I. INTRODUCTION

The Complaint in this matter alleges that Derrick Van Orden, a candidate for Wisconsin’s Third Congressional District, and his principal campaign committee, Van Orden for Congress and Mary Clancy in her official capacity as treasurer (the “Committee”), violated the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as amended (the “Act”), by converting contributions to personal use. Specifically, the Complaint alleges that approximately two months after losing the 2020 general election, Van Orden “appear[ed] to use campaign funds for personal use, including travel to and lodging in Washington, DC at the time of the ‘Save America Rally’ and subsequent storming of the U.S. Capitol on January 6.”

1 Compl. at 1 (July 27, 2021).
Van Orden and the Committee (collectively, “Respondents”) state that the purpose of the travel was to attend a series of meetings regarding Van Orden’s “political future” that were scheduled for January 5 and 7, 2021, and reference “the ongoing nature of [Van Orden’s] Campaign.” Respondents further state that Van Orden was “briefly present near the [Rally]” but “did not actually attend the Rally” and “did not take part in [the] unlawful events” that occurred afterward.

Although we lack definitive information as to the substance of the meetings referenced in the Response, the available information suggests that the majority of the travel expenses paid by the Committee may have been made so that Van Orden could attend meetings regarding his potential future candidacy. While it appears that Van Orden was not conducting campaign-related activity on January 6th, between the days on which the January 5th and 7th meetings were scheduled, we do not believe that this matter warrants the expenditure of the Commission’s limited resources given the likely small amount in violation. Accordingly, we recommend that the Commission exercise its prosecutorial discretion and dismiss the allegations that Van Orden or the Committee violated 52 U.S.C. § 30114(b) by converting contributions to personal use.

II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Derrick Van Orden was a candidate for the Third Congressional District of Wisconsin during the 2020 election cycle, but he was defeated in the 2020 general election. According to its 2020 Year-End Report, the Committee had $12,507.44 in cash on hand at the end of 2020.

On April 8, 2021, Van Orden filed a statement of candidacy to again run for Wisconsin’s Third Congressional District in the 2022 election.

According to the Committee’s 2021 April Quarterly Report, the Committee made three payments totaling $4,022.72 between January 5, 2021 and February 28, 2021, reporting that the purpose was “travel,” “travel reimbursement,” or “travel unitemized.” The report lists reimbursements made to three individuals, including the candidate and two individuals that appear to have been part of his 2020 campaign staff: (1) Van Orden, in the amount of $2,709.66; (2) Jared Carter, in the amount of $1,057.05; and (3) Mary Krueger, in the amount of $256.01. Additionally, the Committee provided itemization for two of the reimbursements, as depicted in the chart below:

9 Id. Neither the Complaint nor Response offer any information as to Jared Carter or Mary Krueger’s relationship to Van Orden or the Committee, nor why their travel was paid for by the campaign. The Response discusses the payments and their purpose collectively. Based on a review of other reports filed by the Committee with the Commission, Krueger and Carter appear to have been paid staffers of the Committee. See FEC Disbursements: Filtered Results, FEC.GOV, https://www.fec.gov/data/disbursements/?data_type=processed&committee_id=C00742007&recipient_name=krueger&two_year_transaction_period=2020 (last visited June 15, 2022) (reflecting nine payroll disbursements by Van Orden for Congress to Mary Krueger in 2020); FEC Disbursements: Filtered Results, FEC.GOV, https://www.fec.gov/data/disbursements/?data_type=processed&committee_id=C00742007&recipient_name=carter&two_year_transaction_period=2020 (last visited June 15, 2022) (reflecting six payroll disbursements by Van Orden for Congress to Jared Carter in 2020). Indeed, based on the Committee’s most recent filings, it appears that Krueger stills work for Van Orden's 2022 campaign. See FEC Disbursements: Filtered Results, FEC.GOV, https://www.fec.gov/data/disbursements/?data_type=processed&committee_id=C00742007&recipient_name=carter&recipient_name=krueger&two_year_transaction_period=2022 (last visited June 15, 2022) (reflecting 22 payroll disbursements to Krueger during the 2022 election cycle).
10 Commission regulations only require itemization of the ultimate payee for reimbursed travel expenses when the total amount reimbursed exceeds $500 and payments to any one vendor used for the expenses total over $200 for the election cycle. 11 C.F.R. § 102.9(b)(2)(ii); Notice of Interpretive Rule Regarding Reporting Ultimate Payees of Political Committee Disbursements, 78 Fed. Reg. 40,625, 40,626 (July 6, 2013). Accordingly, it appears that only a portion of the reimbursements made to Van Orden and Carter required itemization.
The Complaint alleges that these travel expenditures were not for permissible campaign uses but for “personal activity” in connection with “the ‘Save America Rally’ and subsequent storming of the U.S. Capitol on January 6,” which was also the date that the votes of the Electoral College were counted regarding the 2020 presidential election.\(^{11}\) Because Van Orden was not a candidate for federal office at the time of the trip,\(^{12}\) the Complaint alleges that respondents violated the personal use provisions of the Act and Commission regulations. In support of this claim, the Complaint relies on a January 13, 2021 Op-Ed that Van Orden authored, where he states, “I recently traveled to Washington, DC for meetings and to stand for the integrity of our electoral system as a citizen and at the behest of my neighbors here in Western Wisconsin.”\(^{13}\) The Op-Ed identifies Van Order as a “former Republican congressional candidate for Wisconsin’s third district.”14 The Complaint adds that because the “Save America Rally” (the “Rally”) concerned the 2020 presidential general election results, the purpose of Van Orden’s travel in January 2021 would have been personal regardless of whether Van Orden had become a federal candidate.15

