*(b) Section 315(b) of such Act is amended to read as follows:
"(b) The charges made for the use of any broadcasting station by any person who is a legally qualified candidate for any public office in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to such office shall not exceed—*

"(C) 'legally qualified candidate' means any person who (1) meets the qualifications prescribed by the applicable laws to hold the Federal elective office for which he is a candidate and (2) is eligible under applicable State law to be voted for by the electorate directly or by means of delegates or electors; and

"(D) 'broadcasting station' includes a community antenna television system, and the terms 'licensee' and 'station licensee' when used with respect to a community antenna television system, mean the operator of such system.

"(2) (A) No legally qualified candidate in an election (other than a primary election) any primary, general, or special election for a major Federal elective office may spend for the use of broadcasting stations on behalf of his candidacy in such election a total amount in excess of—

"(i) 7 cents multiplied by the number of votes cast for all legally qualified candidates for such office in the last preceding general election for such office; or

"(ii) $20,000, if greater than the amount determined under clause (i) (or if clause (i) is inapplicable).

"(B) In the case of a candidate for United States Senator in a State in which the total number of votes cast for all legally qualified candidates for Senator in the last preceding election for Senator was less than the greatest total number of votes cast for all legally qualified candidates in any election (held after such preceding senatorial election) for a statewide office in such State, the amount determined under subparagraph (A) (i) shall be 7 cents multiplied by such greatest total number of votes for statewide office.

"(A) 5 cents multiplied by the estimate of resident population of voting age for such office, as determined by the Bureau of Census in June of the year preceding the year in which the election is to be held;

“(6)(5) Broadcasting stations and candidates shall file with the Commission such reports at such times and containing such information as the Commission shall prescribe for the purpose of this subsection and, in the case of broadcasting stations, subsection (d).

“(B) has specified a limitation upon total expenditures for the use of broadcasting stations on behalf of the candidacy of each legally qualified candidate in such election, and for a ~~major~~ Federal elective office, or nomination thereto, then no station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate in such election unless such candidate, or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so, certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate such limitation. ~~upon total expenditures.”~~

PURPOSE OF LEGISLATION

S. 382 is a comprehensive bill entitled “Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.” Title I consists of Amendments to Communications Act of 1934; Limitations on Campaign Expenditures For Non-Broadcast Communications Media; Title II, of Criminal Code Amendments; Disclosure of Federal Campaign Funds; and Title III, Tax Incentives For Contributions to Candidates for Federal Office.

Because of its comprehensive nature the bill was simultaneously referred to the Committees on Commerce, Finance, and Rules and Administration. The subject matter of Title I, of course, is within the primary jurisdiction of the Commerce Committee.

The purpose of Title I is twofold. It attempts to give candidates for public office greater access to the media so that they may better explain their stand on the issues, and thereby more fully and completely inform the voters.

Second, it attempts to halt the spiraling cost of campaigning for public office. Voters' Time, a report of the Twentieth Century Fund Commission on Campaign Costs in the Electronic Era, eloquently demonstrated this fact. This problem seems to be rapidly increasing.

To accomplish its purpose, Title I, as amended, would do the following:

1. Make the equal opportunities requirement of Section 315 (a) of the Communications Act, as amended, inapplicable to the use of broadcast facilities by legally qualified candidates for President and Vice President in primary and general election campaigns.

2. Require that broadcast licensees charge legally qualified candidates for any public office no more than their lowest unit rate during the 45 days before a primary election, and 60 days preceding a general or special election.

3. Establish reasonable and adequate limitations on the amount of money that may be spent for use of the broadcast media and nonbroadcast media by or on behalf of legally qualified candidates for the offices of President, Vice President, United States Senator or Representative, Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress (Federal elective office) in primary, general and special elections.

4. Required that 45 days before a primary election and 60 days before a general election any person who charges a legally qualified candidate for the office of President, Vice President, United States Senator or Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner (Federal elective office) for space in the nonbroadcast Communications media (newspapers, magazine, and other periodical publications, and billboard facilities) do so at the lowest unit rate charged others for the same amount of space.

5. Enable the States by law to adopt spending limitations in the broadcast media for candidates for state and local office.

BACKGROUND AND GENERAL DISCUSSION

Originally Section 315 was applicable to all uses of broadcast facilities by legally qualified candidate for any public office.

In 1959 this requirement was modified to provide that appearances by a legally qualified candidate on certain specified bona fide news type programs shall not be deemed a use within the meaning of Section 315. A candidate's appearance on such a program, therefore, no longer requires that his opponents be afforded an equal opportunity. The Fairness Doctrine, however, continues to apply in all instances.

In 1960, Congress adopted Senate Joint Resolution 207 (Public Law 86-677) which suspended the equal opportunity requirement of Section 315 with respect to nominees for President and Vice President for the presidential campaign of that year. As a consequence, broadcasters were able to give substantial amounts of free time to the candidates of the major parties without having to afford equal time to the plethora of minor and fringe party candidates for those offices. Again, however, the Fairness Doctrine remains applicable.

The background of these legislative actions, the reasons for them, and their consequences have been discussed many times in great detail in Committee documents.¹

¹ See, for example, Report to accompany S. 3637, Senate Report No. 91-751, 91st Congress, Second Session; and Hearings on S. 2876, 91st Congress, First Session.

Congress, the Federal Communications Commission, candidates, political scientists, broadcasters, and the public all agree that the 1959 amendments and the 1960 suspension have served the public interest. The 1960 suspension particularly resulted in a more widely informed electorate. One witness, Dr. Frank Stanton, President of CBS, testified during the recent hearings on S. 382, that in 1960 when increased free time was made available to the major candidates by suspension of Section 315, our country achieved the highest percentage of voter participation in any Presidential election in the past half century.

Section 315(b) of the Communications Act requires that charges made for the use of any broadcast station for any of the purposes set forth in Section 315 may not exceed the charges made for comparable use of the station for other purposes. This provision was enacted in 1952 to correct an abuse by some broadcasters who were charging candidates for public office rates in excess of those charged commercial advertisers for comparable time. This provision has served its purpose as a corrective measure. Since a political candidate's broadcast requirements are limited in terms of weeks or a few months at best, however, he cannot avail himself of the favorable rates available to commercial advertisers who usually buy time in bulk for longer periods.

The valuable franchises given broadcasters to operate on airwaves belonging to the people is conditioned on serving the needs and interests of the community of license. In this context requiring broadcasters to offer candidates for public office the same rates given their most favored commercial time buyers is nothing more than a particularization of the broad public interest obligation incumbent on them.

During the last Congress a major effort was undertaken to halt the spiraling cost of campaigning for public office via the electronic media. These rising costs were characterized by many as the most critical barrier to informing the voters of America.

Your Committee held extensive hearings on this problem and the testimony it heard dramatically illustrated the dimensions of the problem. One witness, for example, testified that:

The crisis level has been reached in American campaign spending. This unsavory dilemma, understood but not often openly discussed by everyone in politics, is capsuled by author John Wale: "there is a danger that the cost of campaigning, chiefly swollen by the cost of television, will exclude the honest poor. A more serious danger for American politics is that it does not always exclude the dishonest poor."

The costs of running for public office have doubled in the last decade. A recent survey shows that 70 percent of U.S. Senators spent over $100,000 on their last campaign and that 40 percent spent over $200,000. In some states, it can cost nearly a million dollars just to lose a Senate primary.

Three out of every 10 Members of the House had to spend over $60 thousand to be elected, and in hotly contested races the figure passed over the $100,000 mark early and often.

How are financial demands of this magnitude met? How many men of talent and interest, but not of means, are discouraged from seeking office? (See Committee on Commerce hearings on S. 2876, 91st Congress, First Session, Serial No. 91-29 at page 51)

As a consequence of these hearings, and similar ones in the House, and after extensive floor debates in both Houses, the Congress passed legislation designed to give candidates greater access to the electronic media and halt the spiraling cost for its use so that the electorate might be better and more widely informed on candidates and issues.

That legislation, S. 3637, permanently suspended the equal opportunity requirement of Section 315 for Presidential campaigns; required broadcast stations charge candidates at their own established lowest unit rate for comparable commercial time; and placed a ceiling on the amount of money candidates for Federal elective office, the office of Governor or Lieutenant Governor, or anyone on their behalf could spend for radio and television time.

S. 3637 was vetoed by the President, however, in October of 1970. During the course of Congressional efforts to override the Presidential veto the minority leader of the Senate indicated that he would offer comprehensive legislation in the 92nd Congress to curb the growing excesses of campaign spending. As a result of this proposal the President sent the following letter to Senator Scott which was placed in the Congressional Record during the floor debate to override the President's veto (Volume 116, Congressional Record, page 18746, daily edition, November 23, 1970):

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, November 20, 1970.

Hon. HUGH SCOTT,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR HUGH: Your proposal to offer a comprehensive campaign reform bill in the 92nd Congress is commendable. The Administration will, of course, work closely with you, other members of the Congress and the Governors in an effort to arrive at a bill which will deal with all problems of political campaigns, including spending limitations, in a direct, effective and enforceable manner. Our aim must be to provide legislation which is consistent with the processes of free elections and the maintenance of an informed electorate.

As I pointed out in my veto message of the Political Broadcast Act, S. 3637, that bill had many shortcomings. These must be corrected. A major deficiency of this legislation is that it singles out only one form of campaign spending. If, indeed, there is merit in limiting campaign expenditures, the problem should be dealt with in its entirety. To merely limit one form of spending could encourage candidates to spend even more in other areas. The result might well be more expensive, rather than less expensive, political campaigns.

Of utmost importance, new legislation must not discriminate against one communication medium. It must also provide a meaningful mechanism for enforcement, as to which S. 3637 is seriously deficient.

Reform is needed in this area. But this issue need not and should not be dealt with in a hurried and contentious fight over a veto. There will be no major elections between now and the time that Congress can consider this legislation in the next session. Your proposal offers an opportunity to do this in a deliberate and cooperative way.

With best personal regards,
Sincerely,

RICHARD NIXON.

Early in the 92nd Congress several campaign reform bills were introduced in the Senate. S. 1, S. 382, S. 956 and S. 1121 were referred to your Committee and on February 3 hearings were announced for March 2, 3, 4 and 5.

HEARINGS

Your Committee held extensive hearings on March 2, 3, 4 and 5. Subsequently, the hearings were reopened for two additional days, March 31 and April 1, at the request of several minority members of the Committee, and the Deputy Attorney General of the United States, Richard G. Kleindienst, who wished an opportunity to present oral testimony.

During the course of the hearings your Committee was mindful of the objectives it had attempted to achieve in S. 3637—wider and more penetrating dissemination of views and issues in an election, and limiting the cost of campaigning for public office; the reasons assigned by the President for vetoing S. 3637; and reports of campaign spending in the general election campaigns of 1970. Extensive testimony was received from numerous expert witnesses on all of these matters. Your Committee wishes to commend them for their thoughtful and scholarly presentations. Their testimony has helped the Committee immeasurably.

Broadcasters have long urged removal of the equal opportunity requirement of Section 315 of the Communications Act as a means of enabling them to afford more air time to significant candidates for public office. The presidents of the three major television networks again urged that this restriction be relaxed. Mr. Julian Goodman, president of NBC, testified that if the equal time provision were repealed for Presidential candidates his network will set aside four prime-time half hours for appearances by the Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates of the two parties to use as they choose and without charge.

Dr. Frank Stanton testified that:

“CBS is prepared to offer next year between Labor day and Election Day eight hours of free time on the CBS Television and Radio Networks for the major party candidates for President and Vice President to present their views. The offer is contingent upon repeal of Section 315.

First, we would suggest that, in the opening and closing hours of what we hope would be a full eight-hour series, the candidates present their overall views, either individually or in joint appearances. Format would be determined in consultation with the candidates, and with their agreement.

Second, the intervening six hours would be dependent upon developing—again in consultation with the candidates and with their agreement—various formats the purpose of which would be to elicit the greatest amount of information on their attitudes toward the campaign issues. Some of these political broadcasts, we sincerely hope, would be joint appearances or back-to-back interviews so that the public could receive the fullest opportunity to compare the nominees and their positions. The objective would be to broaden the base of the political dialogue and to stimulate interest in the issues by bringing into play a wider range of informational approaches. In this regard, as you yourself read into the record of these proceedings, in recommending the limited repeal of Section 315 last year, this Committee stated:

Your Committee also wishes to point out that in urging the adoption of this legislation repealing Section 315 as it applies to Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates, it is not enforcing any particular format for the appearance of the candidates. Rather, complete freedom is given to the broadcaster and the candidates to develop specific program formula for the appearance of candidates. The Committee feels the flexibility being given in this legislation will permit the broadcaster and the candidates to innovate and experiment with various program formats, including joint appearances. Whatever is done should be done as a result of discussions, negotiations and cooperation between the candidates and the broadcasters.

We agree wholeheartedly with these views, and they are embraced by the plan we are advancing."

The Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission (referred to hereafter as "FCC") also testified that Section 315 appears to inhibit broadcasters from affording free time to the major presidential candidates, and that some relaxation of the equal opportunity requirement is warranted. The Deputy Attorney General whose testimony reflected the views of the Administration urged repeal of this requirement for Federal elective office. The Chairman of the Republican National Committee and the spokesman for the Democratic National Committee both favored repeal of the equal opportunity provision.

On the question of reduced advertising rates for candidates, Mr. Goodman stated that NBC agreed "with the principle that the special public interest in the campaign process justifies reduced rates for political advertising." He went on to say that NBC did not agree that any one medium should be singled out for the compulsory application of this principle, however. Mr. Goldenson of ABC and Dr. Stanton of CBS did not oppose a provision, the lowest unit rate for advertising, but said it should apply to nonbroadcast as well as broadcast media.

The FCC favored a lowest unit rate provision for broadcasters. The Deputy Attorney General, and the spokesmen for the Republican and Democratic National Committees urged such provisions for both media.

The views expressed by various witnesses on the question of spending limitations on the use of the media were much more diverse. With few exceptions most witnesses including the Deputy Attorney General favored some form of limitation on campaign spending for the media. There was unanimous agreement among those witnesses that the limitation must apply to both broadcast and nonbroadcast media. Differing views were expressed, however, on whether there should be one overall spending limitation or separate ones for each of the two media types.

Senators Scott and Mathias testifying in support of S. 956 opposed limitations on the amounts candidates may spend chiefly on the grounds that if a limitation were low it tends to favor an incumbent candidate, and if high there is an effort to reach the high figure. Senator Scott said he also thought there would be a possible constitutional objection under the First Amendment.

Two other witnesses expressed their view that any limitation on media spending violates the First Amendment because it limits a candidate's right of expression as well as the right of those who wish to support him.

In considering what would be a realistic and meaningful formula for arriving at spending limitations on the media, your Committee had the benefit of direct testimony of candidates in the 1970 general elections regarding their expenditures. The FCC also submitted preliminary figures on amounts spent by candidates on the broadcast media in these elections.

These candidates agreed that with respect to the broadcast media a total dollar amount arrived at by multiplying 7 cents by the total number of votes cast in the preceding election for the office they sought was adequate.

The preliminary figures of the FCC indicated that candidates spent on an average of 8 to 9 cents times the total number of votes cast for use on the broadcast media.

Other witnesses raised the point that a formula based on actual voters in a previous election would "limit today's campaign to yesterday's performance." The point was also made that in the general elections of 1972, 18 year olds will be eligible to vote for candidates for Federal offices, and a formula based on the number of voters in years previous to that would not take this factor into account.

As a consequence of the testimony of these witnesses as well as that of the numerous other expert witnesses who testified on the legislation your Committee is able to recommend a bill which in its judgment will be a major step in halting the escalating costs of campaigning for elective office, and enable all who seek such office to have a better opportunity to do so.

THE LEGISLATION

S. 382 repeals the equal opportunity requirement of Section 315 with respect to candidates for the office of President and Vice President in both primary and general elections. The case for this limited repeal has been made, and your Committee believes that Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates will have greater opportunities to present their views to the electorate without the inhibitions presently contained in Section 315. All other provisions of Section 315 remain applicable to these candidates.

Your Committee also wishes to repeat that in urging the adoption of this legislation repealing Section 315 as it applies to Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates, it is not endorsing any particular format for the appearances of the candidates. Rather, complete freedom is being given to the broadcaster and candidates to develop specific program formats for the appearance of the candidates. The Committee feels that the flexibility being given in this legislation will permit the broadcaster and candidates to innovate and experiment with various program formats, including joint appearances. Whatever is done, should be done as a result of discussion, negotiations, and cooperation between the candidates and the broadcasters.

It is the express intention of your Committee, therefore, that each candidate be free to choose his own format.

Moreover, your Committee has been assured by the networks that in addition to the time made available to major party candidates, free time will also be made available on a fair basis to the candidate of any significant third party which might emerge, such as the States Rights Party in 1948 or the Progressive Parties in 1924 and 1948 or the American Independent Party in 1968.

The bill also requires that 45 days preceding a primary election and 60 days preceding a general or special election a broadcast station charge candidates for any public office the lowest unit charge of the station for the same amount of time during the same time period. At all other times, the charges shall not exceed the charges for comparable use of such station by commercial users.

Use of the lowest unit charge as the rate which broadcasters may charge legally qualified candidates for public office for the use of broadcast time does no more than place the candidate on par with a broadcast station's most favored commercial advertiser. In doing so, it makes use of each broadcaster's own commercial practices rather than imposing on him an arbitrary discount rate applicable to all stations without regard to their differences.

It should also be noted that in the purchase of broadcast time the candidate for public office must in almost every instance seek out the broadcaster or his agent to negotiate a purchase, and in most cases must pay in advance of the use of the broadcast time. These conditions rarely apply in sales to commercial advertisers.

The determination of what is a broadcasting station's lowest unit charge can be a very complicated matter. All commercial radio and television stations have published rate cards which purport to state the rates at which they sell spot and program time. However, in many instances these rate cards are merely a statement of the highest rates that the station can hope to receive. In actual practice the rate card is a guide or a point of departure for the negotiation of rates for broadcast time on a sale-by-sale basis.

Broadcast time is sold to advertisers in several ways, but some generalizations are possible. Broadcast time varies in cost in terms of the audience which it is anticipated that any particular presentation will reach. In most broadcast markets, commercial broadcast time is sold in terms of the anticipated audience reached by the particular broadcast. This is translated into a cost-per-thousand of audience for sales purposes. Thus, the prime time (generally speaking, 7-11 P.M. in the case of TV, and commuting time in the case of radio) of any station (when it has its largest audience) will be its most expensive period of time. As between stations, those with the largest audiences will have the highest rates. However, the volume of broadcast time purchased may also be reflected in the cost. The greater the volume the less the cost.

Most broadcasters sell advertising spot time in at least three categories—fixed time, preemptible time, and immediately preemptible time. Although their nomenclature varies somewhat their practices are roughly comparable. Fixed time almost assures the advertiser that his advertisement will appear at the time specified. Time sold in this manner is the most expensive advertising time sold which does not involve participation in program cost. Under a preemptible sale, the station may preempt the time for the advertisement for that of another advertiser who is willing to pay the higher or fixed rate. The station is under an obligation to give notice to the advertiser being set aside a specified period in advance of the time that the advertisement was to be broadcast. Some stations permit the advertiser about to be preempted to retain the time by paying the higher rate. Immediately preemptible time is the cheapest of these three categories of time sold and permits an advertisement to be preempted without any requirement of notice to the advertiser.

Except in cases where other factors, such as additional volume discounts, would result in a lower cost to the candidate, the bill would provide that the highest rate a broadcast station could charge the candidate for fixed time for political campaign purposes would be the prevailing immediately preemptible rate.

However, other practices followed in the sale of broadcast time for advertising purposes involve volume or long-term purchases and the sale of time in packages, sometimes referred to as flight plans or sales on a run-of-schedule basis. The significant factor in any such arrangement is that the broadcaster (within limits established in the sale contract) may select the times when the purchaser's advertisements will actually be presented, thereby permitting the broadcaster to fill time spots which might otherwise be unsold. As might be expected, time sold under such an arrangement is relatively inexpensive.

In computing the lowest unit charge for purposes of administration and enforcement, it is the Committee's intention that only amounts which the station actually receives for broadcast time are to be considered. Any commission or similar amount paid by the station to an advertising agency or other third party out of the proceeds of the sale of broadcast time would be deducted in determining the amount actually received by the station.

The Committee is also persuaded that a limitation on the length of time when this most favored rate is available will be an incentive to candidates to shorten the duration of their campaigns, thereby helping to reduce campaign costs. Accordingly, the legislation provides that the lowest unit rate will only be available forty-five days before a primary election, and sixty days before a general or special election.

The presentation of legally qualified candidates for public office is an essential part of any broadcast licensee's obligation to serve the public interest, and the FCC should continue to consider the extent to which each licensee has satisfied his obligation in this regard in connection with the renewal of his broadcast license. Certainly no diminution in the extent of such programming should result from the enactment of this legislation.

In order to emphasize the public interest obligation inherent in making broadcast time available to candidates covered by the spending limitation in the legislation, S. 382 contains an express provision to this effect.

Your Committee was impressed by the unanimous testimony that any provision requiring preferential advertising rates to political candidates should extend to the nonbroadcast as well as the broadcast media. Truly, if there are overriding public interest considerations in such a provision it should apply to both media.

S. 382 provides, therefore, that 45 days before primary elections and 60 days before special and general elections, charges made for the use of nonbroadcast communications media (newspapers, magazines and other periodic publications, and billboard facilities) by or on behalf of a legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office (President, Vice President, United States Senator or Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner) shall not exceed the lowest unit rate charged others by the person furnishing such medium for the same amount of space.

This means that regardless of how little space is purchased, it may be purchased at the same low rate it was sold to a commercial advertiser who may have bought it under the most favorable arrangement.

The favorable rate would apply to any sale of space which would require certification from the candidate or his representative that the amount charged would not exceed the candidate's spending limitation imposed by the legislation.

Your Committee did not attempt to extend the lowest unit charge requirement in the nonbroadcast media to State or local elective office. The Committee feels that Federal jurisdiction over the broadcast media for this purpose rests on its interest in protecting the integrity of Federal elections, and its authority to regulate radio and television in the public interest. In the nonbroadcast media, however, the Committee feels this jurisdiction is based only on the former.

Reduced rates to candidates for use of communications media without more, however, is not, in the judgment of your Committee, sufficient to halt the spiraling costs of campaigns. A reasonable and adequate spending limitation for the use of the media must also be placed on the candidates. Otherwise, any reduction will only be a bonanza to those who have access to vast financial resources. Such a limitation should, of course, realistically reflect the amounts necessary for candidates—incumbents as well as opponents—to use the media in sufficient amounts to present their candidacies to the electorate fully and fairly.

In deliberating on how best to approach the problem of placing limitations on expenditures for use of the media your Committee was mindful of the objections raised by the President in his message accompanying the veto of S. 3637, i.e., that the bill was discriminatory and plugged only one hole in the sieve because it merely placed limitations on the broadcast media; his more recent statement that he favored limitations on campaign expenditures; the testimony of the Deputy Attorney General of the United States, testifying on behalf of the Administration who said that limitations should apply to both the broadcast and nonbroadcast media; and the testimony of a vast majority of the witnesses who also favored spending limitations on the use of the media.

Another aspect of spending limitations on which the Committee deliberated at great length was the formula to be used in computing it. Your Committee was convinced that the total dollar amount arrived at under any formula must be realistic in terms of today's costs for goods and services, and that it must also be equitable for incumbents and opponents alike.

Under the legislation, candidates for Federal elective office could spend for use of the broadcast media in primary, special or general elections an amount equal to five cents multiplied by the estimate of resident population of voting age for such office, as determined by the Bureau of the Census in June of the year preceding the year in which the election is to be held, or $30,000 if that amount is greater. Amounts spent by a candidate for Vice President are attributable to the limitation of the Presidential candidate with whom he is running. An identical limitation also applies to expenditures for use of the non-broadcast media.

Amounts spent on behalf of a candidate are chargeable to his limitation and the broadcast station licensee or the person furnishing media space must have written certification from the candidate or his authorized representative that the amount charged for the air time or media space will not cause the candidate to exceed his spending limitation.

In those instances where an individual or an organization proposes to buy time or space to oppose a candidate or his stand on campaign issues, the question arises whether the broadcast or advertisement would be a use on behalf of the candidate's opponent within the meaning of the legislation. If it is, of course, the broadcaster or media supplier would have to have written certification from the candidate's opponent or his representative that the charge for such time would not cause him to exceed the limitation on expenditures.

Clearly the rule of reason is applicable here. Your Committee can envision very few if any instances where it cannot reasonably and readily be prejudged that such a broadcast or advertisement would or would not be on behalf of the opponent of the candidate being criticized.

Any doubts, however, should be resolved in favor of a strict application of the legislation, and the broadcaster or media supplier should obtain the required certification from the candidate's opponent before making the charge.

Using the formula in the bill, Presidential candidates in 1972 may spend almost $7 million for use of the broadcast media in primary elections and again in the general election. They may spend equal amounts for use of the nonbroadcast media. Attached to the Report are figures compiled for your Committee which also show the amounts of money which Senatorial candidates may spend on the media in the 1972 elections. (Appendix A)

Some of the witnesses who testified before your Committee urged there be one total limitation on all media spending with discretion left to the candidate to determine what amounts to spend on broadcast and nonbroadcast advertising. There is merit to this contention especially since campaigns differ according to the personal style of a candidate and the area of the country in which the election is being held.

On the balance, however, your Committee opted against such an approach. Television is unquestionably the most used media in political campaigns, and it has been the most significant contributor to the spiraling cost of these campaigns. If candidates were given complete discretion to spend on the use of this media your Committee was fearful that in the closing months of a campaign the airwaves might become inundated with political broadcasts to the exclusion of entertainment and other public interest programs.

