STATEMENT OF REASONS OF VICE CHAIRMAN SEAN J. COOKSEY AND COMMISSIONERS ALLEN J. DICKERSON AND JAMES E. “TREY” TRAINOR, III

The Federal Election Campaign Act (“FECA” or the “Act”) of 1971, as amended, provides that after the Commission finds reason-to-believe (“RTB”) a violation of the Act has occurred, the Commission “shall make an investigation of such alleged violation.”¹ Following the investigation, our Office of General Counsel (“OGC”) must make a recommendation as to whether “there is probable cause to believe that any person has committed...a violation of the Act.”² At that stage, respondents are entitled to file a brief in opposition to OGC’s recommendation and request a hearing.³

That process played out here, and OGC ultimately recommended that we find probable cause that three entities violated the Act’s prohibition on contributions made in the name of another: LZP, LLC; Independence and Freedom Network, Inc. (“IFN”); and Honor and Principles PAC (“Honor PAC”).⁴ We voted against those recommendations, and we write here to explain why we instead invoked the agency’s prosecutorial discretion and dismissed the allegations against IFN and LZP.⁵

² 52 U.S.C. § 30109(a)(4)(A)(i). Just as reason-to-believe is often transmuted into the administrative parlance of “RTB,” probable cause is often referred to as “PC.” E.g. Supp. Statement of Reasons of Vice Chair Dickerson at 3, 4, 8, 9, MUR 7165/7196 (Jesse Benton), Oct. 13, 2021.

I. THE LAW GOVERNING CONTRIBUTIONS IN THE NAME OF ANOTHER

The Act provides that “[n]o person shall make a contribution in the name of another person or knowingly permit his name to be used to effect such a contribution, and no person shall knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.”⁶ The Commission’s regulations further state that “[n]o person shall...[m]ake a contribution in the name of another” and subsequently provides a non-exhaustive pair of relevant examples.⁷

The courts of appeal have imposed their own glosses on the statutory text, typically by affirming that the statute reaches so-called “straw donor” arrangements: where A gives a contribution to B with the intention that B immediately transfer those funds to C, but C, whether unknowingly or corruptly, reports the donation as coming from B, rather than A.⁸

For example, the D.C. Circuit has simply (and unhelpfully) described the name-of-another prohibition as a “provision requiring contributions to be made in the name of the source of the funding.”⁹ But other courts have gone further. The Ninth Circuit, after reviewing “the text, purpose[,] and structure of” the ban, concluded that § 30122 “unambiguously applies to a defendant who solicits others to donate to a candidate for federal office in their own names and either advances the money or promises to—and does—reimburse them for the gifts.”¹⁰ And the Seventh Circuit has similarly determined that the statute reaches conspiracies “in which one solicits another to deliver funds to a campaign, and either advances or promises to reimburse the expenditure.”¹¹

The two examples provided are “[g]iving money or anything of value, all or part of which was provided to the contributor by another person (the true contributor) without disclosing the source of money or the thing of value to the recipient candidate or committee at the time the contribution is made...[and]...[m]aking a contribution of money or anything of value and attributing as the source of the money or thing of value another person when in fact the contributor is the source.” 11 C.F.R. § 110.4(b)(2).

These cases, taken together with the text of our statute and regulations, help illuminate the applicable standard. Accordingly, we conclude that a person makes a contribution in the name of another when he or she knowingly: (1) solicits a person to make a contribution to a federal candidate or political committee in that person’s own name, and (2) either advances the contributed funds or promises to – and does – reimburse the contribution.

II. ALLEGATIONS, INVESTIGATIONS, AND DEFENSES

At the RTB stage, it was alleged that during the 2018 election IFN created LZP as a mechanism to make several contributions totaling $270,000 to Honor and Principles PAC, which were improperly reported as coming from LZP, not IFN.¹² In other words, the Commission was asked to determine whether there was reason to believe that IFN solicited LZP to make a contribution in LZP’s name, and advanced the funds for it to do so.¹³

On May 20, 2021, the Commission unanimously found RTB that IFN and LZP violated the Act’s name-of-another prohibition.¹⁴ We also unanimously found¹⁵ that an unknown source was responsible for seeding the money used by LZP.¹⁶

¹⁶ Id. OGC ultimately did not recommend a PC finding against the unknown person(s). See LZP Gen’l Counsel’s Br. at 20.