The Response denies that the purpose of Van Orden’s trip was personal and instead states he traveled to Washington, DC on January 3rd “for a series of political meetings” scheduled for January 5th and 7th with members of the House Republican Caucus and party staff regarding his “political future.”16 Respondents explain, however, that the meetings scheduled for January 7th were canceled in the wake of the events following the Rally on January 6th, and Van Orden returned home to Wisconsin on January 7th.17 Respondents assert that Van Orden did not actually attend the Rally but arrived late and “remained on the periphery of the event.”18

Given that the meetings that were scheduled for January 5th and 7th were regarding Van Orden’s “political future,” Respondents contend that the travel expenses for the trip were permissible. Respondents state that “the ongoing nature of [Van Orden’s] [c]ampaign at the time of the meetings is just one more fact to justify the necessity and purpose of the trip.”19 While also acknowledging that Van Orden’s travel was “not in connection with any particular election,” Respondents nevertheless assert that the trip constituted “political travel” that would be permitted under the Act as being for “any other lawful purposes.” Respondents argue that regardless of whether Van Orden was a candidate at the time, the Committee was “registered with the Commission, properly functioning, and filing timely reports” and therefore it could “raise and spend funds in accordance with federal law, just as the Campaign did in this instance.” Respondents further claim that even if attending the Rally had been the only purpose of the trip, such a use of campaign funds would nonetheless be permissible because the Rally was “inherently political, akin to any other [p]arty event or committee fundraiser” and the expense would not have existed irrespective of Van Orden’s candidacy.

III. LEGAL ANALYSIS

Under the Act, a contribution accepted by a candidate may be used for, inter alia, “otherwise authorized expenditures in connection with the campaign for Federal office of the candidate.” The Commission has long recognized that “candidates have wide discretion over the use of campaign funds,” but a contribution to a candidate shall not be converted by any person to “personal use.” “Personal use” means any use of funds in a campaign account of a present or former candidate to fulfill a commitment, obligation, or expense of any person that would exist irrespective of the candidate’s campaign or duties as a Federal officeholder. The 22 Id. Respondents do not assert that Van Orden participated in purportedly campaign-related activities on January 6th aside from the Rally. For clarity, the Response elaborates that its references to the Rally refer only “to the Save America Rally on January 6, 2021, and not to the unlawful events that transpired as the Rally dispersed.” Id. at 3 n.1.