Each limitation standing on its own is, in your Committee's judgment, sufficient to enable a candidate to present his candidacy fully and fairly in the separate media. The lowest unit rate provisions of the legislation, and the exclusion of production costs in computing these limitations will also increase the amounts of air time and space which candidates may buy.

During the Committee hearings a question was raised whether limitations on media expenditures violated the First Amendment guarantee of freedom of expression. Your Committee believes they do not.² As the Supreme Court said in upholding the disclosure provisions of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, Burroughs and Cannon v. United States, 290 U.S. 534 (1934) at p. 545:

To say that Congress is without power to pass appropriate legislation to safeguard such an election from the improper use of money to influence the result is to deny to the nation in a vital particular the power of self protection. Congress, undoubtedly, possesses that power, as it possesses every other power essential to preserve the departments and institutions of the general government from impairment or destruction, whether threatened by force or by corruption.

If it can be seen that the means adopted are really calculated to attain the end, the degree of their necessity, the extent to which they conduce to the end, the closeness of the relationship between the means adopted and the end to be attained, are matters for congressional determination alone. Stephenson v. Binford, 287 U.S. 251, 272. Congress reached the conclusion that public disclosure of political contributions, together with the names of contributors and other details, would tend to prevent the corrupt use of money to affect elections. The verity of this conclusion reasonably cannot be denied.

When to this is added the requirement contained in § 244 that the treasurer's statement shall include full particulars in respect of expenditures, it seems plain that the statute as a whole is calculated to discourage the making and use of contributions for purposes of corruption.

Where as here, legislation intending to preserve the purity of Federal elections by limiting spending, also has the side effect of touching upon First Amendment rights, the criteria for determining its constitutionality are the presence of an evil which may validly be prevented, a reasonable relationship of the regulation to the evil, and the relative degree of effect upon the right to speak. There is a balancing of the limited effect upon free speech as against the substantiality of an evil to the prevention of which a regulatory statute is reasonably addressed, Konigsberg v. State Bar, 366 U.S. 36,50-1 (1961).

The overwhelming preponderance of the testimony before your Committee indicates the rapidly escalating cost of campaigning for public offices poses a real and imminent threat to the integrity of the electoral process.

According to Voters' Time, the report of the Twentieth Century Fund Commission on Campaign Costs in the Electronic Era, after 1952, when television emerged as a dominant form of communications in presidential campaigns, the estimated cost per vote took a sharp upward turn. From 19 cents in 1952, the cost per vote rose to 29 cents in 1960, and to 35 cents in 1964. In 1968 it jumped to 60 cents.

For the same periods the estimated direct spending of national-level party and campaign committees rose progressively from $11.6 million in 1952; to $12.9 million in 1956; to $19.9 million in 1960; and to $24.8 million in 1964. In 1968 it reached $44.2 million.

And according to another source, in three recent Presidential campaign years, the amount of money spent on newspaper ads was $4.3 million in 1956, $7.7 million in 1964, and $11.6 million in 1968.

The Twentieth Century Fund Commission's report recognized that many factors contributed to the big rise in the cost per vote in the 1968 presidential campaign, but concluded that no one single factor seems to have had television's explosive effect on this rise.

Simply stated people are becoming cynical because of these high costs.

A Gallup Poll in November of last year showed that 8 in 10 Americans favor a law that would limit the total amount of money that can be spent for or by a candidate in his campaign for public office.

One American interviewed by the Poll was quoted as saying, "If you don't have a million bucks, you might as well forget about running for political office these days."

And more recently, an opinion poll done for the advertising agency Foote, Cone and Belding, released in January 1971, indicated that 65% of the adult American public wants restrictions on political television advertising, and an additional 9% would like to see TV campaigns limited in duration.

Since Burroughs and Cannon, supra, has established the right of Congress to protect the integrity of Federal elections, what remains to be considered in this instance, is whether the limitations are reasonably related to the evil sought to be remedied, i.e., the spiraling cost of election campaigns and the attendant difficulty of candidates of obtaining access to the media. Your Committee believes they are, and its judgment in this respect is concurred in by the great majority of the experts who testified.

To contend that limitations would be constitutionally sound with respect to candidates, but to maintain otherwise where their supporters are concerned, would construe the power of Congress to protect the election process far too narrowly. Such a construction would permit boundless evasion of the purpose of the legislation and in effect render it nugatory.

The only feasible regulatory scheme for regulating campaign spending is to make the candidate personally responsible for and accountable for all money spent for him on the media, and to place a reasonable limitation on such expenditures.

Moreover, with respect to the broadcast media, no person now has an unrestricted right of access. As the Supreme Court said in National Broadcasting Co. v. United States, 319 U.S. 190, at p. 226. "Freedom of utterance is abridged to many who wish to use the limited facilities of radio. Unlike other modes of expression, radio inherently is not available to all."

And conversely, the Government may vest in certain individuals a right of access to these facilities. Red Lion Broadcasting v. Federal Communication Commission, 359 U.S. 367 (1969); 47 U.S.C. 315(a).

The touchstone for such actions is the public interest, convenience, and necessity.

But limitations that are adequate and realistic are not enough, they must also be workable and enforceable. Under the legislation the obligations of the candidates and those who sell air time and media space are clear and easily discharged. Significantly, the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission when asked if the broadcast provisions of the legislation were enforceable by the Commission answered in the affirmative.

Violation of these provisions by anyone—candidate, broadcaster, media supplier, or third party—is punishable by a fine not to exceed $5,000, imprisonment for not to exceed five years, or both.

In recognition of the rise in the cost of goods and services over the years your Committee has also adopted a provision which will allow the limitations computed under the formula to be adjusted upwards as the Consumer Price Index rises.

CONCLUSION

S. 382 is a comprehensive approach to the problem of political campaign reform and excessively high campaign costs. Its provisions deal with the communications media, campaign contributions, disclosure and reporting requirements, and tax incentives to encourage the small donor to contribute to the candidate or party of his choice. In the judgment of your Committee the legislation represents a major effort at reform in an area vital to our democratic society.

The necessity for campaign reform is now beyond question, and transcends special or partisan interests. It was in this spirit that your Committee deliberated on the legislation it is herewith recommending. No one individual or group stands to gain or lose under S. 382. The American people do, however, because they have staked their all on a democratic system of electing their leaders and the integrity of that system is now being threatened.

The principle concern of the Committee was Title I of the legislation because the subject matter of that Title was within its primary jurisdiction.

There was, however, strong feeling expressed by some members of the Committee that an independent Federal Elections Commission should be created, in lieu of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, to supervise the enforcement of this legislation. The Committee members strongly recommend to the Committee on Rules and Administration that they give this matter very serious consideration. Several members of the Committee also expressed their concern with other provisions in Title II of the legislation, more specifically regarding limitations on expenditures and contributions. A number of amendments were offered but not adopted. It is hoped that when the Committee on Rules and Administrations considers that Title these members will have an opportunity to hear and testify on the provisions therein.

COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS

As a result of the testimony and data submitted to the Committee during public hearings and its own consideration of the legislation, the following amendments were adopted to S. 382:

Section 101(a) was amended to exclude candidates for the office of President and Vice President of the United States from the equal opportunities requirement of Section 315(a) of the Communications Act in primary campaigns as well as the general election campaign.

Originally, S. 382 only provided this exclusion for the general election. S. 956 which was also before the Committee, however, excluded these offices for both primaries and the general election.

The purpose of relieving broadcasters of the strictures of Section 315 is, of course, to enable them to afford time to significant candidates without being compelled to provide equal time to a plethora of fringe candidates. This in turn should result in a more widely and better informed electorate. Such was the experience under the limited suspension of Section 315 for the 1960 Presidential election campaign.

The witnesses who appeared during the hearings on S. 382 urged a wider suspension than was contained in the original bill. Your Committee is persuaded by such testimony that a broader suspension such as that in S. 956 would better serve the public interest.

Section 101(b) was amended so the requirement that a broadcast station charge legally qualified candidates for all public offices its lowest unit rate only applies 45 days before a primary election and 60 days before a general election. At all other times the charges made legally qualified candidates cannot exceed the charges made for comparable use of such station.

The Committee believes that shortening the period during which the lowest unit rate would be available to candidates will be an incentive to shortening campaign periods, thereby helping to reduce campaign costs.

Section 101(c) was added in Committee. It amends Section 312(a) of the Communications Act to provide that willful or repeated failure by a broadcast licensee to allow reasonable access to or to permit purchase of reasonable amounts of time for the use of his station's facilities by a legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office on behalf of his candidacy shall be grounds for adverse action by the FCC.

The duty of broadcast licensees generally to permit the use of their facilities by legally qualified candidates for these public offices is inherent in the requirement that licensees serve the needs and interests of the communities of license. The Federal Communications Commission has recognized this obligation in its Report and Statement of Policy Re: Commission En Banc Programming Inquiry (1960).

Section 102 which provides for spending limitations on broadcast media by certain legally qualified candidates for public office has been amended in the following respects:

(1) The spending limitation now applies to legally qualified candidates for the offices of President, Vice President, United States Senator or Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress (Federal elective office). Originally the spending limitation applied to legally qualified candidates for the office of President, Vice President, United States Senator or Representative, or Governor or Lieutenant Governor.

The spending limitations in Title I of the legislation are intended to apply separately but equally to broadcast and nonbroadcast media. Constitutional questions were raised concerning the ability of Congress to place spending limitations on nonbroadcast media on candidates for State offices. While the Committee does not believe the same constitutional objections would lie where the broadcast media is concerned, it decided that in order to preserve the principle of equal treatment for the two media the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor should also be removed from the limitation on expenditures for the broadcast media.

It should be noted, however, that the legislation does permit the States by law to place these as well as other State or local offices under a spending limitation for the broadcast media.

The offices of Delegate or Resident Commissioner have been included within the spending limitation. They were included in S. 1 which was considered by the Committee, and since this part of the legislation is intended to apply to Federal elective offices it was felt they should also be included.

(2) The amount of the spending limitations in primary election campaigns are now the same as those in general and special election campaigns; and the limitation has also been made applicable to Presidential primaries. As introduced, the spending limitation in S. 382 for primary election campaigns was 50 per centum of what a candidate could spend in the general election campaign, and there was no limitation for Presidential primaries.

In many cases the primary campaign is tantamount to the general election. Where this is so, the 50 per centum limitation is obviously discriminatory. Accordingly, that limitation has been deleted, and candidates may spend up to the same amount in primary campaigns as they may in general or special election campaigns.

Similarly, your Committee believes there is no justification for excluding candidates for nomination for the office of the Presidency from the spending limitations imposed on candidates for other Federal elective offices in primary campaigns. The limitation for Presidential primaries applies to the total amount spent for all primaries, and it is the same amount he may spend in the general election campaign. Within that total limitation, a candidate may spend any amount he chooses on any individual primary.

(3) The formula for determining the spending limitation is 5 cents multiplied by the estimate of resident population of voting age for such office, as determined by the Bureau of Census in June of the year preceding the year in which the election is to be held, or $30,000 if such amount is greater.

The formula in the original bill was 7 cents multiplied by the number of votes cast for all legally qualified candidates for such office in the last preceding election, or $20,000 if such amount is greater.

During the course of the Committee hearings the question was raised whether using the total number of votes cast in a preceding election for a particular Federal office was a realistic criteria for determining the amount of money a candidate might spend.

In any election the number of actual voters is always less than the number of those who are registered or otherwise eligible to vote, or who are of voting age. In some states this disparity is considerable. Moreover, 18 year olds may now vote in Federal elections, and the criteria used in S. 382 would not take this factor into account in computing limitations for special and general Federal elections up to and including those to be held in 1972.

In the opinion of many witnesses, to limit a candidate's expenditures through a formula based on previous voter turnout therefore lessens his capability to reach a vast reservoir of potential supporters.

The Committee rejected the use of registered voters as a criteria largely because such figures are not uniformly available for all States. It did, however, replace the standard originally proposed with one based on the estimate of resident population of voting age for the office in question, as determined by the Bureau of the Census in June of the year preceding the year in which the election is to be held.

The Bureau of the Census currently compiles most of the information necessary to implement this new standard, and the Director has assured your Committee that the Bureau will be able to comply fully with the requirements of the legislation.

While the new criteria, does in the judgment of your Committee, more accurately reflect the base of potential support for candidates, it was apparent that the estimate of resident population of voting age multiplied by the 7 cent figure in the original bill would raise the dollar limitation so greatly that the concept of a spending limitation would be illusory.

Several witnesses, including members of Congress who had recently stood for election or re-election in 1970, testified that the total dollar limitation in the original bill provided realistic amounts for use of the broadcast media. Preliminary figures supplied the Committee by the FCC listing amounts spent by candidates on the broadcast media in the 1970 general elections supported their contention.

Accordingly, your Committee revised the 7 cent figure downward to 5 cents and raised the floor of the limitation from $20,000 to $30,000.