The Commission commenced an investigation, which lasted more than 18 months and was conducted both through formal process¹⁷ and “informal” discovery. During this lengthy period, the Commission’s investigation veered well past the initial issue of “Who gave the money to LZP?,” which was the basis of its RTB vote.¹⁸

In particular, having quickly discovered the identity of the source of funds to LZP – Respondent Ohio Works¹⁹ – OGC sought, informally and without Commission approval, information about, inter alia, the financial supporters of Ohio Works. Government agents in turn spoke to some of those persons, despite there being no evidence that those contributors gave to Ohio Works for the purpose of giving money to LZP.²⁰ We should not have done this. It was both unnecessarily invasive and unnecessarily time-consuming,²¹ especially as applied to “two dissolved nonprofit

Throughout this interminable process, IFN and LZP “never disputed that IFN transferred the funds to LZP that were used to make the contributions to Honor and Principles PAC,” and “consistently maintained that, with the guidance of advice from counsel, LZP was created as IFN’s disregarded entity because IFN sought to separate and organize its spending for purposes of simplifying its accounting procedures, and LZP believed, after consulting counsel, that it was required to convey its contribution to Honor PAC in its own name under Ohio corporate law.”²³ In other words, Respondents pled mistake, not malevolence, and they did so by pointing to Commission guidance that, in their view, suggested that a lack of malign intent was dispositive in their favor.²⁴

In addition, we were presented with a brief from the Office of General Counsel that relied, in substantial part, upon assertions of fact based upon unrecorded and unsworn statements allegedly made in informal meetings between witnesses and OGC attorneys.²⁵ Respondents cried foul, challenging – through a sworn affidavit – a number of the factual predicates undergirding OGC’s recommendation.²⁶ The Commission was forced to decide this evidentiary contest, culminating in an agency vote to “[d]etermine that in considering probable cause in MUR 7464, it will not consider factual assertions made in the probable cause brief that are based upon any withheld document or informal investigatory activity, to include any unsworn interview.”²⁷ In a conflict between refreshed recollections and sworn testimony, we could hardly have done otherwise.²⁸

Worse yet, the delays caused by OGC’s investigation imperiled our jurisdiction. FECA sets that clock at five years, and we were graced with sixty days—but no more—of tolling from Respondents. Because the Act requires us to engage in conciliation for thirty days before commencing an enforcement action,²⁹ and because the statutorily-required probable cause briefing did not conclude until March 16, 2023, by the time the Commission was in a position to vote on the PC recommendation, the agency was rapidly running out of runway to prepare a tricky and complicated case for federal court before a majority of the case expired in late May.³⁰

III. THE COMMISSION DECLINED TO FIND PROBABLE CAUSE IN AN EXERCISE OF PROSECUTORIAL DISCRETION.

When faced with a possible violation of the Act, we “must not only assess whether a violation has occurred, but whether agency resources are best spent on this violation or another, whether the agency is likely to succeed if it acts, whether the particular enforcement action requested best fits the agency’s overall policies, and, indeed, whether the agency has enough resources to undertake the action at all.”³¹

When we voted to find RTB against LZP and IFN, we believed that a relatively straightforward investigation would solidify the record, explain the timing of LZP’s

Ms. Hazelwood’s affidavit provides a categorical denial of any improper collusion...If this is so, and we must assume that it is absent credible counterevidence...”).

²⁹ “[I]f the Commission determines, by an affirmative vote of 4 of its members, that there is probable cause to believe...the Commission shall attempt, for a period of at least 30 days, to correct or prevent such violation by informal methods of conference, conciliation, and persuasion, and to enter into a conciliation agreement with any person involved.” 52 U.S.C. § 30109(a)(4)(A)(i).

contribution to Honor and Principles PAC, and identify the source of funds provided to IFN for that transaction.³² But, as this Matter proves, an RTB finding does not guarantee a finding of probable cause. PC is a heightened form of review,³³ and requires the conscious building of a record that is subsequently likely to succeed in federal court should conciliation fail.³⁴

Instead, as noted above, OGC's investigation ballooned in a manner inconsistent with the "delicate nature" of our mission: "the regulation of core constitutionally protected activity."³⁵ This investigation, which went far beyond anticipated bounds and reached well past the legal theory actually approved by the Commission, took almost two years.

At that point, we were faced with Respondents which barely existed on paper and had no resources to speak of, who over five years ago, in reliance on advice of counsel and guidance published on this agency's letterhead,³⁶ chose to route donations through a separate, disregarded entity.³⁷ While we believe that Respondents' reading of the Act is wrong, it was not intentionally so.

(second bracket supplied, citations omitted, emphasis in original).

Worse, due to errors made by the Commission in investigating this Matter, enforcement would have been unusually difficult. Because OGC's recommendations relied upon information directly contradicted by sworn testimony, the Commission was vulnerable to extensive and burdensome discovery were this Matter to proceed to litigation, which would drain our limited resources and risk making bad law (for us and others). And because virtually all of the case had been lost to the statute of limitations by the time we voted, there was little upside to compensate for these risks.

As the Supreme Court has recognized, "an agency decision not to enforce often involves a complicated balancing of a number of factors which are peculiarly within its expertise."³⁸ So it was here.

Having considered the Respondents' lack of malicious intent, their reliance upon the advice of counsel, the press of time as to the statute of limitations, the relatively small amount-in-violation remaining under the statute of limitations, the litigation risk to the agency, and the Respondents' limited resources, we could not justify further pursuit of this Matter.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, we declined to proceed with further enforcement consistent with our prosecutorial discretion.