Commission evaluates certain expenses, such as travel, meal, and legal expenses, on a case-by-case basis by applying the “irrespective test” to determine whether a personal use violation has occurred.\textsuperscript{27} If a candidate “can reasonably show that the expenses at issue resulted from campaign or officeholder activities, the Commission will not consider the use to be personal use.”\textsuperscript{28}

Here, Van Orden asserts that the purpose of the $4,022.72 in travel expenses was to facilitate his attendance at meetings with Members of Congress and party staff about his “political future” and notes the “ongoing nature of his [c]ampaign.”\textsuperscript{29} Although we are unable to independently verify the substance or purpose of the meetings, Respondents’ assertions about the existence of these meetings appear to be corroborated in part by Van Orden’s reference to “meetings” in his Op-Ed, which was published just days after the trip and more than six months before the date of the Complaint.\textsuperscript{30}

In the context of an Advisory Opinion, the Commission has determined that “the use of excess campaign funds for future Federal and local or state races would not violate the personal use prohibition.”\textsuperscript{31} The Respondents’ use of the vague phrase “political future” to describe the subject of the meetings and statement that the meetings were “not in connection with any particular election” does raise some question as to how these expenses relate to any particular campaign for election. But considering: (1) Respondents’ references to Van Orden’s “ongoing campaign”; (2) that the travel expenses relating to these meetings included travel for two aids from Van Orden’s 2020 campaign; (3) and that Van Orden filed his statement of candidacy to run for Congress in 2022 prior to the end of the reporting period covering these expenses, an inference can be drawn that at least one purpose of these meetings was to discuss Van Orden running for Congress in 2022. Given these facts, there is an insufficient basis to conclude that the travel expenses here would have existed irrespective of Van Orden’s future candidacy.

However, the same purpose reasoning does not appear to apply to Van Orden’s alleged attendance at the Rally on January 6th. Attendance at the Rally, and travel expenses to support such attendance, are also subject to the irrespective test. Contrary to Respondents’ assertion, Van Orden’s mere “presence at a political event” does not mean that such attendance is connected to Van Orden’s candidacy and would not have occurred irrespective of such candidacy.

33 Supra pages 3, 5-6.
34 Cancellation of the January 7th meeting(s) after the travel had commenced does not change the purpose of the payment of those travel expenses.
35 See Resp. at 1-2 (asserting that Van Orden did not actually attend the Rally but arrived late and “remained on the periphery of the event”). But see Van Orden Op-Ed (“I recently traveled to Washington, DC for meetings and to stand for the integrity of our electoral system”).
36 Respondents argue that paying for “such travel, although not in connection with any particular election, was permitted as ‘any other lawful purpose.’” Resp. at 3. But Respondents omit the second half of the provision that, taken together, provide that a contribution may be used by the candidate for “any other lawful purpose unless prohibited by subsection (b),” which in turn sets forth the prohibited use of campaign funds. See 52 U.S.C. § 30114(a)(6), (b).
37 Resp. at 3.
To that end, Respondents’ citations to Advisory Opinions 1996-20 (Lucas) and 1995-47 (Underwood) do not support their broad proposition that the Rally being “inherently political” necessarily makes expenses relating to it not personal use.\(^{38}\) Unlike the present circumstance, both Advisory Opinions involved a sitting official, who was also a candidate, who paid for travel for themselves and either their chief of staff (Advisory Opinion 1996-20) or spouse (Advisory Opinion 1995-47) to presidential conventions using campaign funds.\(^{39}\) In each instance, the Commission recognized not only the political nature of the events attended but that, considering the specific circumstances, the events were directly related to campaign or officeholder duties conducted by the individuals whose travel was paid for with campaign funds.\(^{40}\) Here, Van Orden was not an officeholder and attendance at a political rally organized by like-minded individuals was not directly related to his candidacy. Further, as he indicated in his Op-Ed, Van Orden was visiting Washington, DC as a “citizen” and was only identified as a former candidate.\(^{41}\)

Instead, the Commission has stated that the use of campaign funds to pay for travel expenses merely to attend a political event may be personal use. In Advisory Opinion 1993-06 (Panetta), the Commission distinguished attendance at a political party event honoring the former Congressman or where he was a featured speaker, where travel expenses would be considered a permissible in-kind transfer to the party committee, from instances where the individual merely attended an event; in the latter circumstance, the Commission determined it could be categorized as personal activity and thus the use of campaign funds could be impermissible to facilitate his attendance. Consistent with that guidance, the available information suggests that any expenses relating to Van Orden’s mere attendance at the Rally as a citizen were not related to Van Orden’s campaign activities and could be considered personal use.