(4) An amendment was added for the purpose of emphasizing the Committee's intention that certain amounts spent by persons other than the candidate are attributable to his limitation. Accordingly "use of broadcasting stations by or on behalf of any candidate includes not only broadcasts advocating such candidate's election, but also broadcasts urging the defeat of his opponent or derogating his opponent's stand on campaign issues."

(5) The term 'legally qualified candidate' was also defined solely for the purpose of determining the point in time when amounts spent by or on behalf of a candidate are chargeable against his limitation. For that purpose the term 'legally qualified candidate' means "any person (1) who meets the qualifications prescribed by applicable laws to hold the Federal elective office for which he is a candidate and (2) who is eligible under applicable State law to be voted for by the electorate directly or by means of delegates or electors." This definition is in no way intended to modify or change existing law in Section 315 or the FCC rules or interpretations thereunder. It is applicable only to new Section 315(c) of the Federal Communications Act of 1934, as amended, and Section 103 of S. 382.

(6) A number of technical conforming amendments have also been made throughout the Section.

Section 103 which provides for spending limitations on nonbroadcast media by certain legally qualified candidates for public office has been amended in the following respects:

(1) The spending limitation now applies to candidates for the same elective offices as the limitation on expenditures for use of the broadcast media (Federal elective office). The deletion of the office of Governor or Lieutenant Governor, and the addition of the office of Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress were made for the reason discussed in the corresponding amendment in Section 102.

(2) The definition of nonbroadcast communications media has been confined to newspapers, magazines and other periodical publications, and billboard facilities.

This definition is not meant to include publications sent out by organizations in the regular course of conducting their affairs for the purpose of informing or advising their members, stockholders or customers of their views on political issues or report news thereof which may affect their interest. The Committee believes that the original definition in S. 382 was too broad and as a practical matter would be difficult to enforce. The Committee also considered and rejected inclusion of direct mailings within the definition because the nature of this type of campaign advertising is so varied no workable or effective definition of direct mailings that would be equitable to incumbents and opponents alike could be formulated. Your Committee intends to watch activities in this area closely for any practices which might subvert the intention of this legislation.

(3) The Committee added definitions of "legally qualified candidate" and "use of any nonbroadcast communications media by or on behalf of any candidate" to Section 103. These definitions conform to their counterparts in Section 102 and are intended to accomplish the same purpose.

(4) The public interest considerations involved in requiring that broadcast licensees charge candidates at their lowest unit rate 45 days before primary elections, and 60 days before general and special elections are, in the judgment of your Committee, also present in the nonbroadcast communications media.

Your Committee, therefore, has added an amendment which provides that rates charged legally qualified candidates for Federal elective office for space in nonbroadcast communications media 45 days before a primary election and 60 days before a general or special election may not exceed the lowest unit rate charged others by the person furnishing such medium for the same amount of space.

Many of the witnesses appearing before the Committee urged this amendment for the reasons discussed above and for the added reason that there should be no discrimination in this regard between the broadcast and nonbroadcast media.

(5) The amount of the spending limitations in primary election campaigns are now the same as those in general and special election campaigns, and the limitation has also been made applicable to Presidential primaries. In all respects this amendment is the same as that made in Section 102 of the legislation.

(6) The formula for determining the spending limitation in the nonbroadcast media is the same as the one for the broadcast media, i.e., 5 cents multiplied by the estimate of resident population of voting age for the office in question, or $30,000, whichever is greater. Originally the formula for the nonbroadcast limitation was 14 cents multiplied by the total number of votes cast for all legally qualified candidates for the office in question, or $40,000, whichever is greater.

The total dollar figure that may be spent by candidates under this formula represents an amount which should enable all candidates to present fully their candidacies to the voters.

(7) A number of technical conforming amendments have also been made throughout the Section.

Section 104 has been added by your Committee in recognition of the general yearly rise of the price of goods and services. Your Committee has attempted to provide for this eventuality. Accordingly it adopted an amendment which would enable the limitation on campaign expenditures to be adjusted upward yearly by the percentage difference the Consumer Price Index rises from a base year of 1970.

Section 204 has been amended to provide that contributions and pledges made after an election for Federal office to discharge indebtedness accrued during the campaign are chargeable to the aggregate limitation on contributions in Title II for the calendar year in which the candidate accrued the indebtedness.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF S. 382

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934; LIMITATIONS ON CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES FOR NONBROADCAST COMMUNICATIONS MEDIA

Section 101(a) exempts the use of a broadcast station's facilities by a legally qualified candidate for President or Vice President in primary and general elections from the equal opportunities requirement of Section 315(a) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended.

Section 101(b) limits the charges made for the use of broadcast station facilities by a legally qualified candidate for any public office 45 days before primary elections, and 60 days before general elections to the lowest unit charge of the station for the same amount of time in the same time period. At all other times charges to legally qualified candidates could not exceed those made for comparable use of the station's facilities.

Section 101(c) provides that willful or repeated failure by a broadcast licensee to allow reasonable access to or to permit purchase of reasonable amounts of time for the use of broadcasting stations by a legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office on behalf of his candidacy, shall be grounds for revocation of his broadcast station license under Section 312(a) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended.

Section 102 imposes a limitation on funds expended for use of broadcasting facilities (including community antenna television systems) in primary or general elections by or on behalf of legally qualified candidates for President, United States Senator or Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress. Funds spent by or on behalf of a Vice Presidential candidate are attributable to the limitation of the candidate for President with whom he is running. States may, by law, bring candidates for State and local offices under the broadcast expenditure limitations, subject to determination by the FCC that certain specified qualifications are met.

The section accomplishes the foregoing by :

(i) Defining 'Federal elective office' to include the office of President, Vice President, United States Senator or Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress.

(ii) Defining 'use of broadcasting stations by or on behalf of any candidate' to include not only broadcasts advocating a candidate's election, but also broadcasts urging the defeat of his opponent or derogating his opponent's stand on campaign issues.

(iii) Defining 'legally qualified candidate' for the purposes of the spending limitation to mean any person who meets the qualifications prescribed by the applicable laws to hold the Federal elective office for which he is a candidate, and who is eligible under applicable State laws to be voted for by the electorate directly or by means of delegates or electors.

(iv) Placing a limitation on expenditures for use of broadcast facilities (including community antenna television systems) by candidates for Federal elective office of 5 cents multiplied by the estimate of resident population of voting age for such office, as determined by the Bureau of the Census in June of the year preceding the year in which the election is to be held, or $30,000 if that amount is greater. This limitation would apply separately to primary and general elections.

(v) Providing that amounts spent for the use of broadcasting facilities on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office shall be deemed to have been spent by such candidate.

(vi) Prohibiting the licensee of a broadcast station from making any charge for the use of his facilities by or on behalf of any candidate for Federal elective office unless the candidate or a person authorized by him in writing certifies in writing to the licensee that payment of such charge will not violate the candidate's limitation.

(vii) Requiring broadcasting stations and candidates to file with the Federal Communications Commission such reports at such times and containing such information as the Commission shall prescribe.

(viii) Permitting States by law to adopt limitations on expenditures for the use of broadcasting facilities by legally qualified candidates for any office of such State or political subdivision if the FCC determines that the State by law has specified a limitation upon total expenditures for use of broadcasting stations on behalf of the candidacy of each legally qualified candidate in such an election; and the amount of such limitation does not exceed the amount which would be determined for such election using the formula provided for determining the limitations upon candidates for Federal elective office.

Section 103(a) defines "Federal elective office" to mean the office of President, Vice President, United States Senator or Representative or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress.

"Nonbroadcast communications medium" is defined to mean newspapers, magazines and other periodical publications and billboard facilities

"Legally qualified candidate" for purposes of the spending limitation on nonbroadcast communications media is defined to mean any person who meets the qualifications provided by the applicable laws to hold the Federal elective office for which he was a candidate and who is eligible under applicable State laws to be voted for by the electorate directly or by means of delegates or electors.

"Use of any nonbroadcast communications media by or on behalf of any candidate" is defined to include not only amounts spent for advocating a candidate's election, but also amounts spent for urging the defeat of his opponent or derogating his opponent's stand on campaign issues.

Section 103(b) limits the charges for the use of any nonbroadcast communications medium by a legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office 45 days before primary elections, and 60 days before general elections to the lowest unit rate charged others by the person furnishing such medium for the same amount of space.

Section 103(c) imposes a limitation on funds spent for the use of nonbroadcast communications facilities in primary or general elections by or on behalf of legally qualified candidates for Federal elective office. The limitation is five cents multiplied by the estimate of resident population of voting age for such office, as determined by the Bureau of Census in June of the year preceding the year in which the election is to be held, or $30,000 if that amount is greater. This limitation would apply separately for primary and general elections.

Section 103(d) provides that amounts spent for the use of nonbroadcast communications medium on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office shall be determined to be spent by such candidate. Amounts spent for the use of nonbroadcast communications medium by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for Vice President shall be deemed to have been spent by the candidate for the office of President with whom he is running.

Section 103(e) prohibits any person making any charge for the use of any nonbroadcast communications medium by or on behalf of any candidate for Federal elective office unless the candidate or his representative authorized by him in writing certifies in writing to such person that payment for such charge will not violate the candidate's limitation.

Any person who furnishes the use of any nonbroadcast communications medium for the benefit of any candidate for Federal elective office at the rate less than the rate normally charged by such person for such use shall be determined to have made a contribution to such candidate in the amount equal to the excess of the rate normally charged over the rate charged such candidate.

Section 103(f) provides that violations of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine not to exceed $5,000, imprisonment not to exceed five years, or both.

Section 104(b) provides that the amounts computed under the spending limitations for broadcast and nonbroadcast communications media be increased yearly by the percentum difference between the price index for the immediate preceding calendar year and the price index for the base period.

Section 105 provides that the amendments made by Section 101(b) shall take effect 30 days after the date of enactment of the legislation; and that the amendments made by Section 102 to take effect on such date as the Federal Communications Commission shall prescribe, but not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of the legislation. The remainder of the title will take effect upon the date of enactment.

COST ESTIMATES PURSUANT TO SECTION 252 OF THE LEGISLATIVE REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1970

In accordance with Section 252(a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 (Public Law 91-510, 91st Congress) the Committee estimates that the additional cost of the Bureau of the Census in order for it to discharge its responsibilities under the legislation would be an additional $100,000 for each fiscal year. This amount is the amount the Director of the Bureau of the Census informed your Committee is necessary.

It is impracticable for your Committee to estimate any additional cost to the FCC until the Commission adopts rules and procedures to carry out its obligations under the act. Similarly it is impracticable at this time for your Committee to estimate additional costs for the Secretary of the Senate, Clerk of the House of Representatives, and the clerks of the various U.S. District Courts under Title II of the legislation, and the Internal Revenue Service or Department of the Treasury under Title III.

The committee is not aware of any estimates of costs made by any Federal agency which are different from those made by the Committee.

SUPPLEMENTAL VIEWS OF MR. HART

The action taken by this committee in reporting Title I of S. 382 will, I hope, be followed by similar favorable action on the part of the Rules and Finance Committees when they review the remaining titles. The changes recommended to the Senate in this report will move campaign expenditure reform a long way on the road to giving all federal candidates equal access to the media and removing an inequality which grows larger with each succeeding election.

But if we are really to neutralize the power of money to distort the election process; if public office is to be within the reach of not the rich alone; if we are to eliminate the influence, real or imagined, of the large contributor; if we are to remove the cynicism with which young and old alike view today's fund raising efforts by political parties and candidates; if we are to make our political campaigns a testing ground for ideas and issues rather than exercises for our money-raisers—then I believe we must eliminate our dependence on private contributions.

Even with all the revisions embodied in S. 382 we will not have gone far enough. It is the source of the money which damages public confidence and suggests the likelihood of favor and influence. Remove the private money and we remove this cause for the cynicism and doubts now so hurtful to public confidence in politics.

With the enormous increase in campaign costs in recent years—electronic media charges rose 70 per cent from 1964 to 1968—the press repeatedly has called attention to what it pleases to call the “scandal” of campaign financing. And while the so-called influence of the large contributor may be at times more fancied than real, every modern administration's list of ambassadors has contained the names of campaign contributors whose principal distinction appeared to be the size of the contribution.

Most recently, columnist Charles Bartlett described what he believes to be the influence of the insurance industry contributors on administration policy on no-fault automobile insurance. The text is printed below.

Proposals to replace private campaign contributions with public funds are not new. President Johnson made such a recommendation in 1967. A year earlier, the Congress actually passed the Presidential Election Campaign Fund Act, permitting federal taxpayers to designate $1 of their income tax payments to a fund for presidential campaigns.

Taking private money out of the political picture is the ultimate reform. It is the one best way to insure the integrity of our political system. I would hope that the Rules and Finance Committees, having jurisdiction in this area, will review carefully S. 1039 and any other measures pertinent to this issue, with this end in sight.

NO-FAULT CAR INSURANCE HITS BARRICADE OF POLITICS

WASHINGTON.—Proving once more that the public will gain when the Treasury replaces the interests in paying the costs of presidential elections, the White House has been extremely timid on the issue of auto insurance reform.

