CTR's and HFA's FEC disclosure reports reflect only two transactions between them,
4 both near the time that CTR split from American Bridge. On May 27, 2015, HFA disbursed
5 $275,615 to CTR for "research, non-contribution account"¹⁵ and on July 17, 2015, HFA 6 disbursed $6,346 to CTR for "research services."¹⁶ Although an unnamed HFA official was 7 reported to have stated that HFA would purchase from CTR "any nonpublic information of 8 value" that CTR shared with it, it is not clear that the two reported HFA disbursements to CTR 9 are for that purpose.¹⁷

10 CTR's reported disbursements provide information about the scope and manner of CTR's 11 activities. CTR reports 2015-2016 payments for some communication-specific purposes such as 12 "graphic services" and "web hosting" but the bulk of CTR's reported disbursements are for 13 purposes that are not communication-specific, including payroll, salary, travel, lodging, meals, 14 rent, fundraising consulting, computers, digital software, domain services, email services, 15 equipment, event tickets, hardware, insurance, office supplies, parking, and shipping in addition

2 “communication consulting and travel.”¹⁸

3 Further, the Complaint in MUR 7146, relying on public reports and CTR’s statements,
4 notes several expenditures CTR made for internet communications, including for the production
5 costs for a YouTube video and for emails to reporters “at the rate of about one every four 6 minutes” during a Trump speech.¹⁹ That Complaint also lists several examples of CTR’s
7 expenditures for non-communication activities in support of Clinton’s candidacy during the 2016
8 election cycle, including that CTR:²⁰

- 9 • Employed staff to: (1) conduct “opposition research,” (2) run a “30-person war room”
10 to defend Clinton during hearings before the House Select Committee on Benghazi, 11 including blasting reporters with “46 research-fueled press releases, fact-checks, 12 reports, videos and other multimedia releases during the hearing,” and distributing a 13 140-page opposition research book to a variety of media outlets “that impugns the 14 character of Republicans on the committee,”²¹ and (3) “develop relationships with 15 Republicans,” “sleuth out confidential information from the Trump campaign,” and 16 distribute that information to reporters;
17
18 • Conducted talking-point tutorials and media-training classes for Clinton surrogates 19 led by an expert specializing in coaching people for television interviews; 20 21 • Employed and deployed “trackers” to travel to states across the country to record the 22 public events of Clinton’s opponents;

²⁰ CTR did not, in its Response, deny or rebut the description or scope of its activities on behalf of HFA as set forth in the MUR 7146 Complaint.

²¹ According to the MUR 7146 Complaint, the effort later won Correct the Record a gold “Pollie” award from the American Association of Political Consultants for “Most Original/Innovative Collateral Material,” since “the book and rapid-response efforts received extensive earned media coverage [including 30 mentions on TV]” and successfully “shift[ed] the narrative . . . about the politically-fueled investigation.” MUR 7146 Compl. at ¶ 38. That Complaint notes that CTR’s Benghazi activity did not win a Pollie in any of the “dozens” of “Internet/Digital” categories. Id.

- 1 • Commissioned a private polling firm to conduct polls that showed Clinton winning a 2 Democratic debate; and
- 3
- 4 • Paid a consulting firm “to help oversee an aggressive surrogate booking program, 5 connecting regional and national surrogates with radio and television news outlets 6 across the country in support of Hillary Clinton.”²²
- 7

8 CTR and its officers’ public statements further explain the manner in which CTR

9 coordinated with HFA while conducting its activities. For example, CFR founder and chairman

10 David Brock, in a December 2016 podcast interview with a reporter, discussed how CTR

11 actually had coordinated with HFA.²³ Brock explained that “the coordinated status was, you’re 12 basically under their thumb but you don’t have to run everything by them.”²⁴ Brock also 13 acknowledged that he would pick up the phone and talk to Clinton campaign manager Robbie

14 Mook and occasionally campaign chairman John Podesta. Brock related, as an example, that 15 when he publicly raised the absence of Bernie Sanders’ medical records without first discussing

16 the issue with HFA, “John [Podesta] tweeted that I should chill out and that we weren’t running a

17 fitness, physical fitness test for presidency or something like that.” Brock added that “I took my 18 lumps and then I obeyed. And so, the out-of-box thinking, that one might have had or the more

19 aggressive things one might have had, basically that ended.” Brock discussed another example 20 of CTR’s apparent deference to HFA on whether to mount a defense of the Clinton Foundation.

21 Brock described a conversation he had with HFA campaign manager Mook in which the two

22 disagreed about CTR’s defense activities; Brock explained that ultimately CTR did not defend

1 the Clinton Foundation because “we are a surrogate arm of the campaign and you need the 2 Campaign on board for this.”²⁵

3 The internal communications of HFA further explain the scope of the coordination
4 between CTR and HFA on some of CTR’s activities. An internal HFA memo dated July 25,
5 2015, describes steps for defending Clinton against attacks and includes HFA’s expectations
6 concerning CTR’s role in these plans.²⁶ The Memo proposes to counter “pay-to-play” attacks 7 against Clinton, including attacks concerning the Clinton Foundation, “through work of CTR and 8 other allies.”²⁷ Although the Memo does not specify the manner in which CTR would do this,
9 the Brock interview, discussed above, goes into further details. The Memo also states that HFA
10 will “[w]ork with CTR and DNC to publicize specific GOP candidate vulnerabilities on issues of 11 transparency, ethics, and donor favoritism.” Other HFA Memo entries closely correlate with 12 CTR’s activities listed above, such as defending Hillary Clinton in the Benghazi hearing by 13 “using outside voices, groups and the campaign to undermine and destroy the credibility of 14 Gowdy’s Benghazi investigation before HRC’s appearance in October. Tactics can include 15 briefing editors on the facts, calculator on time and money spent, reports from outside groups, 16 opeds and blanketing of TV with surrogates.”²⁸