Therefore, the travel at issue here may have had both campaign and personal components. Under Commission regulations, if a committee uses campaign funds to pay for travel with a mixed purpose, that is, travel that involves both personal and campaign activities, “the incremental expenses that result from the personal activities are personal use” unless the persons benefiting from the personal use reimburse the committee within 30 days. The Commission provided an example to illustrate how this is applied in the Explanation & Justification that accompanied the regulation. In that example, a candidate traveled to Florida to make a speech in their official capacity and then stayed a week longer for vacation. The Commission explained that it was not considered personal use to pay for the part of the trip that was related to the speech with campaign funds but that “the increase in the total cost of the trip that is attributable to the extra week of vacation,” including meals and hotels, may not be paid for by the campaign absent reimbursement. But, the Commission also explained that “if the vacation and the speech take place in the same location, the Member is not required to reimburse the trip had not been extended.”\textsuperscript{46} In subsequent precedent, the Commission has characterized airfare as a “defined expense.”\textsuperscript{47}

Considering Van Orden’s alleged attendance at the Rally to be personal activity implies that the travel expenses could require the allocation of the incremental expenses resulting from this personal activity.\textsuperscript{48} Although the travel expenses itemized in Van Orden’s reports do not indicate any particular expenses associated with the Rally, the itemized payments by the campaign include flights and a hotel stay, which appears to include the night of the 6th, when Van Orden did not appear to conduct any campaign-related activities.\textsuperscript{49}

Under Commission precedent, even if January 6th was an extra day of the trip involving only personal activity, because the cost of the airfare is a defined expense that would have been incurred regardless of the extra day, the use of campaign funds to pay for the flight does not constitute personal use.\textsuperscript{50} However, there is a question as to whether the hotel costs for the evening of the 6th could be considered an incremental expense because this personal day was in required candidates or office holders to reimburse incremental travel expenses that are personal, (i.e., additional expenses attributable to personal use in a mixed travel context), the Commission historically has considered airfare as a defined expense that is not apportioned as both a personal and campaign expense and thus applied the irrespective test to determine whether personal or campaign funds should be used to pay for the airfare.”); Advisory Opinion 2002-05 at 5 (Hutchinson) (“AO 2002-05”) (“[T]he airfare represents a defined expense that would have the middle of two travel days that were campaign related, unlike the circumstances the Commission has previously considered where the personal travel expenses were added to the end of a campaign-related trip. But even if the expenses relating to January 6 were personal in nature, the amount of that payment appears to be at most only a few hundred dollars, a small amount that does not merit the expenditure of further Commission resources to pursue.

Accordingly, we recommend that the Commission dismiss as a matter of prosecutorial discretion the allegations that Van Orden and the Committee violated the Act by converting ccontributions to personal use and close the file.

IV. RECOMMENDATIONS

1. Dismiss as a matter of prosecutorial discretion the allegation that Derrick Van 51 See Personal Use E&J at 7,869. See also AO 2002-05 at 3-5 (treating expenses including “subsistence and lodging” as incremental expenses when two consecutive days in the middle of an eight-day trip were campaign related and the other six days were personal or related to the candidate’s duties of a non-federal office). Unlike this example, we do not have sufficient information to determine whether Van Orden scheduled the meetings on the 5th and 7th for the purpose of attending the Rally, or whether the timing of the trip was based on the availability of the individuals with whom he would be meeting, and the intervening day off from the meetings may have been an unavoidable byproduct of Members of Congress and staff participating in the counting of the votes of the Electoral College in Congress on the 6th. In the former scenario the expenses would be incremental and thus personal use if paid with campaign funds; in the latter scenario the expenses may not have been incremental.

52 For instance, we do not have specific information regarding which nights Van Orden or his staff spent in the hotel, but based on his account, he was in Washington, DC for four nights (January 3-6). Dividing his reported hotel expense ($655.60) by four results in a total of $163.90. Dividing the reported expense of Carter, his aide ($469.62) by four results in $117.41, making the combined total for both of them $281.31. Without additional information on other potential incremental expenses attributable to the 6th, the total sum of potential personal use expenses at issue here remains a small amount that does not merit the expenditure of further Commission resources to pursue. See Factual & Legal Analysis at 10, MUR 7850 (Freedom First PAC) (dismissing pursuant to

FACTUAL AND LEGAL ANALYSIS

Respondents: Derrick Van Orden
Van Orden for Congress and Mary Clancy in her official capacity as treasurer