A recent survey taken for the President showed that few things irri-date the consumer more than auto insurance. But Nixon forfeited his great chance to play the reformer because he could not induce the insurance magnates who backed him to go along.

The insurance episode is a classic instance of how campaign giving distorts the White House viewpoint. It is a cleancut example because Secretary John Volpe and his aides from the Transportation Department came to the White House after studying the problem for three years, with a firm proposal for quick national enactment of a no-fault insurance plan.

This move is offensive to two which heavily supported Nixon in 1968 and will be needed in 1972. The plaintiff lawyers, now claiming 35 percent of the total payments made to auto accident victims, naturally do not like. Nor do many insurance executives, who fear they will face intensified competition if auto insurance is simplified.

These groups were well represented in the White House deliberations conducted by Peter Flanigan, an aide from Wall Street. The Commerce Department had done no real study of the situation but Secretary Maurice Stans, who raised $36 million for Nixon's election, formally recommended minimal federal intervention.

This same thought emerged from a series of White House meetings to which Flanigan invited top insurance executives. Virtually the whole industry is committed to the notion that no-fault insurance is the next step. But if the federal hand can be kept out of it, another generation may pass before the reform spreads across the country.

Only 45 percent of those 500,000 a year who are killed or seriously injured in accidents receive any benefits. Total recoveries from auto insurance equal only one-fifth of the losses from auto accidents. One out of every five cars on the road is not insured at all.

No-fault laws have been introduced in 21 states where they lie waiting to be interred by legislators who are lawyers and insurance men. Even the Massachusetts' law, first in the nation, was softened to leave generous opportunities for the damage lawyers.

Nixon's deference to the states, in the face of these circumstances, was heavily inspired by deference to his contributors. This is why the public must soon take the financial burden of presidential campaigns out of private hands.

PHILIP A. HART.

INDIVIDUAL VIEWS OF MR. COTTON

I voted to order reported from our Committee on Commerce the bill, S. 382, as amended. Nevertheless, I feel compelled to file these individual views on this reported bill so as to make it clear that my vote to report to order the measure reported will not be construed as supporting all of its provisions. On the contrary, I have grave personal reservations as to whether this reported bill will meet effectively its stated purpose and whether in its present form it will prove to be enforceable. Quite frankly, I fear that S. 382, as reported by our Committee on Commerce, may prove to be a legislative proposal flying under false colors.

As reflected in its title, the purpose of S. 382 is "To promote fair practices in the conduct of election campaigns for Federal political offices, and for other purposes." Certainly, the principal objective of any legislative measure of this type should be fair and competitive elections, restoring the credibility of the elective process which has become so eroded in recent years in the eyes of the public. It is my personal view that the only way this objective can be obtained realistically is through periodic public disclosure and publication of all campaign contributions and expenditures both before and after an election, without the sham of creating artificial and arbitrary spending ceilings or limitations on contributions. Such a disclosure mechanism would insure that the voter would be fully informed in this regard prior to an election and afford him the opportunity to cast his ballot accordingly. Moreover, any such public disclosure requirements should be coupled with strict sanctions against a candidate for any violations. The prospect we face with S. 382 is that associated with the lack of effective and enforceable limits on contributions and spending, which almost invariably serves to drive candidates and political committees underground.

This view is supported by the 1970 report of The Twentieth Century Fund Task Force on financing congressional campaigns, entitled Electing Congress—The Financial Dilemma—which noted in part the following:

We believe that full public disclosure and publication of all campaign contributions and expenditures are the best disciplines available to make campaigns honest and fair.¹

* * * * *

If there were full public disclosure and publication of all campaign contributions and expenditures during a campaign, the voters themselves could better judge whether a candidate has spent too much. This policy would do more to protect the political system from unbridled spending than legal limits on the size of contributions and expenditures.²

² Id. at p. 18.

We considered recommending a $5,000 limit on individual contributions even though it might not be fully enforceable. But since we believe one of the principal challenges of our electoral system is to restore its credibility with large numbers of the American people, we were reluctant to recommend anything that we did not think could be enforced. Moreover, we feel that unreported large contributions are much more of a danger than large contributions that are publicly reported.³ (Emphasis supplied)

In view of the foregoing, I would hope that the electorate will not look upon S. 382 as a panacea for election campaign reform, since I fear that this will prove not to be the case. I express this reservation since I do not believe that our Committee on Commerce, a recognized champion in preventing deceptive practices upon the American consumer, would wish to be a party to any such practice with respect to the American voter.

The late American historian James Harvey Robinson observed in the Human Comedy, "Political campaigns are designedly made into emotional orgies which endeavor to distract attention from the real issues involved, and they actually paralyze what slight powers of cerebration man can normally muster." I fear that S. 382, as reported by our Committee on Commerce, can only serve to compound this distraction and this paralysis.

SUPPLEMENTAL VIEWS OF MESSRS. PROUTY, GRIFFIN, BAKER, COOK AND STEVENS

INTRODUCTION

S. 382 as reported by the Committee represents another step forward in our efforts to develop meaningful and comprehensive legislation for insuring the integrity of the election process of Federal officials. In the 91st Congress an extremely limited campaign reform bill was passed just prior to the 1970 elections. In vetoing that bill President Nixon stated in part:

S. 3637 does not limit the overall cost of campaigning. It merely limits the amount that candidates can spend on radio and television. In doing so, it unfairly endangers freedom of discussion, discriminates against the broadcast media, favors the incumbent officeholder over the officeseeker and gives an unfair advantage to the famous. It raises the prospect of more—rather than less—campaign spending. It would be difficult, in many instances impossible, to enforce and would tend to penalize most those who conscientiously attempt to abide by the law.

We recognize that S. 382 as introduced and as reported by the Committee represents an attempt to write more comprehensive election reform legislation than the bill vetoed by the President last Congress. For that reason, we voted to report the bill, but at the same time, we recognize that a number of improvements will be necessary if we are to achieve our goal of enacting a workable, meaningful, and fair piece of legislation which will both insure the integrity of our elective process and restore public confidence in our political system.

Generally, the bill's weaknesses stem not from its innovations, but rather from its adherence to some of the undesirable provisions of existing law. The principal defects are as follows:

I. Inadequacy of partial exemptions to the "equal time requirements" of section 315 of the Federal Communications Act.

II. Unrealistically low spending limitations.

III. Unduly restrictive separate media limitations.

IV. Failure to consider legislation in entirety.

V. Unrealistic limitation on individual contributions.

VI. Failure to provide for an independent Federal Elections Commission.

(S1)

I. INADEQUACY OF PARTIAL EXEMPTIONS TO THE "EQUAL TIME REQUIREMENTS" OF SECTION 315 OF THE FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS ACT

S. 382 would create an exception to the equal time provisions of Section 315 of the Federal Communications Act of 1934 for Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates. The justification for this provision is that Section 315, contrary to its purposes, has inhibited broadcasters from offering free time and coverage to candidates. We agree that Section 315 has produced the wrong result, but its inhibiting effect is not limited to Presidential campaigns. In the interest of increasing the electorate's accessibility to candidates and issues, Section 315 should not apply to any candidates for Federal office.

In Committee Senator Baker offered an amendment to the bill which, if adopted, would have exempted all candidates for Federal office from the equal time requirement. During the hearings held on S. 382 testimony supporting such an action was received from a number of sources. For example, in his testimony at the hearing on March 31, Deputy Attorney General Richard G. Kleindienst stated the following:

Several proposals have been advanced which could well have the effect of lowering the cost of these communications services.

First, it has been suggested that Section 315(a) of the Federal Communications Act be amended to delete the equal time requirement for Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates. Contrary to its purposes, Section 315 has had the effects of discouraging broadcasters from offering free time and coverage and of favoring the incumbent over the challenger. These effects have not been limited to Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates; hence, we recommend total repeal, which would benefit candidates for other Federal offices as well as those for President and Vice President.

Vincent T. Wasilewski, President, National Association of Broadcasters, in his testimony on March 5th stated the following:

We believe the capricious operation of section 315, however, makes it impossible for broadcasters to perform this public service (providing time in political campaigns) responsibility.

Dr. Frank Stanton, President of CBS, in his testimony on March 3rd, emphasized the importance of removing the inhibitive effects of Section 315 in the following manner:

Central to any measures calculated to strengthen the electoral process must be the improvement of the quality and quantity of information provided to the public about the candidates and the issues. The repeal of Section 315 is an important avenue to this end, since it would provide opportunities for greater contribution of free time by broadcasters and deeper treatment of the issues. Because section 315 requires equal time for every candidate for an office, however insignificant or frivolous his candidacy, the practical effect of the law has been to deny free broadcast time to major candidates or to force free time to be shared with fringe candidates. This, it seems to me, is a classic case of backlash on the public interest.

By exempting the Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates from the equal time requirements of Section 315, the Committee paved the way for increasing the electorate's accessibility to Presidential candidates and issues in Presidential elections. The same logic which led to this improvement in Section 315 compels one to provide an exemption from the equal time requirements to candidates for election to the House of Representatives and the United States Senate.

II. UNREALISTICALLY LOW SPENDING LIMITATIONS

In his veto message returning without approval S. 3637, President Nixon also stated:

The problem with campaign spending is not radio and television. The problem is spending. This bill plugs only one hole in a sieve.

S. 382, as introduced, represented an attempt to meet the President criticism by including spending limitations on nonbroadcast communications media, reduced rates for use of nonbroadcast communications media, strengthening of the Corrupt Practices Act, a more complete disclosure provision, and tax incentives to encourage contributions to political candidates. On its face, S. 382 did represent a more comprehensive approach for improving election campaigns. However, as with any piece of legislation which attempts to be comprehensive, a number of problem areas became apparent during the initial hearings on the bill.

Accordingly after the Committee met twice in Executive Session on the bill, it decided to reopen the hearings. An additional two days of hearings were held and testimony by Richard G. Kleindienst, Deputy Attorney General, among others, gave the Committee additional facts on which to base significant improvements in S. 382.

The first problem area addressed concerned the type of formula to be used for determining spending limitations in both broadcast and nonbroadcast communications media. Originally, S. 382 contained a formula based on the number of votes cast in a previous election.

In his testimony, Mr. Kleindienst made specific reference to the shortcoming of the formula contained in S. 382, as introduced. He stated:

. . . an appropriate formula for determining spending limitations is one which permits the candidates to reach all eligible voters. Every effort should be made to inform them of the candidates and the issues so that they will register, take an active part in primaries and vote in the general election. A formula based on actual voters in a previous election would limit today's campaign to yesterday's performance. Further, the formula used for the 1972 election would not take into account all persons eighteen, nineteen and twenty years old, who were recently enfranchised by the 1970 Voting Rights Act Amendments.

A formula based on registered voters similarly ignores the necessity that a democracy adequately reach all those persons who are eligible and who should be encouraged to participate in our political process.

Prior to Mr. Kleindienst's testimony, Senator Cook had requested the Bureau of the Census to provide him with information concerning their capability in developing a base which would take into account all eligible voters in a particular campaign. In response to this request, Dr. George Brown, the Director of the Bureau of the Census, appeared before the Committee during its second set of hearings. He assured the Committee that the Bureau had the capability to provide accurate estimates of the resident population of voting age of both States and congressional districts. The Committee adopted the Cook Amendment, basing the formula on the resident population of voting age rather than relating back to the number of individuals who actually voted in a previous election.

While this amendment represented an improvement in the formula to determine spending limitations, it was largely offset by the Committee reducing the other factor in the formula from 7¢ to 5¢.

As a matter of fact, it is interesting to note that spending limitations have been significantly reduced since the bill was first introduced. The following chart indicates how the proposed limitations would affect Presidential candidates in the general election:

	Original S. 382	S. 382 as reported
Broadcast.....	5 111, 878	6, 978, 150
Nonbroadcast.....	10 223, 756	6, 978, 150
Total.....	15 335, 634	13, 956, 300

Perhaps the most difficult aspect of this legislation is to provide an overall ceiling which insures that the electorate has full access to pertinent information necessary for making an informed judgment in a political campaign without enhancing the advantages for the very wealthy or the incumbent. This difficulty stems in part from the fact that we have absolutely no facts and figures relating to actual expenditures for political advertising on nonbroadcast communications media.

With respect to expenditures on broadcast communications media we do have some information. The Federal Communications Commission requested detailed reports from every broadcast licensee in the country in order to determine exactly how much individual candidates spent on the broadcast media during the 1970 election campaign. When Chairman Burch testified before the Committee, the Federal Communications Commission had only preliminary data because some stations had not yet reported. Nevertheless, this preliminary data does support our view that since we are dealing with an issue which is fundamental to having fair and effective democratic processes in our nation, the spending limitation should be increased so that it more closely relates to the actual experience (e.g., see table A following these views). In this connection it was commendable that the Committee adopted an amendment offered by Senator Cook to provide a cost of living increase formula for all spending limitations, thereby insuring that if a reasonable limitation is arrived at it will not become obsolete in the years to come.