1 Another internal HFA communication discusses the use of Governor Jennifer Granholm
2 as a surrogate while she is paid by CTR; after discussing that the employment by CTR would
3 preclude HFA from calling Granholm a spokesman or scheduling her, Charlie Baker, identified 4 in the MUR 7160 Complaint as HFA's Chief Administrative Officer, notes: "If she were at 5 Correct the Record we could at least make sure her speaking and media opportunities met our 6 needs/requests."²⁹ Additionally, HFA's Christina Reynolds, on November 3, 2015, emailed an 7 HFA meeting agenda which included a proposed discussion about which "Tactics on attacks"
8 "should go through HRC, surrogates, DNC, CTR."³⁰ Additionally, a January 4, 2016, HFA
9 email proposes a call to "figure out how we're going to rally the troops to defend" an anticipated
10 attack on a Clinton aide and notes: "We will need to engage CTR and Media Matters as well."³¹
11 The Complaint in MUR 7160 also cites to an internal HFA email in which HFA staffer Karen
12 Finney volunteers to "reach out to David" Brock about responding to an attack against Clinton's 13 husband.³²

14 Communications between HFA and CTR also provide further explanation of the manner
15 and scope of CTR's coordination with HFA in CTR's activities. For example, CTR fundraiser
16 Mary Pat Bonner, in an attachment labeled "CTR Update" to a December 2015 email to John 17 Podesta, details many of the research, surrogacy, and consulting activities described above in a list of CTR's "CORE FUNCTIONS AND PRODUCTS."³³ The CTR Update explains that its structure "allows CTR to retain its independence but coordinate directly and strategically with the Hillary campaign."³⁴

2. Legal Analysis

The Complaints allege that HFA accepted, impermissible in-kind contributions by coordinating activities in support of Clinton's presidential candidacy. Hybrid political committees, like CTR, are prohibited from making contributions, including in-kind contributions, to candidates and their authorized committees from their non-contribution accounts.³⁵

Under the Act, the terms "contribution" and "expenditure" include "anything of value" made by any person for the purpose of influencing an election.³⁶ The term "anything of value" includes in-kind contributions.³⁷ In-kind contributions result when goods or services are provided without charge or at less than the usual and normal charge,³⁸ and when a person makes

1 an expenditure in cooperation, consultation or in concert with, or at the request or suggest of a 2 candidate or the candidate's authorized committee or their agents.³⁹

3 Expenditures for "coordinated communications" are addressed under a three prong test at 4 11 C.F.R. § 109.21 and other coordinated expenditures are addressed under 11 C.F.R.
5 § 109.20(b). The Commission has explained that section 109.20(b) applies to "expenditures that 6 are not made for communications but that are coordinated with a candidate, authorized 7 committee, or political party committee."⁴⁰ Under the three-prong test for coordinated 8 communications, a communication is coordinated and treated as an in-kind contribution when it 9 is paid for by someone other than a candidate, a candidate's authorized committee, a political 10 party committee, or the authorized agents of either (the "payment prong"); satisfies one of five 11 content standards (the "content prong"), and satisfies one of five conduct standards (the "conduct 12 prong").⁴¹ A communication must satisfy all three prongs to be a "coordinated communication."

13 Any person who is otherwise prohibited from making contributions to candidates under 14 the Act or Commission regulations is prohibited from making an in-kind contribution in the form 15 of paying for a coordinated communication or coordinated expenditure; similarly, in-kind 16 contributions from permissible sources are subject to the Act's contribution limits.⁴²

1 The available information shows that CTR systematically coordinated with HFA on its 2 activities. From its first week of existence as a “separate” entity, as evidenced by the press
3 release announcing its establishment, CTR has consistently stated that the entirety of its work
4 would be made for the purpose of benefiting Clinton and in coordination with her campaign.⁴³
5 Brock publicly explained the “coordinated status” of CTR and described CTR as “a surrogate 6 arm” of HFA.⁴⁴ Moreover, these representations by CTR are not the puffery of an entity acting 7 outside the attention of HFA; communications by and with senior HFA personnel confirm that 8 CTR and HFA had a close relationship and worked together to benefit HFA. Internal memos
9 and emails from both HFA and CTR discuss coordination, generally and with respect to 10 particular activities, between the committees.⁴⁵ For example, as described above, CTR
11 fundraiser Bonner explained in a communication sent to HFA Chair Podesta that CTR’s structure
12 as a SuperPAC “allows CTR to retain its independence but coordinate directly and strategically 13 with the Hillary campaign.”⁴⁶ And the record includes several examples of how HFA and CTR 14 coordinated on specific activities. Internal documents, for example, set out HFA’s strategy for 15 outside groups to carry out the Benghazi response and public information shows that CTR later

1 conducted its Benghazi-related activity in exactly that manner, even winning an industry award 2 for its efforts.⁴⁷

3 The record contains additional information about the extent of CTR and HFA interaction
4 during the course of the coordinated activity in order to ensure that HFA's needs were met. In 5 fact, it appears that part of HFA's strategy in outsourcing certain activities to CTR was to give 6 CTR some level of freedom to accomplish HFA's goals while maintaining communication 7 between CTR and HFA as necessary to ensure CTR's ongoing concert with HFA's needs. For 8 example, an internal HFA email between HFA staff suggests having former Michigan Governor 9 Granholm work with CTR because "[i]f she were at Correct the Record we could at least make 10 sure her speaking and media opportunities met our needs/requests."⁴⁸ Brock's post-election
11 podcast provides several examples of how HFA would "make sure" that CTR activity met 12 HFA's needs. In the podcast, Brock details several interactions with senior HFA personnel, 13 including about CTR's activity regarding attacks on the Clinton Foundation, before concluding 14 that "the coordinated status was, you're basically under their thumb but you don't have to run 15 everything by them."⁴⁹ In that same podcast interview, Brock described an instance where he 16 was "under the thumb" of HFA and chastised by John Podesta for CTR's public comments on

1 Bernie Sander's failure to make his medical records public; according to Brock, CTR "obeyed"
2 Podesta and ended the "more aggressive things one might have had."