I. INTRODUCTION

The Complaint in this matter alleges that Derrick Van Orden, a candidate for Wisconsin’s Third Congressional District, and his principal campaign committee, Van Orden for Congress and Mary Clancy in her official capacity as treasurer (the “Committee”), violated the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, as amended (the “Act”), by converting contributions to personal use. Specifically, the Complaint alleges that approximately two months after losing the 2020 general election, Van Orden “appear[ed] to use campaign funds for personal use, including travel to and lodging in Washington, DC at the time of the ‘Save America Rally’ and subsequent storming of the U.S. Capitol on January 6.”1

Van Orden and the Committee (collectively, “Respondents”) state that the purpose of the travel was to attend a series of meetings regarding Van Orden’s “political future” that were scheduled for January 5 and 7, 2021, and reference “the ongoing nature of [Van Orden’s] Campaign.”2 Respondents further state that Van Orden was “briefly present near the [Rally]” but “did not actually attend the Rally” and “did not take part in [the] unlawful events” that occurred afterward.3

Because the available information suggests that the majority of the travel expenses paid by the Committee were made so that Van Orden could attend meetings regarding his potential future candidacy, the Commission does not believe that this matter warrants the expenditure of the Commission’s limited resources given the likely small amount in violation. Accordingly, the Commission exercises its prosecutorial discretion and dismisses the allegations that Van Orden and the Committee violated 52 U.S.C. § 30114(b) by converting contributions to personal use.4

II. FACTUAL BACKGROUND

Derrick Van Orden was a candidate for the Third Congressional District of Wisconsin during the 2020 election cycle, but he was defeated in the general election.5 According to its 2020 Year-End Report, the Committee had $12,507.44 in cash on hand at the end of 2020.6 On April 8, 2021, Van Orden filed a statement of candidacy to again run for Wisconsin’s Third Congressional District in the 2022 election.7

According to the Committee’s 2021 April Quarterly Report, the Committee made three payments totaling $4,022.72 between January 5, 2021 and February 28, 2021, reporting that the purpose was “travel,” “travel reimbursement,” or “travel unitemized.”8 The report lists reimbursements made to three individuals, including the candidate and two individuals that appear to have been part of his 2020 campaign staff: (1) Van Orden, in the amount of $2,709.66;
(2) Jared Carter, in the amount of $1,057.05; and (3) Mary Krueger, in the amount of $256.01.9

relationship to Van Orden or the Committee, nor why their travel was paid for by the campaign. The Response discusses the payments and their purpose collectively. Based on a review of other reports filed by the Committee with the Commission, Krueger and Carter appear to have been paid staffers of the Committee. See FEC

The Complaint alleges that these travel expenditures were not for permissible campaign uses but for “personal activity” in connection with “the ‘Save America Rally’ and subsequent storming of the U.S. Capitol on January 6,” which was also the date that the votes of the Electoral College were counted regarding the 2020 presidential election. Because Van Orden was not a candidate for federal office at the time of the trip, the Complaint alleges that respondents violated the personal use provisions of the Act and Commission regulations. In support of this claim, the Complaint relies on a January 13, 2021 Op-Ed that Van Orden authored, where he states, “I recently traveled to Washington, DC for meetings and to stand for the integrity of our electoral system as a citizen and at the behest of my neighbors here in Western Wisconsin.” The Op-Ed identifies Van Order as a “former Republican congressional candidate for Wisconsin’s third district.” The Complaint adds that because the “Save America Rally” (the “Rally”) concerned the 2020 presidential general election results, the purpose of Van Orden’s travel in January 2021 would have been personal regardless of whether Van Orden had become a federal candidate.

The Response denies that the purpose of Van Orden’s trip was personal and instead states he traveled to Washington, DC on January 3rd “for a series of political meetings” scheduled for January 5th and 7th with members of the House Republican Caucus and party staff regarding his “political future.” Respondents explain, however, that the meetings scheduled for January 7th were canceled in the wake of the events following the rally on January 6th, and Van Orden returned home to Wisconsin on January 7th. Respondents assert that Van Orden did not actually attend the rally but arrived late and “remained on the periphery of the event.”