III. UNDULY RESTRICTIVE SEPARATE MEDIA LIMITATIONS

Perhaps the greatest weakness arising from the spending limitations established in the bill which we have reported is that we have over-structured political campaigns. S. 382 establishes separate, but identical, spending limitations for the use of broadcast and nonbroadcast media, thereby denying a candidate the option of allocating the unused portion of one limitation to any other media form. Compartmentalized spending limitations ignore variances in media coverage capabilities and media rates throughout the nation, and they deprive the candidate of the flexibility required to cope with those variances. Such a provision is more likely to restrict the availability of information to the electorate than it is to reduce campaign costs.

We all recognize the dissimilarity of campaigns in one area of the country as contrasted to other areas of the country and Mr. Philip Stern, testifying before the Committee, perhaps best described the situation:

While TV and radio are the most effective way of reaching the voters, the conditions vary widely from one campaign to another, and they can also be the most inefficient and costly way of reaching the voters. For example:

For Congressional candidates in the largest cities (Los Angeles, New York, Chicago) TV and radio are so poorly targeted as to be virtually useless.

In the 4th Congressional District of Kentucky, the only relevant TV stations are outside the District—in Louisville, Ky. and Cincinnati, Ohio—so that in that District, TV is an unsuitable medium for reaching the voters.

Even in many statewide races, such as for the United States Senate, TV and radio are ill-suited.

In southern New Jersey, there are no TV stations; the only way of reaching voters is via Philadelphia stations at a cost per-thousand homes four times what it costs to reach voters in the San Francisco area.

In southern Connecticut (Fairfield County), the only relevant TV stations are in New York City, only four percent of whose viewers live in Fairfield County, so that the cost of reaching a thousand Connecticut homes can be 20 times as high as in the San Francisco area.

What's more, even when TV is suitable and available, not all candidates choose to place the same reliance on it.

As the formulae in the bill are now structured, one might assume that there is some basis for deciding that all candidates would spend an equal amount on broadcast and nonbroadcast communications media. Facts simply do not support such a conclusion. According to the 1969 reports by the Federal Communications Commission and Media Records, Inc., the following amounts were spent on broadcast and newspaper advertisements by Presidential candidates in the 1968 general election:

[In millions of dollars]

	Republicans	Democrats	Other (Wallace)
Television.....	9.0	4.5	1.1
Radio.....	3.6	1.6	.5
Total.....	12.6	6.1	1.6
Newspaper advertisements.....	1.2	1.2	.3

The 1968 Presidential race clearly demonstrates that candidates do not spend equal amounts on broadcast and non-broadcast communications media.

Therefore, in order to make spending limitations more realistic, it is incumbent upon the Congress either (1) to permit interchangeability between the two media limitations, or (2) to devise an overall limitation whereby any given candidate would retain enough flexibility to best reach the eligible voters of his State or his district. We should not over-structure the political process by artificial, arbitrary or categorical limitations.

IV. FAILURE TO CONSIDER LEGISLATION IN ENTIRETY

We were disappointed that the Committee did not view S. 382 in its entirety. As succinctly pointed out in the individual views of Mr. Cotton, the senior Republican member of the Committee:

. . . the principal objective of any legislative measure of this type should be fair and competitive elections, restoring the creditability of the elective process which has become so eroded in recent years in the eyes of the public. It is my personal view that the only way this objective can be obtained realistically is through periodic public disclosure and publication of all campaign contributions and expenditures both before and after an election, without the sham of creating artificial and arbitrary spending ceilings or limitations on contributions.

Mr. Cotton goes on to point out that the very real danger of having unrealistic limits on contributions and spending is the danger of candidates and political committees being forced underground.

There is definitely a close relationship between spending limitations, contributions limitations, and disclosure provisions. In view of that close relationship a more desirable approach by the Senate Commerce Committee would have been to consider all of these aspects and the relationships between them on their merits.

Unfortunately, the majority of the Committee took the position that contributions limitations, disclosure provisions, and all other provisions in Title II were within the exclusive jurisdiction of our Committee on Rules and Administration. For that reason every amendment we offered in an attempt to improve Title II was tabled and not considered on its merits, notwithstanding the fact that—

- the bill was jointly referred without any such limitation;
- the Committee did, in fact, adopt an amendment to Title II (see section 204, amended 18 U.S.C. 608); and —on similar joint referrals of other bills, such as consumer legislation, the Committee has not been so constrained.

Similarly, the Committee did not enter into Title III—Tax Incentives for Contributions to Candidates for Federal Office.

V. UNREALISTIC LIMITATIONS ON INDIVIDUAL CONTRIBUTIONS

The bill reported out of Committee contains a provision sharply limiting the amount any individual may contribute to a political campaign. The bill limits such contribution to $5,000 and tightens up existing law by precluding dividing up large contributions among a variety of political committees.

Setting aside for the moment the Constitutional questions, two major issues must be considered in regard to this provision; first, whether any contribution ceiling is appropriate, and, second, whether the $5,000 ceiling in S. 382 is reasonable.

We wholeheartedly agree with Senator Cotton that we must guard against enacting a law inviting evasion rather than adherence.

Assuming, however, that the provision would be effective, the question must be asked as to whether a $5,000 limitation is reasonable. We must note that this amount is identical to that enacted in 1925. At the same time, however, we must recognize that in fact under present law there is no limitation. Not only can an individual give up to $5,000 to any number of committees supporting the same candidate but also subsection 608(a) of Title 18, which normally places the limitation on individual contributions, goes on to read:

This subsection shall not apply to contributions made to or by a State or local committee or other State or local organization or to similar committees or organizations in the District of Columbia or in any Territory or Possession of the United States.

It is interesting to note that this definitive loophole was enacted by Congress in the early 40's. In all probability its enactment was required because the $5,000 limitation already had become unreasonable.

With respect to limitations on individual contributions, we believe that the preferable approach is to focus on the necessity for complete and honest disclosure. The Twentieth Century Fund Task Force has made the following recommendations on this issue:

* * * * *

We considered recommending a $5,000 limit on individual contributions even though it might not be fully enforceable. But since we believe one of the principal challenges of our electoral system is to restore its credibility with large numbers of the American people, we were reluctant to recommend anything that we did not think could be enforced. Moreover, we feel that unreported large contributions are much more of a danger than large contributions that are publicly reported. (Emphasis supplied)

* * * * *

We recommend that limits on the size of individual contributions to political committees be eliminated.

We recommend that individuals who contribute more than $5,000 in a year to federal candidates and political committees be required to file a report with a federal elections commission listing the date, recipient, and amount of all contributions (including purchases of tickets to fund-raising events), pledges and loans of $100 or more, and the aggregate total of all contributions of less than $100. Such donors should be required to certify that they have contributed their own money and that they will not be reimbursed in any way.¹

During the second set of hearings on S. 382, Senator Cannon raised this important matter with the Deputy Attorney General. Mr. Kleindienst responded as follows:

Every candidate for President of the United States in modern times, whether he is Democrat or Republican, has received substantial large contributions from individuals. I think they should be entitled to receive those.

I think it should be straight forward, and fully disclosed. Not under the auspices of giving $5,000 to 100 committees and having them concealed. I think full disclosure is the answer here.

If the American electorate feels a candidate for President is getting too much in large contributions from rich wealthy people, they can take that into account as to whether or not they want to vote for him. I think simplicity and straightforwardness is probably more important here than anything else.

We also would like to point out that violation of this $5,000 limitation on political contributions carries with it a fine of not more than $5,000 or imprisonment for not more than five years, or both. In view of this we would urge the Committee on Rules and Administration to carefully examine such provisions so as to insure that contributors are clearly on notice concerning the law. This is essential in order to avoid placing individuals in jeopardy or inadvertently in violation of the law without their knowledge. For example, amended section 608 of title 18, U.S. Code, appearing in section 204 of S. 382, provides in part:

Nothing contained in this subsection shall prohibit transfer of contributions received by a political committee.

It is not clear in our minds whether a contributor to a political committee and to a particular candidate could be held in violation of this provision if the political committee, without the knowledge of the contributor, transfers his contribution to the same candidate placing the unwitting contributor in violation of the law and subject to the penalty noted above.

Finally, while we do not care to get into a lengthy discussion concerning the constitutionality of placing limitations on the amounts that individuals can contribute to candidates of their choice, we take cognizance of the fact that our Committee heard scholars who believe that a strict limitation on individual contributions would violate the First Amendment of the Constitution.

For example, Professor Ralph Winter, of Yale Law School, in testimony before our Committee stated the following:

. . . Any limitation on spending in political campaigns, whether limited to spending for certain media or encompassing spending generally, violates the First Amendment. This applies to any limitation on the amount of money that a person can contribute as an individual contribution to a campaign.

It is my judgment that the First Amendment plainly prohibits the setting of a legal maximum on the political activities in which an individual may engage. This is the case whether or not the maximum is imposed in the name of equalizing opportunity or whether an actual discriminatory effect can be shown.

Even under a "balancing" test, such regulation is invalid because there is no countervailing interest—preserving the public peace, et cetera—to "balance" against the restriction on speech for the restriction is imposed not to preserve some other legitimate interest of society but solely for the sake of restricting the speech itself, for the sake, indeed, of affecting the political outcome. But that is precisely what the First Amendment is all about.

Sound trucks which keep people awake at 4:00 a.m. by broadcasting political messages can be stopped, not because of a governmental interest in preventing the message but because of the public interest in sleeping. No such non-political or nonspeech interests exist in the case of legislation regulating campaign expenditures.

We therefore urge the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration to carefully consider the effects of a patently unreasonable $5,000 limitation on individual contributions—not because a particular figure may favor one political party over another but rather because all of us want a fair and workable law which will be observed rather than be evaded.

VI. FAILURE TO PROVIDE FOR AN INDEPENDENT FEDERAL ELECTIONS COMMISSION

We have no doubt but that history will record that the most important part of this legislation relates to those provisions requiring full and complete disclosure of all contributions to candidates for federal office and all expenditures made by such candidates both before, during and after an election. The present law requires only minimal disclosure for either contributions or expenditures. As a matter of fact, the great reliance on a device of creating multiple campaign committees in the District of Columbia encourages only complete non-disclosure of both contributions and expenditures.

The time has now come to provide the American voter with all of the facts relating to campaign financing. In our democracy, it is ultimately the voter who must decide the worthiness of a particular candidate to serve.

During the second phase of the hearings on §. 382, Professor David Adamany succinctly placed the problem before our Committee:

For decades the Secretary [of the Senate] and the Clerk [of the House] have been filing officers under the existing Federal statutes. In these decades a pattern has been created of accepting reports without question and simply making them available to the public. I do not believe that a change in the statutory rules will change the deeply ingrained view that the Secretary and the Clerk are merely filing officers. An Elections Commission, on the other hand, because it is freshly created, would be more likely dramatically to alter the reporting forms effectively to obtain information. It would also because of its bi-partisan composition, be more likely to investigate thoroughly and report violations in the reports.

Professor Adamany went on to explain to the Committee the very real and inevitable problem in relying on the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House for supervision of an effective campaign disclosure law:

. . . the Secretary and the Clerk will find it difficult to take firm steps in gaining compliance from incumbent Senators and Representatives with whom they have had substantial contact during the session and who are responsible for their selection to their offices.

Every impulse, then, will be for the Secretary and the Clerk to do the minimum required by a new law. An Elections Commission, on the other hand, being freshly created, will more likely have the momentum aggressively to stretch to the limits of the statutory language in the search for a truly full disclosure of campaign receipts and expenditures.

The concept for an independent Federal Elections Commission is not new and it has broad based support. Among others, the Committee for an Effective Congress, Common Cause, and the Americans for Democratic Action have wholeheartedly spoken out in support of an independent commission. During this Congress, two bills, S. 1 and S. 956, have been introduced with more than a score of cosponsors, both containing a provision for an independent Federal Elections Commission.

During his testimony before the Committee, Deputy Attorney General Kleindienst confirmed the Administration's position that "an independent commission established by the Congress with appropriate personnel and appropriations would do a better job than the system that (we) now have." At that time, several members inquired as to whether the creation of such a commission would be constitutional. Mr. Kleindienst, in his letter to the Committee of April 8, pointed out that clearly a Federal Election Commission would be constitutional:

Finally, the Department is of the opinion that the establishment of an independent commission to administer the disclosure requirements would not constitute an unlawful delegation of legislative authority to the executive branch. Presently, reports and statements under the Federal Corrupt Practices Act (2 U.S.C. 244-246) and under the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act (2 U.S.C. 264) are filed with, and preserved by, the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate. The creation of an independent commission would not deprive either House of its constitutional authority under Article I, Section 5, nor would it involve a delegation of such authority. Rather, it would merely permit each House better to exercise its authority by acting upon the most informed judgment.

As we have previously pointed out, legislation restoring the trust and confidence of the American people is vitally important.

We therefore wish to underscore the recommendation in this Committee report urging the Committee on Rules and Administration to give serious consideration to the proposed establishment of an independent Federal Elections Commission. As an editorial appearing in the New York Times of April 27, 1971 pointed out:

* * * the G.O.P. members are emphatically right in preferring an electoral commission with its own staff over the growing Democratic predisposition to leave enforcement to the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate. These Congressional employees have not enforced the existing law; they cannot be expected to do any better with a new law.