3 CTR urges the Commission to dismiss the alleged violations premised on facts drawn 4 from documents hacked by Russian intelligence services in connection with a broader attack on 5 the 2016 presidential election and published on Wikileaks, which it argues are unreliable.⁵⁰ 6 Strictly speaking, the case law indicates that federal agencies may consider stolen documents in 7 administrative proceedings, so long as the agency was not involved in the underlying criminal 8 act.⁵¹ Even without the Wikileaks information, however, the record contains ample evidence, in 9 the form of press releases and public interviews with CTR officers, as well as public tweets, as 10 Brock referenced in his podcast interview, to support a coordination determination. In fact, the 11 non-Wikileaks information detailed above shows that CTR existed solely to make expenditures 12 in cooperation, consultation or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of Clinton and HFA 13 and that it conducted its activities, as Brock phrased it, under HFA's thumb.

14 CTR makes a number of arguments as to why none of its over $9 million in expenditures 15 constitute in-kind contributions to HFA. The primary argument is that CTR's expenditures are 16 not in-kind contributions because CTR limited its activities to communications that do not meet

1 the "coordinated communication" three-prong test.⁵² The content prong of the "coordinated 2 communication" test at section 109.21(c) limits application of the rule to either "electioneering 3 communications"⁵³ or "public communications" that satisfy certain other content requirements.⁵⁴ 4 By definition, an "electioneering communication" includes only certain broadcast, cable, or 5 satellite communications,⁵⁵ which the Complaints do not allege CTR to have made. And, by 6 definition, a "public communication" "shall not include communications over the Internet, 7 except for communications placed for a fee on another person's Web site."⁵⁶ CTR argues that, 8 because none of its expenditures for communications were for electioneering communications or 9 public communications, it cannot have made "coordinated communications." CTR further 10 asserts that costs associated with producing research and materials distributed free online, 11 including, for example, the costs of conducting a poll whose results were posted on CTR's 12 website, are similarly costs of internet activities not fairly within the definition of "public 13 communication."⁵⁷

14 In support of its argument, CTR cites several MURs involving individual or occasional 15 communications from third parties allegedly coordinated with candidate committees, where the 16 Commission found that the communications were not public communications and thus did not

1 satisfy the coordinated communications test.⁵⁸ While CTR is correct that the scope of the 2 “coordinated communication” rule is limited to those communications enumerated therein, this 3 argument fails to address CTR’s non-communication expenditures made in coordination with 4 HFA.

5 Contrary to CTR’s argument, available information supports the conclusion that much of 6 CTR’s approximately $9 million in disbursements for activity during the 2016 election cycle
7 cannot fairly be described as for “communications,” public or otherwise, unless that term covers 8 almost every conceivable political activity.⁵⁹ Take, for example, the costs CTR incurred for 9 placing poll results on its own website, which CTR argues cannot be deemed coordinated. CTR
10 is correct that the costs for the online placement of the poll results on its own website would not 11 be a cost for a “public communication” under 11 C.F.R. § 100.26, but this has no bearing on the 12 conclusion that CTR’s payment for the underlying polling, made in coordination with HFA as it
13 appears all CTR activity was, would be a coordinated expenditure under 11 C.F.R. § 109.20(b)
14 and, thus, an in-kind contribution. The fact that the polling results were subsequently transmitted 15 over the internet does not retroactively render the costs of the polling a “communication” cost.⁶⁰

⁵⁸ See MUR 7146 CTR Resp. at 3-4.

⁵⁹ See 2015-2016 Disbursements, Correct the Record, available at https://www.fec.gov/data/disbursements/?two_year_transaction_period=2016&data_type=processed&committee_id=C00578997&min_date=01%2F01%2F2015&max_date=12%2F31%2F2016. CTR addresses the small subset of CTR “research” activity for which HFA reported paying CTR. See MUR 7146 CTR Resp. at 5-6. As noted above, HFA disclosed payments to CTR of $275,615.43 and $6,346 for “research,” and CTR notes that no Complaint alleges that this does not reflect fair market value payment for those services.

⁶⁰ See, e.g., 11 C.F.R. § 106.4(b) (describing circumstances in which non-connected committee’s purchase of poll results to make expenditures and candidate committee’s subsequent acceptance of poll results is in-kind contribution to that candidate committee); Advisory Opinion 2011-14 (Utah Bankers) at 4 n.3 (noting that coordinated expenditures are “in-kind contributions to the candidates with whom they are coordinated” under 11 C.F.R. § 109.20(b)); Campaign Guide for Nonconnected Committees at 25, available at <https://www.fec.gov/resources/cms-content/documents/nongui.pdf> (“a committee makes an in-kind contribution when it: Pays for consulting, polling or printing services provided to a candidate committee.”).

1 Moreover, CTR does not even attempt to explain how other costs it paid, such as the costs for 2 staff to “develop relationships with Republicans” or for “trackers” to travel across the country to 3 Clinton’s opponents’ campaign events, are fairly “communication” costs. CTR reported 4 disbursing over $589,000 for the purpose of “travel” in 2015-2016;⁶¹ these are not disbursements 5 for “communications” costs.

6 Analyzing CTR’s payments for its coordinated activity under the “coordinated 7 expenditure” provision, rather than the “coordinated communication” provision is consistent 8 with prior matters. In one matter cited by CTR, the Commission found reason to believe that a 9 party committee made, and a candidate committee received, an excessive contribution in the 10 form of coordinated expenditures relating to a voter canvassing effort, an activity involving a 11 communicative element.⁶² In that matter, the party paid employees to canvass potential voters, 12 arranged for housing for some canvassers, and opened field offices to support volunteers’ 13 canvassing effort, all non-communication expenses serving subsequent communications that 14 were not “public communications.” The Commission’s Factual and Legal Analysis in that 15 matter states that disbursements for activities that are not communications (the party committee 16 also engaged in a telephone bank, which the Commission determined should be treated under the 17 “party coordinated communication” framework) should be treated as coordinated expenditures 18 under 11 C.F.R. § 109.20(b).⁶³ Following the approach taken in that matter requires concluding

⁶³ MUR 5564 FLA for Tony Knowles for U.S. Senate at 12; see also 11 C.F.R. § 109.37 (describing party coordinated communications). After an investigation in MUR 5564, the Commission failed to garner four votes to enter into pre-probable cause conciliation with Respondents. See MUR 5564 GCR #2. See MUR 5564 Commission Certification (Nov. 29, 2007). CTR cites the MUR 5564 SOR by Commissioner Lenhard, who opposed the

1 that CTR's payments, made in coordination with HFA, for the costs of activities in support of 2 Clinton's election such as the conduct of polls, the payment and training of staff, and the hiring
3 of consultants to support the general activities of the committee, are properly analyzed as in-kind
4 contributions to HFA under the coordinated expenditure provision of 11 C.F.R. § 109.20(b)
5 rather than the coordinated communication provision of 11 C.F.R. § 109.21.