Given that the meetings that were scheduled for January 5th and 7th were regarding Van Orden’s “political future,” Respondents contend that the travel expenses for the trip were permissible. Respondents state that “the ongoing nature of [Van Orden’s] [c]ampaign at the time of the meetings is just one more fact to justify the necessity and purpose of the trip.” While also acknowledging that Van Orden’s travel was “not in connection with any particular election,” Respondents nevertheless assert that the trip constituted “political travel” that would be permitted under the Act as being for “any other lawful purposes.” Respondents argue that regardless of whether Van Orden was a candidate at the time, the Committee was “registered with the Commission, properly functioning, and filing timely reports” and therefore it could “raise and spend funds in accordance with federal law, just as the Campaign did in this instance.” Respondents further claim that even if attending the rally had been the only purpose of the trip, such a use of campaign funds would nonetheless be permissible because the rally was “inherently political, akin to any other [p]arty event or committee fundraiser” and the expense would not have existed irrespective of Van Orden’s candidacy.22

III. LEGAL ANALYSIS

Under the Act, a contribution accepted by a candidate may be used for, inter alia,

“otherwise authorized expenditures in connection with the campaign for Federal office of the candidate.”23 The Commission has long recognized that “candidates have wide discretion over the use of campaign funds,”24 but a contribution to a candidate shall not be converted by any person to “personal use.”25 “Personal use” means any use of funds in a campaign account of a present or former candidate to fulfill a commitment, obligation, or expense of any person that would exist irrespective of the candidate’s campaign or duties as a Federal officeholder.26 The Commission evaluates certain expenses, such as travel, meal, and legal expenses, on a case-by-case basis by applying the “irrespective test” to determine whether a personal use violation has occurred.27 If a candidate “can reasonably show that the expenses at issue resulted from campaign or officeholder activities, the Commission will not consider the use to be personal use.”28

“political future” and notes the “ongoing nature of his [c]ampaign.”

Respondents’ assertions about the existence of these meetings appear to be corroborated in part by Van Orden’s reference to “meetings” in his Op-Ed, which was published just days after the trip and more than six months before the date of the Complaint.

In the context of an Advisory Opinion, the Commission has determined that “the use of excess campaign funds for future Federal and local or state races would not violate the personal use prohibition.” Considering: (1) Respondents’ references to Van Orden’s “ongoing campaign”; (2) that the travel expenses relating to these meetings included travel for two aides from Van Orden’s 2020 campaign; (3) and that Van Orden filed his statement of candidacy to run for Congress in 2022 prior to the end of the reporting period covering these expenses, an inference can be drawn that at least one purpose of these meetings was to discuss Van Orden running for Congress in 2022. Given these facts, there is an insufficient basis to conclude that the travel expenses here would have existed irrespective of Van Orden’s future candidacy.

29 Resp. at 1-2. Neither the Complaint nor Response separately address the contemporaneous travel expenses reimbursed by the Committee to Mary Kreuger or Jared Carter. Supra note 9. Because both the Complaint and Response address these travel expenses and their purpose collectively with Van Orden’s travel expenses, and there is no conflicting information in the record, we also address them collectively.

33 Cancellation of the January 7th meeting(s) after the travel had commenced does not change the purpose of the payment of those travel expenses.
Under Commission precedent, even if January 6th was an extra day of the trip involving only personal activity, because the cost of the airfare is a defined expense that would have been incurred regardless of the extra day, the use of campaign funds to pay for the flight does not constitute personal use.34 There is a question as to whether the hotel costs for the evening of the 6th could be considered an incremental expense because this personal day was in the middle of two travel days that were campaign related, unlike the circumstances the Commission has previously considered where the personal travel expenses were added to the end of a campaign-related trip.35 But even if the expenses relating to January 6 were personal in nature, the amount of that payment appears to be at most only a few hundred dollars, a small amount that does not merit the expenditure of further Commission resources to pursue.36 Accordingly, the Commission dismisses as a matter of prosecutorial discretion the allegations that Van Orden and the Committee violated the Act by converting contributions to personal use.37

(stating that it appears the candidate should have used personal funds to pay for a flight where “the undisputed purpose of [the travel] was meeting a personal obligation” and there was no information suggesting that the campaign activity, phone calls and meetings, required the candidate to travel to that destination).

35 See Personal Use E&J at 7,869. See also AO 2002-05 at 3-5 (treating expenses including “subsistence and lodging” as incremental expenses when two consecutive days in the middle of an eight-day trip were campaign related and the other six days were personal or related to the candidate’s duties of a non-federal office).

36 Without additional information on other potential incremental expenses attributable to the 6th, the total sum of potential personal use expenses at issue here remains a small amount that does not merit the expenditure of further Commission resources to pursue.