The creation of an independent Federal Elections Commission responsible for full and comprehensive disclosure of campaign finances is perhaps the best way to achieve a goal and to show the American public that we have the courage to be fair.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, we are all determined that Congress should promptly pass effective, meaningful, and workable election campaign legislation. In these views we have cited some of the problems which are presently contained in the bill reported by the Committee. It should be emphasized that none of these, nor other problems which may be discovered, should indicate that effective and meaningful legislation is unobtainable.

We sincerely hope that our Committee on Rules and Administration will conduct hearings which focus on some of the problems raised in our views. All of us should accept the challenge involved in developing a piece of legislation which will restore public confidence in our elective system. We hope that the views expressed herein take us one more step toward that goal.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. GRIFFIN

In 1913 Supreme Court Justice Louis D. Brandeis noted that:

“Publicity is justly commended as a remedy for social and industrial diseases. Sunlight is said to be the best disinfectant; electric light the most efficient policeman.”¹

In today's era of instant communications, Brandeis' statement is doubly relevant.

The bill reported by the Committee makes significant strides in the direction of full and timely disclosure. It provides the current for the electric light as well as the light bulb. But, unfortunately, it does not assure that someone will be available to switch on the light.

What good is a reporting system if there is no effective agency to police it? As in the past, S. 382 would continue to provide that reports by candidates and political committees be filed with the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House.

As the Twentieth Century Fund pointed out in its 1970 report on campaign financing, the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House “do not have the authority, the staff, or the motivation to do anything but accept the reports that are filed.”

Furthermore, these agents of Congress, realistically speaking, are just not in a position to investigate charges of campaign abuse—particularly in the case of charges lodged against incumbent Members of Congress.

To leave the present regulatory set-up unchanged would surely invite public criticism that Congress is writing a law that would be nothing more than a paper tiger.

If one of the principal purposes of enacting reform legislation is to restore public confidence in the electoral process, then I submit that in-house regulation does not aid in achieving it.

On the other hand, there is widespread support for creation of an independent, bi-partisan (or nonpartisan) Federal Commission to oversee the spending and disclosure requirements. In 1960 the Citizens' Research Foundation published a report entitled “Money, Politics and Public Reporting” by Dr. Herbert E. Alexander. In the report it was suggested that:

There is much to commend the establishing of an independent agency patterned, for example, upon the Civil Rights Commission. The electoral-financial process is hardly more sensitive an area than that of civil rights, and the strong opposition to the latter's establishment was overcome. . . .

Certainly, the record of the Civil Rights Commission, particularly in the area of voting rights, provides an excellent precedent.

Since this 1960 report was published, support for the concept of a Federal Elections Commission has mushroomed. Both the Foundation's report and the 1962 Report of the President's Commission on Campaign Costs called for creation of an independent Registry of Election Finance.

More recent proposals have also called for such a commission with investigative as well as publicity functions. Two of the bills that were before the Committee—S. 1, cosponsored by Senators Gravel, Brooke, Javits, Mansfield, Moss, Muskie, Packwood, Pearson, Randolph, Spong and Symington, and S. 956, cosponsored by Senators Scott, Mathias, Hatfield and Humphrey—call for establishment of a Federal Elections Commission.

In addition, other organizations, such as the National Committee for an Effective Congress, have spoken out in support of the commission approach. In a statement submitted to the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct last December, the NCEC emphasized that “[e]ffective reform requires, at a minimum, the creation of an independent, non-partisan Federal Elections Commission insulated from and protected against the political pressures of the day.”

Similarly, the position of the Justice Department and the Administration is that “a commission would be insulated from outside pressures and would increase the likelihood of vigorous enforcement.”

Those who oppose establishment of such an Elections Commission say, in effect, that spending limitations, full disclosure and tougher penalties as provided in the bill will be enough to meet the mounting criticism against campaign spending abuses. But such an argument is unrealistic. While the tighter controls on spending and disclosure in the bill are essential, there is no glue to hold the pieces together in the absence of an effective independent, bi-partisan agency to monitor such activities.

Accordingly, while I recognize other deficiencies and inadequacies in the reported bill, including some outlined in the supplemental views, I believe the most glaring shortcoming is the omission of a Federal Elections Commission. I hope an effort to remedy this shortcoming will succeed.

ROBERT P. GRIFFIN.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. BAKER

In addition to the comments expressed in the supplemental views of Republican members of the Commerce Committee, with which I concurred, I would like to comment on four other points with regard to S. 382.

The first of these is the provision requiring that broadcast and non-broadcast media charge candidates for federal office no more than the lowest unit rates available to any other advertiser for the same amount of time or space during the same period for the forty-five days preceding a general or special election. While it is obvious that this provision is of considerable benefit to all candidates, and, while I can see that, with the limits on spending provided for in S. 382, it will not obstruct the intent of the bill to control the rapidly increasing level of campaign spending, I feel bound to say that I in the past have not favored and do not now favor the statutory imposition of the lowest-unit-rate concept. As I contended last year during consideration of S. 3637, in which a comparable provision was included, we are in effect establishing a discount for volume advertising for those who do not advertise in volume and are thus creating a discriminatory preference.

While I am not suggesting that my colleagues on the Committee have succumbed to the temptation to legislate in their own self-interest, the fact remains that we are in this bill setting by law the maximum rates which advertising media may charge us during our campaigns. The effect of this provision is to establish a public subsidy in favor of the political advertiser and I do not feel that it is stretching the point to call it rate-setting. Although I will no longer oppose the bill because of this provision, I feel that I must record my objection to the lowest-unit-rate principle and express my wish that we could have eliminated it from the bill.

The second matter I am concerned about deals with an amendment I offered in Committee dealing with racially inflammatory advertisements, and which was not accepted. During the 1970 campaign, the manager of a television station in my state conveyed to me his concern for having received an advertisement from a political candidate in a neighboring state which contained language that, in the station manager's opinion, was so racially inflammatory that, if broadcast, it could have incited mass acts of violence in his city. Upon checking with the Federal Communications Commission, we learned that, under present law (Section 315(a) of the Communications Act of 1934) licensees, having sold time to a candidate, are prohibited from censoring the material broadcast in political advertisements proffered by the candidate, even though the material may be designed solely to arouse the most base prejudices of the community against the opposing candidate. If the advertisement is refused, the licensee may be called upon to show cause why his license should not be revoked for violating Section 315(a).

It seems to me that there is no public interest in requiring licensees to broadcast racially inflammatory material simply because such material is contained in the political commercials of a candidate for public office. The amendment which I have proposed would permit a licensee to refuse to broadcast such material subject to the safeguard that the licensee would be liable for damages to a candidate for such refusal if it can be shown that the refusal was prompted by considerations other than concern for public health, safety and welfare. I feel strongly that such an amendment to S. 382 is necessary to prevent situations such as that which I mentioned above and others which may occur in future campaigns around the country.

The third point I wish to raise also deals with an amendment which I raised in Committee and which was not accepted. The amendment would prohibit the withholding or deduction of any funds from an employee's salary, dues, fees, assessments or other obligations for the purpose of accumulating a fund from which political contributions may be made by the withholding organization. This prohibition would apply to any employer or labor organization and it would extend to the acceptance by a candidate for federal office or a political committee of such a contribution. The penalty for violating the prohibition would be a fine of not more than $1000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

It is a common practice for employers and labor unions to withhold a certain amount from an employee's salary or a member's dues for the purpose of influencing political campaigns. Whether or not this practice is followed with the consent of the employee or the union member is, I believe, irrelevant. The fact is that, in such situations, the individual is subjected to considerable and often intense pressure to consent to making an indirect political contribution which he may not want to make and over the direction of which he has no direct control. I believe very strongly that every citizen of this country ought to be encouraged to make political contributions, no matter how small, to the candidate or the party of his choice. But he ought to be able to do this with full knowledge and control of who that contribution goes to and when. I do not see how the Congress can in good faith consider a far-reaching bill such as S. 382 which contains very strict disclosure provisions as well as limits on contributions and limits on spending, without correcting at the same time one of the political practices in the country which is so inherently subject to abuse.

The fourth point that I would like to mention in these additional views also deals with an amendment which I offered in Committee and which was not accepted. That amendment goes to another aspect of Title II of the bill which, like the amendment I discussed above, I feel is necessary to effective campaign reform legislation. The amendment would put a limit on the amount that a candidate or his immediate family could contribute to his own campaign. S. 382 as reported by the Committee contains limitations on contributions by individuals and limitations on spending on advertising media. To intentionally omit a limitation on the amount that candidates can contribute from their own personal funds to their own campaigns would, in my opinion, be a loophole of the most heroic proportions.

I would like to reiterate that I feel that S. 382 is a promising start. I would hope, however, that the changes which are detailed in our supplemental views and those which I mentioned above will be given careful consideration on the floor and will be accepted before the bill is passed by the Senate. I think that with such changes, the measure will become a landmark law in our efforts to reform and correct abuses in the electoral process.

HOWARD H. BAKER, JR.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. STEVENS

I have joined in voting to report S. 382 despite serious reservations concerning Sections 101(b) and 103(b) of this legislation. This section would require broadcast and non-broadcast media to sell advertising time to political candidates at the lowest unit rate available in the specified period before an election.

Thus, Sections 101(b) and 103(b) will mean that a candidate purchasing prime television or radio time or buying space in the printed media must be given the favored rate used by smaller broadcast stations, newspapers, magazines and other media to attract advertisers. Instead of limiting the amount of advertising time and space which can be used in an election, Sections 101(b) and 103(b) will mean that a candidate will be able to obtain much more broadcast time or advertising space because of the favored lower rate that would be imposed.

While the purpose of the bill is laudable, this section is nothing more than a giveaway, being adopted under the guise of a limitation on expenditures. On the contrary, because it will drastically expand the value of the political dollar, it will increase the amount of time or advertising space that a candidate can buy. Thus, the total amount of television and radio paid political time will be expanded which will jam the air media during an election period.

In my State of Alaska, Sections 101(b) and 103(b) will mean that small broadcasters and elements of the print media, which are trying desperately to provide our small population with modern up-to-date news and programming services, will have to pay the penalty of having favorable off-peak hour and space rates based upon high frequency utilization imposed upon them by political candidates. To survive, the media in my state will either have to do away with such rates and thereby lose a considerable portion of their income or be compelled to give politicians bargain rates during prime time or in advertising space which can be more profitably utilized for other purposes.

S. 382 was introduced in the Senate on January 28, 1971, by Senator Mansfield for himself, Senator Pastore, and Senator Cannon. It was referred simultaneously to the Committees on Commerce, Rules and Administration, and Finance.

The Senate issued instructions to the effect that when one of the three committees had completed its consideration of the bill and had filed its report with the Senate, the remaining two committees would be given an additional 45 calendar days, running concurrently, in which to file their respective reports.

The Committee on Commerce reported the bill, with amendments, and an accompanying report on May 6, 1971, whereupon it was referred, as amended, to the Committee on Rules and Administration and the Committee on Finance.

Public hearings were held by the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections of the Committee on Rules and Administration on May 24 and 25, 1971. Subsequent executive sessions resulted in the reporting of S. 382, with additional amendments, to the Senate.

Earlier legislation, while not so broad in scope as S. 382, helped to direct attention to the need for remedial legislation in the area of campaign financing.

S. 2436, which passed the Senate in 1960, and S. 2426, which was approved by the Senate in 1961, were based upon public disclosure of political contributions and expenses.

In 1967, the Senate passed S. 1880, which provided for full public reporting of campaign finances and offered an alternative tax credit or tax deduction to encourage citizens to support candidates and political parties of their choice. However, the bill was not acted upon by the House of Representatives.

In the 91st Congress, S. 734 was reported to the Senate on July 15, 1970, but no action was taken. That measure also required detailed, complete disclosure of all campaign finances in all elections by all candidates and political committees.

S. 382, the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, is a comprehensive bill which proposes sweeping changes in Federal election laws and practices.

As introduced originally, the bill contained three titles: Title I—Amendments to the Communications Act of 1934 and limitations on expenditures for broadcast and nonbroadcast media; title II—Criminal code amendments and disclosure provisions; and title III—Provisions for an alternative tax credit or deduction for political contributions.

The Committee on Rules and Administration divided title II into two parts and renumbered the titles. Title II of S. 382 now contains criminal code amendments, and title III now contains disclosure provisions. The title on tax incentives was renumbered from III to IV.

PURPOSE OF S. 382

In its report on S. 382, dated May 6, 1971 (S. Rept. 92-96) the Committee on Commerce described the purposes of title I as follows:

The purpose of title I is twofold. It attempts to give candidates for public office greater access to the media so that they may better explain their stand on issues, and thereby more fully and completely inform the voters.

Second, it attempts to halt the spiraling cost of campaigning for public office. Voters' Time, a report of the Twentieth Century Fund Commission on Campaign Costs in the Electronic Era, eloquently demonstrated this fact. This problem seems to be rapidly increasing.