6 CTR also makes a number of arguments with respect to some of its specific programs or 7 activities. First, CTR asserts that its surrogate trainings do not constitute coordinated 8 expenditures and therefore contributions to HFA because CTR trained volunteers but not 9 "official Clinton surrogates (as identified by HFA) or HFA staff."⁶⁴ But the available 10 information indicates that CTR worked closely with HFA in all of its activities, including its 11 surrogacy efforts, regardless of the persons serving as surrogates, and that HFA was well aware 12 of CTR's surrogacy activities and attempted to "make sure" CTR surrogates "met our 13 needs/requests."⁶⁵ As with the polling costs discussed above, CTR's expenditures for the 14 management of its surrogate program, including costs it incurred for salary to its employees and 15 payments to outside consultants, are not, themselves, expenditures for communications, though 16 some of the surrogates trained in that program may have made subsequent communications that 17 may or may not have been within the definition of "public communication." And, as shown in recommendation, see MUR 7146 Resp. at 3 n.19, although two other Commissioners penned an SOR supporting it (SOR by Cmrs Mason and von Spakovsky).

⁶⁴ MUR 7146 CTR Resp. at 5. CTR does not explain a legal basis for this distinction.

1 MUR 5564 (Alaska Democratic Party), discussed above, a party committee's payments, in 2 coordination with a candidate committee, for the costs of volunteers' activities in support of that 3 candidate are in-kind contributions to the candidate committee.⁶⁶

4 Second, CTR argues that its contacts to reporters are not public communications and 5 therefore are not in-kind contributions.⁶⁷ But paying CTR staffers for this activity – activity that 6 HFA appeared to depend on CTR to conduct – is more akin to a non-coordinated in-kind 7 contribution such as paying for personal services rendered to a political committee without 8 charge than to a coordinated mass communication to the general public.⁶⁸ HFA and CTR's
9 insistence that these, and all of CTR's costs, be analyzed only through the lens of the "public
10 communication" definition does not withstand scrutiny. The costs CTR incurred to train and pay 11 staffers to engage in private communications with reporters are not fairly analyzed as the costs of 12 "public communications," a term which the Commission has explained encompasses paid
13 advertising for "mass communication."⁶⁹ Although reporters may report in media that utilizes 14 "mass communication," the public relations efforts of CTR in speaking, behind the scenes, with 15 such reporters is not CTR's own "mass communication."⁷⁰ Indeed, the Commission has, in the ⁶⁹ See, Internet Communications, 71 Fed. Reg. 18589, 18594 (Apr. 12, 2006) ("2006 Internet E&J").

⁷⁰ Similarly, CTR's assertion that the Act's press exemption applies to its contacts with reporters is equally unavailing. See CTR MUR 7146 Resp. at 4-5. The salary and related costs that CTR paid, in coordination with HFA, for its employees to call reporters are not costs incurred by the media entities employing those reporters, which is the entity that can claim the press exception. See 11 C.F.R. § 100.73.

1 context of communication-adjacent activity such as campaign events or rallies that are not
2 themselves "mass communications," deemed the provision to a campaign committee of back-end
3 costs such as labor in support of such events or activities to be the provision of an in-kind 4 contribution.⁷¹

5 At its core, CTR existed for only one purpose – to elect Clinton – and it accomplished its 6 purpose via openly coordinating its efforts with HFA. CTR and HFA would have their purported
7 lack of "public communications" swallow the Act's longstanding prohibition on coordinated 8 expenditures. This position does not withstand scrutiny. CTR's characterization of most of its 9 activity as communications is inconsistent with CTR's known activity, CTR's reported 10 disbursements for that activity, and the Commission's approach to coordinated expenditures as 11 in-kind contributions.

⁷¹ See MUR 6858 FLA for Malone PAC-Delegate at 2, 4 (finding RTB committee had accepted in-kind contribution in the form of unpaid prison labor to set up event with tent and banner); see also First Gen. Additionally, it is advisable that the SSF pay for rooms and equipment in advance to avoid a prohibited contribution from the organization.").

1 The scale of the close coordination between CTR, a hybrid committee that accepted
2 corporate funds and contributions from individuals in excess of the Act's contribution limits, and 3 HFA suggests that most of CTR's entire range of activity during 2015-16 represents coordinated 4 expenditures and therefore a contribution to HFA. Accordingly, the Commission finds reason to 5 believe that Correct the Record made unreported excessive and prohibited in-kind contributions 6 to Hillary for America in violation of 52 U.S.C. §§ 30116(a), 30118(a) and 30104(b).

9 The Complainant in MUR 7097 alleges in part, citing unnamed "sources in Saudi 10 Arabia," that CTR appears to "have foreign backing." The Complaint specifically alleges, based 11 on an unidentified Saudi Arabian source of the Complainant, that Talal Bin Abdulaziz, who the 12 Complaint asserts is a minister to the Saudi Royal Family, "has put $30-40 million behind Mrs.
13 Clinton, among others" possibly via charity. Because the information is vague and unsupported, 14 the Commission finds no reason to believe the allegation that CTR violated 52 U.S.C. § 30121 15 by accepting foreign national contributions.⁷²

⁷² See Statement of Policy Regarding Commission Action in Matters at the Initial Stage in the Enforcement Process, 72 Fed. Reg. 12546 (Mar. 16, 2007) (stating that the Commission will find no reason to believe when complaint alleges a violation but is either not credible or is so vague that an investigation would be effectively impossible).

FEDERAL ELECTION COMMISSION

FACTUAL AND LEGAL ANALYSIS

RESPONDENTS: Hillary for America and Elizabeth Cohen MURs 6940, 7097, 7146, in her official capacity as treasurer¹ 7160 & 7193

I. INTRODUCTION

16044472132

The Complaints in these five matters allege that Hillary Clinton's authorized committee, Hillary for America and Elizabeth Jones in her official capacity as treasurer ("HFA"), accepted impermissible in-kind contributions by coordinating on activities conducted by Correct the Record and Elizabeth Cohen in her official capacity as treasurer ("CTR"). The Complaints allege widespread violations because CTR's very purpose was to fully coordinate its activities with the Clinton campaign, citing a 2015 CTR press release describing itself as a "strategic research and rapid response and research team designed to defend Hillary Clinton" that "will be allowed to coordinate" with her campaign."² Complainants, with varying degrees of specificity, allege that CTR's expenditures for activities such as opposition research, strategic message development and deployment, surrogate media training and bookings, video production, fundraising, "rapid response" outreach to press, and a social media defense team were in-kind contributions to HFA either directly or in the form of coordinated expenditures because CTR regularly and publicly acknowledged that it could coordinate its activities with HFA and did, in fact, do so.

¹ On May 31, 2018, Hillary for America filed an amended Statement of Organization naming Elizabeth Jones as its treasurer. Jose H. Villarreal was the treasurer when the activities described occurred as to each of the complaints.

² MUR 6940 Compl. at 2 (describing CTR Press Release, "Correct the Record Launches as a New Pro-Clinton SuperPAC" (May 12, 2015) and attaching that press release as Exhibit A to the Complaint).

HFA argues that CTR's expenditures are not in-kind contributions because CTR limited its activities to communications that would not qualify as contributions if coordinated.

Specifically, HFA notes that because CTR's communications were distributed on its own websites or on free online platforms such as Twitter, Facebook, and YouTube, CTR's activity does not meet the coordinated communication definition in the Commission's regulations. HFA additionally asserts that, for a smaller category of CTR's activity comprised of research and tracking materials, HFA paid for the materials and there is no factual basis for determining that HFA paid CTR less than fair market value for HFA's use of that material.

The available information indicates that CTR raised and spent approximately $9 million on a wide array of activities, most of which are not fairly characterized as "communications," in furtherance of its stated mission of working in support of Clinton's candidacy in coordination with HFA. As such, these payments for CTR's coordinated activities constitute coordinated expenditures and thus contributions to HFA.. On this basis, the Commission finds reason to believe that HFA violated the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as amended (the "Act"), by accepting in-kind prohibited and excessive contributions and by failing to disclose those contributions.

II. FACTUAL AND LEGAL ANALYSIS

A. There is Reason to Believe that HFA Impermissibly Coordinated With CTR

1. Factual Background

On April 13, 2015, Hillary Rodham Clinton filed a Statement of Candidacy with the Commission for the 2016 presidential election, designating HFA as her principal campaign committee.³

Less than a month later, on May 12, 2015, CTR, then a project of American Bridge,⁴ issued a press release announcing that it was splitting off from American Bridge and registering with the Commission as “a separate SuperPAC.”⁵ The next day, May 13, 2015, CTR registered as a non-profit corporation in Washington, D.C.; on June 5, 2015, CTR registered with the Commission as a “hybrid” political committee with a “Carey” non-contribution account.⁶

In the press release announcing its establishment as a separate committee, CTR president Brad Woodhouse stated that CTR would “work in support of Hillary Clinton’s candidacy for

⁴ Correct the Record was reportedly created in 2013 as a project of American Bridge, which itself was also founded by CTR founder and Chairman David Brock, as “a dedicated research and response communications project to prevent Republicans from denigrating potential Democratic candidates from baseless attacks, while potential Republican candidates reinvent themselves and their records without scrutiny.” MUR 7146 Compl. at ¶ 7 (citing Michael Cook, Arkansas Democrats Helping ‘Correct the Record,’ TALK BUSINESS, Nov. 20, 2013); see also Aaron Blake, Top Hillary supporters launch ‘Correct the Record’ Effort, WASHINGTON POST (Nov. 1, 2013).

President, aggressively responding to false attacks and misstatements” of her record.⁷ CTR described itself in this press releases as “a strategic research and rapid response team designed to defend Hillary Clinton from right-wing baseless attacks.”⁸ CTR further stated it would not be engaged in “paid media and thus, will be allowed to coordinate with campaigns and Party Committees.”⁹ In another statement to the press days after the press release, a CTR spokesperson asserted that “FEC rules permit some activity – in particular activity on an organization’s website, in email, and on social media – to be legally coordinated with candidates and political parties.”¹⁰

CTR raised $9.63 million and spent $9.61 million during the 2016 election cycle.¹¹ Of that amount, all but $7,131 in receipts and $4,580 in expenditures were deposited into and spent from CTR’s non-contribution account.¹² CTR, as a hybrid committee, accepted contributions to its non-contribution account from otherwise impermissible sources¹³ and in amounts that would otherwise be in excess of the Act's contribution limits.¹⁴

CTR's and HFA's FEC disclosure reports reflect only two transactions between them, both near the time that CTR split from American Bridge. On May 27, 2015, HFA disbursed $275,615 to CTR for "research, non-contribution account"¹⁵ and on July 17, 2015, HFA disbursed $6,346 to CTR for "research services."¹⁶ Although an unnamed HFA official was reported to have stated that HFA would purchase from CTR "any nonpublic information of value" that CTR shared with it, it is not clear that the two reported HFA disbursements to CTR are for that purpose.¹⁷

CTR's reported disbursements provide information about the scope and manner of CTR's activities. CTR reports 2015-2016 payments for some communication-specific purposes such as "graphic services" and "web hosting" but the bulk of CTR's reported disbursements are for purposes that are not communication-specific, including payroll, salary, travel, lodging, meals, rent, fundraising consulting, computers, digital software, domain services, email services, equipment, event tickets, hardware, insurance, office supplies, parking, and shipping in addition to payments for explicitly mixed purposes such as “video consulting and travel” and “communication consulting and travel.”¹⁸

Further, the Complaint in MUR 7146, relying on public reports and CTR’s statements, notes several expenditures CTR made for internet communications, including for the production costs for a YouTube video and for emails to reporters “at the rate of about one every four minutes” during a Trump speech.¹⁹ That Complaint also lists several examples of CTR’s expenditures for non-communication activities in support of Clinton’s candidacy during the 2016 election cycle, including that CTR:

- Employed staff to: (1) conduct “opposition research,” (2) run a “30-person war room” to defend Clinton during hearings before the House Select Committee on Benghazi, including blasting reporters with “46 research-fueled press releases, fact-checks, reports, videos and other multimedia releases during the hearing,” and distributing a 140-page opposition research book to a variety of media outlets “that impugns the character of Republicans on the committee,”²⁰ and (3) “develop relationships with Republicans,” “sleuth out confidential information from the Trump campaign,” and distribute that information to reporters;
- Conducted talking-point tutorials and media-training classes for Clinton surrogates led by an expert specializing in coaching people for television interviews;
- Employed and deployed “trackers” to travel to states across the country to record the public events of Clinton’s opponents;

¹⁹ See, e.g., MUR 7146 Compl. at ¶¶ 5, 35, 90 (noting approximately $300k for video production expenses).

²⁰ According to the MUR 7146 Complaint, the effort later won Correct the Record a gold “Pollie” award from the American Association of Political Consultants for “Most Original/Innovative Collateral Material,” since “the book and rapid-response efforts received extensive earned media coverage [including 30 mentions on TV]” and successfully “shift[ed] the narrative . . . about the politically-fueled investigation.” MUR 7146 Compl. at ¶ 38. That Complaint notes that CTR’s Benghazi activity did not win a Pollie in any of the “dozens” of “Internet/Digital” categories. Id.

- Commissioned a private polling firm to conduct polls that showed Clinton winning a Democratic debate; and
- Paid a consulting firm “to help oversee an aggressive surrogate booking program, connecting regional and national surrogates with radio and television news outlets across the country in support of Hillary Clinton.”²¹

CTR and its officers’ public statements further explain the manner in which CTR coordinated with HFA while conducting its activities. For example, CTR founder and chairman David Brock, in a December 2016 podcast interview with a reporter, discussed how CTR actually had coordinated with HFA.²² Brock explained that “the coordinated status was, you’re basically under their thumb but you don’t have to run everything by them.”²³ Brock also acknowledged that he would pick up the phone and talk to Clinton campaign manager Robbie Mook and occasionally campaign chairman John Podesta. Brock related, as an example, that when he publicly raised the absence of Bernie Sanders’ medical records without first discussing the issue with HFA, “John [Podesta] tweeted that I should chill out and that we weren’t running a fitness, physical fitness test for presidency or something like that.” Brock added that “I took my lumps and then I obeyed. And so, the out-of-box thinking, that one might have had or the more aggressive things one might have had, basically that ended.” Brock discussed another example of CTR’s apparent deference to HFA on whether to mount a defense of the Clinton Foundation. Brock described a conversation he had with HFA campaign manager Mook in which the two disagreed about CTR’s defense activities; Brock explained that ultimately CTR did not defend the Clinton Foundation because “we are a surrogate arm of the campaign and you need the Campaign on board for this.”²⁴

The internal communications of HFA further explain the scope of the coordination between CTR and HFA on some of CTR’s activities. An internal HFA memo dated July 25, 2015, describes steps for defending Clinton against attacks and includes HFA’s expectations concerning CTR’s role in these plans.²⁵ The Memo proposes to counter “pay-to-play” attacks against Clinton, including attacks concerning the Clinton Foundation, “through work of CTR and other allies.”²⁶ Although the Memo does not specify the manner in which CTR would do this, the Brock interview, discussed above, goes into further details. The Memo also states that HFA will “[w]ork with CTR and DNC to publicize specific GOP candidate vulnerabilities on issues of transparency, ethics, and donor favoritism.” Other HFA Memo entries closely correlate with CTR’s activities listed above, such as defending Hillary Clinton in the Benghazi hearing by “using outside voices, groups and the campaign to undermine and destroy the credibility of Gowdy’s Benghazi investigation before HRC’s appearance in October. Tactics can include briefing editors on the facts, calculator on time and money spent, reports from outside groups, opeds and blanketing of TV with surrogates.”²⁷

Another internal HFA communication discusses the use of Governor Jennifer Granholm as a surrogate while she is paid by CTR; after discussing that the employment by CTR would preclude HFA from calling Granholm a spokesman or scheduling her, Charlie Baker, identified in the MUR 7160 Complaint as HFA's Chief Administrative Officer, notes: "If she were at Correct the Record we could at least make sure her speaking and media opportunities met our needs/requests."²⁸ Additionally, HFA's Christina Reynolds, on November 3, 2015, emailed an HFA meeting agenda which included a proposed discussion about which "Tactics on attacks" "should go through HRC, surrogates, DNC, CTR."²⁹ Additionally, a January 4, 2016, HFA email proposes a call to "figure out how we're going to rally the troops to defend" an anticipated attack on a Clinton aide and notes: "We will need to engage CTR and Media Matters as well."³⁰ The Complaint in MUR 7160 also cites to an internal HFA email in which HFA staffer Karen Finney volunteers to "reach out to David" Brock about responding to an attack against Clinton's husband.³¹

Communications between HFA and CTR also provide further explanation of the manner and scope of CTR's coordination with HFA in CTR's activities. For example, CTR fundraiser Mary Pat Bonner, in an attachment labeled "CTR Update" to a December 2015 email to John Podesta, details many of the research, surrogacy, and consulting activities described above in a

The Complaints allege that HFA accepted impermissible in-kind contributions by coordinating activities with CTR in support of Clinton's presidential candidacy. Hybrid political committees, like CTR, are prohibited from making contributions, including in-kind contributions, to candidates and their authorized committees from their non-contribution accounts.³⁴

Under the Act, the terms "contribution" and "expenditure" include "anything of value" made by any person for the purpose of influencing an election.³⁵ The term "anything of value" includes in-kind contributions.³⁶ In-kind contributions result when goods or services are provided without charge or at less than the usual and normal charge,³⁷ and when a person makes an expenditure in cooperation, consultation or in concert with, or at the request or suggest of a candidate or the candidate's authorized committee or their agents.³⁸

Expenditures for "coordinated communications" are addressed under a three prong test at 11 C.F.R. § 109.21 and other coordinated expenditures are addressed under 11 C.F.R. § 109.20(b). The Commission has explained that section 109.20(b) applies to "expenditures that are not made for communications but that are coordinated with a candidate, authorized committee, or political party committee."³⁹ Under the three-prong test for coordinated communications, a communication is coordinated and treated as an in-kind contribution when it is paid for by someone other than a candidate, a candidate's authorized committee, a political party committee, or the authorized agents of either (the "payment prong"); satisfies one of five content standards (the "content prong"), and satisfies one of five conduct standards (the "conduct prong").⁴⁰ A communication must satisfy all three prongs to be a "coordinated communication."

Any person who is otherwise prohibited from making contributions to candidates under the Act or Commission regulations is prohibited from making an in-kind contribution in the form of paying for a coordinated communication or coordinated expenditure; similarly, in-kind contributions from permissible sources are subject to the Act's contribution limits.⁴¹

The available information shows that CTR systematically coordinated with HFA on its activities. From its first week of existence as a “separate” entity, as evidenced by the press release announcing its establishment, CTR has consistently stated that the entirety of its work would be made for the purpose of benefiting Clinton and in coordination with her campaign.⁴² Brock publicly explained the “coordinated status” of CTR and described CTR as “a surrogate arm” of HFA.⁴³ Moreover, these representations by CTR are not the puffery of an entity acting outside the attention of HFA; communications by and with senior HFA personnel confirm that CTR and HFA had a close relationship and worked together to benefit HFA. Internal memos and emails from both HFA and CTR discuss coordination, generally and with respect to particular activities, between the committees.⁴⁴ For example, as described above, CTR fundraiser Bonner explained in a communication sent to HFA Chair Podesta that CTR’s structure as a SuperPAC “allows CTR to retain its independence but coordinate directly and strategically with the Hillary campaign.”⁴⁵ And the record includes several examples of how HFA and CTR coordinated on specific activities. Internal documents, for example, set out HFA’s strategy for outside groups to carry out the Benghazi response and public information shows that CTR later

conducted its Benghazi-related activity in exactly that manner, even winning an industry award for its efforts.⁴⁶

The record contains additional information about the extent of CTR and HFA interaction during the course of the coordinated activity in order to ensure that HFA's needs were met. In fact, it appears that part of HFA's strategy in outsourcing certain activities to CTR was to give CTR some level of freedom to accomplish HFA's goals while maintaining communication between CTR and HFA as necessary to ensure CTR's ongoing concert with HFA's needs. For example, an internal HFA email between HFA staff suggests having former Michigan Governor Granholm work with CTR because "[i]f she were at Correct the Record we could at least make sure her speaking and media opportunities met our needs/requests."⁴⁷ Brock's post-election podcast provides several examples of how HFA would "make sure" that CTR activity met HFA's needs. In the podcast, Brock details several interactions with senior HFA personnel, including about CTR's activity regarding attacks on the Clinton Foundation, before concluding that "the coordinated status was, you're basically under their thumb but you don't have to run everything by them."⁴⁸ In that same podcast interview, Brock described an instance where he was "under the thumb" of HFA and chastised by John Podesta for CTR's public comments on

Bernie Sander's failure to make his medical records public; according to Brock, CTR "obeyed" Podesta and ended the "more aggressive things one might have had."

HFA urges the Commission to dismiss the alleged violations premised on facts drawn from documents hacked by Russian intelligence services in connection with a broader attack on the 2016 presidential election and published on Wikileaks, which it argues are unreliable.⁴⁹ Strictly speaking, the case law indicates that federal agencies may consider stolen documents in administrative proceedings, so long as the agency was not involved in the underlying criminal act.⁵⁰ Even without the Wikileaks information, however, the record contains ample evidence, in the form of press releases and public interviews with CTR officers, as well as public tweets, as Brock referenced in his podcast interview, to support a coordination determination. In fact, the non-Wikileaks information detailed above shows that CTR existed solely to make expenditures in cooperation, consultation or concert with, or at the request or suggestion of Clinton and HFA and that it conducted its activities, as Brock phrased it, under HFA's thumb.

HFA makes a number of arguments as to why none of CTR's over $9 million in expenditures constitute in-kind contributions to HFA. The primary argument is that CTR's expenditures are not in-kind contributions because CTR limited its activities to communications that do not meet the “coordinated communication” three-prong test.⁵¹ The content prong of the “coordinated communication” test at section 109.21(c) limits application of the rule to either “electioneering communications”⁵² or “public communications” that satisfy certain other content requirements.⁵³ By definition, an “electioneering communication” includes only certain broadcast, cable, or satellite communications,⁵⁴ which the Complaints do not allege CTR to have made. And, by definition, a “public communication” “shall not include communications over the Internet, except for communications placed for a fee on another person’s Web site.”⁵⁵ HFA argues that, because none of its expenditures for communications were for electioneering communications or public communications, it cannot have made “coordinated communications.”

In support of its argument, HFA cites several MURs involving individual or occasional communications from third parties allegedly coordinated with candidate committees, where the Commission found that the communications were not public communications and thus did not satisfy the coordinated communications test.⁵⁶ While HFA is correct that the scope of the “coordinated communication” rule is limited to those communications enumerated therein, this argument fails to address CTR’s non-communication expenditures made in coordination with HFA.

Contrary to HFA's argument, available information supports the conclusion that much of CTR's approximately $9 million in disbursements for activity during the 2016 election cycle cannot fairly be described as for "communications," public or otherwise, unless that term covers almost every conceivable political activity.⁵⁷ Take for example, the costs CTR incurred for placing poll results on its own website. It is correct that the costs for the online placement of the poll results on its own website would not be a cost for a "public communication" under 11 C.F.R. § 100.26, but this has no bearing on the conclusion that CTR's payment for the underlying polling, made in coordination with HFA as it appears all CTR activity was, would be a coordinated expenditure under 11 C.F.R. § 109.20(b) and, thus, an in-kind contribution. The fact that the polling results were subsequently transmitted over the internet does not retroactively render the costs of the polling a "communication" cost.⁵⁸ Moreover, there is no attempt to explain how other costs CTR paid, such as the costs for staff to "develop relationships with Republicans" or for "trackers" to travel across the country to Clinton's opponents' campaign ⁵⁷ See 2015-2016 Disbursements, Correct the Record, available at https://www.fec.gov/data/disbursements/?two_year_transaction_period=2016&data_type=processed&committee_id=C00578997&min_date=01%2F01%2F2015&max_date=12%2F31%2F2016. HFA addresses the small subset of CTR "research" activity for which HFA reported paying CTR. See MUR 7146 HFA Resp. at 8-9. As noted above, HFA disclosed payments to CTR of $275,615.43 and $6,346 for "research," and HFA note that no Complaint alleges that this does not reflect fair market value payment for those services.

⁵⁸ See, e.g., 11 C.F.R. § 106.4(b) (describing circumstances in which non-connected committee's purchase of poll results to make expenditures and candidate committee's subsequent acceptance of poll results is in-kind contribution to that candidate committee); Advisory Opinion 2011-14 (Utah Bankers) at 4 n.3 (noting that coordinated expenditures are "in-kind contributions to the candidates with whom they are coordinated" under 11 C.F.R. § 109.20(b)); Campaign Guide for Nonconnected Committees at 25, available at <https://www.fec.gov/resources/cms-content/documents/nongui.pdf> ("a committee makes an in-kind contribution when it: Pays for consulting, polling or printing services provided to a candidate committee.").

events, are fairly “communication” costs. CTR reported disbursing over $589,000 for the purpose of “travel” in 2015-2016;⁵⁹ these are not disbursements for “communications” costs.

Analyzing CTR’s payments for its coordinated activity under the “coordinated expenditure” provision, rather than the “coordinated communication” provision is consistent with prior matters. In one matter, the Commission found reason to believe that a party committee made, and a candidate committee received, an excessive contribution in the form of coordinated expenditures relating to a voter canvassing effort, an activity involving a communicative element.⁶⁰ In that matter, the party paid employees to canvass potential voters, arranged for housing for some canvassers, and opened field offices to support volunteers’ canvassing effort, all non-communication expenses serving subsequent communications that were not “public communications.” The Commission’s Factual and Legal Analysis in that matter states that disbursements for activities that are not communications (the party committee also engaged in a telephone bank, which the Commission determined should be treated under the “party coordinated communication” framework) should be treated as coordinated expenditures under 11 C.F.R. § 109.20(b).⁶¹ Following the approach taken in that matter requires concluding that CTR’s payments, made in coordination with HFA, for the costs of activities in support of Clinton’s election such as the conduct of polls, the payment and training of staff, and the hiring of consultants to support the general activities of the committee, are properly analyzed as in-kind contributions to HFA under the coordinated expenditure provision of 11 C.F.R. § 109.20(b) rather than the coordinated communication provision of 11 C.F.R. § 109.21.

HFA's insistence that all of CTR's costs be analyzed only through the lens of the "public communication" definition does not withstand scrutiny. For example, the costs CTR incurred to train and pay staffers to engage in private communications with reporters are not fairly analyzed as the costs of "public communications," a term which the Commission has explained encompasses paid advertising for "mass communication."⁶² Although reporters may report in media that utilizes "mass communication," the public relations efforts of CTR in speaking, behind the scenes, with such reporters is not CTR's own "mass communication."⁶³ Indeed, the Commission has, in the context of communication-adjacent activity such as campaign events or rallies that are not themselves "mass communications," deemed the provision to a campaign committee of back-end costs such as labor in support of such events or activities to be the provision of an in-kind contribution.⁶⁴ ⁶² See, Internet Communications, 71 Fed. Reg. 18589, 18594 (Apr. 12, 2006) ("2006 Internet E&J").

⁶³ Any assertion that the Act's press exemption applies to its contacts with reporters is equally unavailing. The salary and related costs that CTR paid, in coordination with HFA, for its employees to call reporters are not costs incurred by the media entities employing those reporters, which is the entity that can claim the press exception. See 11 C.F.R. § 100.73.

At its core, CTR existed for only one purpose – to elect Clinton – and it accomplished its purpose via openly coordinating its efforts with HFA. CTR and HFA would have their purported lack of “public communications” swallow the Act’s longstanding prohibition on coordinated expenditures. This position does not withstand scrutiny. The characterization of most of CTR’s activity as communications is inconsistent with CTR’s known activity, CTR’s reported disbursements for that activity, and the Commission’s approach to coordinated expenditures as in-kind contributions.

The scale of the close coordination between CTR, a hybrid committee that accepted corporate funds and contributions from individuals in excess of the Act’s contribution limits, and HFA suggests that most of CTR’s entire range of activity during 2015-16 represents coordinated expenditures and therefore a contribution to HFA. Accordingly, the Commission finds reason to believe that Hillary for America accepted unreported excessive and prohibited in-kind contributions in violation of 52 U.S.C. §§ 30116(f), 30118(a) and 30104(b).