To accomplish its purpose, title I, as amended, would do the following:

1. Make the equal opportunities requirement of section 315 (a) of the Communications Act, as amended, inapplicable to the use of broadcast facilities by legally qualified candidates for President and Vice President in primary and general election campaigns.

2. Require that broadcast licensees charge legally qualified candidates for any public office no more than their lowest unit rate during the 45 days before a primary election, and 60 days preceding a general or special election.

3. Establish reasonable and adequate limitations on the amount of money that may be spent for use of the broadcast media and nonbroadcast media by or on behalf of legally qualified candidates for the offices of President, Vice President, United States Senator or Representative, Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress (Federal elective office) in primary, general, and special elections.

4. Require that 45 days before a primary election and 60 days before a general election, any person who charges a legally qualified candidate for the office of President, Vice President, United States Senator or Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner (Federal elective office), for space in the nonbroadcast communications media (newspapers, magazine, and other periodical publications and billboard facilities), do so at the lowest unit rate charged others for the same amount of space.

5. Enable the States by law to adopt spending limitations in the broadcast media for candidates for State and local office.

Title II sets forth the changes to the United States Code adopted in committee and necessary for the meaningful and effective enforcement of the "Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971." In some instances, language in the definitions of the Criminal Statute is not repeated in the definitions as they appear in title III, which sets forth disclosure provisions.

For example, title 18 definitions of "contribution" and "expenditure" provide an exception for loans by a national or State bank, but these exceptions are not restated in the same definitions of title III of the bill.

Loans to candidates or to political committees have recently been interpreted as contributions or expenditures. This amendment is intended to eliminate that construction so as to permit national and State banks to make loans pursuant to applicable banking laws and regulations. But, candidates and political committees receiving loans for political purposes would be required to report them as required by the provisions of title III.

In consideration of substantial, almost unanimous, testimony rejecting limitations upon contributions, section 608 of title 18, United States Code, is deleted from the bill and its repeal from the law is recommended.

Other sections of title II bring the District of Columbia and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, as well as U.S. territories and possessions, within the scope of the bill, clarify the period of time during which contributions by Government contractors would be prohibited, and impose new restrictions upon any business regulated by the Civil Aeronautics Board, the Federal Communications Commission, or the Interstate Commerce Commission, in the extension of credit to candidates or political committees.

Title III represents a complete revision of the law governing public reporting of political finances. Disclosure, if it is to be effective, must mean total disclosure, and therefore the committee has sought to reach every kind of political activity. Every phase of the nominating process—preference primaries, conventions, primaries, runoffs, special and general elections, even the election of delegates to a constitutional convention—is brought within the specific coverage of this measure. Every candidate for nomination or election to Federal elective office, including the offices of President, Vice President, Senator, Representative, Delegate or Resident Commissioner, is brought within the scope of the bill; and political committees, whether national or local, so long as they individually accept contributions or make expenditures in an aggregate amount exceeding $1,000 during a calendar year, are covered.

Political committees must be properly organized, registered, and authorized to act. All political committees, convention committees, candidates, independent individuals, and regulated businesses under certain circumstances, would be required to file detailed, verified, statements with the Comptroller General of the United States and with clerks of the U.S. district courts.

The Comptroller General and, to a lesser extent, the U.S. district court clerks, are required to provide comprehensive categorical data on political committees, candidates, contributors, contributions and expenditures, for each and every phase of the electoral process, in the public interest.

Title IV offers to contributors an opportunity to claim a modest tax credit or tax deduction for a political contribution to a candidate or a political committee supporting the candidate. It is anticipated that taxpayers in lower income brackets would prefer a tax credit over a deduction and that, conversely, higher income citizens would prefer the alternative tax deduction.

The Secretary of the Treasury would be required to prescribe new income tax forms to allow these tax benefits to be claimed. A tax credit or deduction for a political contribution is intended to encourage greater participation in the elective process without placing the entire burden upon the Federal Government to underwrite the cost of political campaigns as would be the case if direct appropriations were to be taken from the Treasury to finance candidates for Federal office.

RULES COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS

The Committee on Rules and Administration approved several amendments to the bill, S. 382, as reported by the Commerce Committee. Some of the amendments are substantive and some are merely for the purpose of perfecting the text for consistency or conformity.

The amendments are discussed as they relate to the various titles and sections of the bill, as follows:

Title I, S. 382

(a) Section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 was amended so as to exclude all candidates for Federal elective office, including candidates for the Senate and House of Representatives as well as candidates for President and Vice President of the United States from the licensee's equal time obligation.

Included within that amendment is language which is intended to afford to a Federal candidate "maximum flexibility in the choice of program format." The intent of that language is to give discretion to a candidate in the choice of program format when time is offered by a broadcaster to any of the candidates for that office.

There was agreement between Deputy Attorney General Richard G. Kleindienst and representatives of the broadcasting industry that the requirement of section 315 of the Federal Communications Act inhibited broadcasters from giving free time to political candidates.

The Senate Commerce Committee, recognizing this inhibition, exempted Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates from the equal time requirement. In testimony before that committee, representatives of the three major television networks assured the committee that candidates would be given maximum flexibility with respect to program format.

The Committee on Rules and Administration extended the exemption as to the equal time requirement to include all candidates for Federal office. This extension was recommended by the Deputy Attorney General and by individual broadcasters who testified before the committee. Specifically, the exemption from the equal time requirement will apply to any broadcaster if Federal candidates are given the maximum flexibility in the choice of program format.

(b) Doubt was expressed concerning the status of a "runoff" primary election to determine the nominee of a political party. Since a "runoff" or second primary is, in a sense, a continuation of the nominating process, it was contemplated that no special reference to a "runoff" would be required. However, in consideration of differences in State laws governing primary election processes, the Committee accepted an amendment to the bill so as to show a "runoff" election as a separate and distinct election from all others and as deserving of all of the rights and privileges of any other kind of election. This new definition of "election" is carried, where necessary, throughout the entire text of the bill.

(c) The Committee adopted a two-fold amendment to title I of the bill which would, in essence, provide for interchangeability of the expenditure sums which would be permitted in the bill by or on behalf of a candidate for broadcast or nonbroadcast media. The bill, as reported from the Commerce Committee, sets a limitation for broadcast media of five cents multiplied by the estimate of resident population of voting age for the particular Federal office sought, and a separate but identical limitation for nonbroadcast media.

This Rules Committee amendment would permit a candidate to spend for broadcast media any unexpended balance of the amount he would be permitted to spend for nonbroadcast media and, conversely, to expend for nonbroadcast media any unexpended balance of the amount he would be permitted to spend for broadcast media. In essence, the amendment permits complete interchangeability of allowable expenses, pursuant to applicable formulae, for either broadcast or nonbroadcast media in the discretion of the candidate, or ten cents per eligible voter.

The purpose of the amendment is to insure that no candidate for Federal elective office is disadvantaged by the particular structure of the spending limitations as they apply to the office he seeks.

The Committee heard testimony from the Deputy Attorney General, representatives of the broadcasting industry, and individual Senators to the effect that campaign situations vary from one part of the country to the other. Candidates for Congress in New York City, for example, may find that television and radio time is simply not available for their campaigns. Therefore, those candidates would be required to spend more on newspaper advertisements, magazine advertisements, and billboard facilities. Conversely, candidates in rural areas having weekly newspapers and a widely diffused electorate, may be required to rely on television and radio facilities located in neighboring states. Those candidates may be required to devote most of their campaign funds to broadcast facilities.

Therefore, the Committee adopted the amendment permitting a candidate to use his full allowances for broadcast communications media or nonbroadcast communications media at his discretion.

Title II, S. 382

(a) The term "runoff" is included within the definition of an "election" in order to reflect the Committee's amendment discussed immediately above.

(b) In order to provide fullest contemplated coverage to this proposed legislation, an amendment was approved to include within the definitions of the terms "election," "contribution" and "expenditure," the election of delegates to a United States Constitutional Convention.

(c) In 1971, indictments were sought against certain banks because of an interpretation of existing law to the effect that a loan to a candidate or political committee was tantamount to a contribution or expenditure prohibited by section 610 of title 18 of the United States Code.

Testimony received from witnesses was unanimously in favor of the granting of loans by national or State banks if such loans were made pursuant to applicable banking rules and regulations. This means that a bank should exercise sound business judgment in extending loan privileges to a political candidate or committee in the ordinary course of business and demand, where necessary, certain security or collateral in order to support a reasonable expectation of payment in due course. This amendment was approved unanimously.

(d) The term "State" was included in the definitions of the bill under title 18 of the United States Code in order to fill a previously existing gap covering candidates, political committees, and others with respect to the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and territories or possessions of the United States. Title III already provides for this definition and no perfecting amendment is necessary.

(e) Public hearings before both the Committee on Rules and Administration and the Commerce Committee brought forth almost unanimous testimony in opposition to any limit on political contributions. Deputy Attorney General Kleindienst said that limits on contributions were unrealistic, unenforceable, and probably unconstitutional as a restraint upon the right of a citizen to express himself under the First Amendment. The Chairman of the Democratic and Republican National Committees and of both Senatorial campaigns committees concurred in this opinion.

Further, the Committee is of the general opinion that the voters, having knowledge of all sources of contributions and the nature of all expenditures, and, having the privilege of demonstrating at the polls their approval or disapproval with respect to particular candidates or political parties for excessive contributions received or expenditures made, will serve as a deterrent to abuses or excesses.

The $5,000 limitation provision is therefore deleted from S. 382, and section 608 of title 18, United States Code, would be repealed.

(f) The Committee approved an amendment to prohibit, under title 18, United States Code, chapter 29, the extension of credit to candidates for Federal office or political committees supporting them by any business regulated by the Civil Aeronautics Board, the Federal Communications Commission, or the Interstate Commerce Commission, unless any debt created by the extension of such credit is secured by property, bond, or other security.

Further, the amendment would require any business extending such credit to submit detailed, periodic reports to the Comptroller General disclosing the names of the parties involved, the nature and extent of services rendered, and a description of the security provided. Additionally, a copy of such report would be required to be filed with the Department or Agency having regulatory jurisdiction over the business concerned.

Applying the same philosophy used for the amendment adopted with respect to bank loans, this amendment would enable certain Federal regulated businesses to demand, where necessary, certain security or collateral in order to justify the extension of credit.

(g) An amendment was adopted deleting from the bill a proposed prohibition of direct mail solicitation for funds from government employees. All witnesses reaffirmed that government employees have a right to contribute to the candidate or party of their choice. The Committee amendment therefore preserves the right of government employees to receive material inviting political contributions.

The existing prohibitions in present law making it illegal for government officers and employees to solicit contributions from other government officers and employees and the ban against anyone soliciting contributions on government property were considered to be a sufficient deterrent to the exercise of pressure on government employees to make political contributions.

Title III, S. 382

(a) The definitions of this title covering disclosure provisions carry, for consistency, those changes and amendments which have been previously covered by this description of amendments to titles I and II of the bill. They include the addition of a "runoff" election, the election of delegates to a constitutional convention, and a new definition listing the "Comptroller General" as the administrative officer responsible for receiving, compiling, assimilating, publishing, and performing the other duties and obligations previously given to the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House under provisions of the bill, S. 382, prior to the adoption of Committee amendments.

(b) With respect to the approval by the Committee of an amendment to direct the Comptroller General and the General Accounting Office to perform the duties set forth by pertinent sections of the bill, it is noted that opinion was and continues to be divided between the continuation of the offices of Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives to act as depositories for statements and for other purposes, and the creation of a Federal Elections Commission to carry out those functions.

Recognizing the probable need of a Federal Elections Commission to borrow, from time to time, competent auditors, accountants, and investigators from GAO in order to avoid the expenditure of unnecessary money for salaries during nonelection years, among other reasons, the Committee agreed that the office of the Comptroller General which already is charged with oversight authority over certain government contracts and spending, and which employs many experienced accountants and investigators, would be preferable to the offices of the Secretary and the Clerk.

Accordingly, the Committee approved an amendment which in every pertinent title, section, or other provision of S. 382, changes the language of the bill to reflect the Comptroller General in lieu of the Secretary of the Senate and/or the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

(c) Section 305 of S. 382, as amended by the Rules and Administration Committee, requires the disclosure by any business regulated by CAB, FCC, or ICC of any extension of credit to a political candidate or committee, with the Comptroller General. The report would be in addition to those required under other disclosure provisions of the bill and would set forth particulars governing names and addresses of the parties involved, descriptions of services rendered, amounts, unpaid balances, and a description of securities posted.

(d) A minor amendment relating to the requirement that specific information would be required with respect to contributions or expenditures aggregating $100 or more per calendar year was approved to change the reporting requirement so as to require specific data only as to aggregate contributions or expenditures in excess of $100 per calendar year. This change is intended to be reflected in every related or pertinent title or section of the bill.

(e) The Committee amended the bill to provide for the filing of a complaint with the Comptroller General by any person who believed that a violation of the disclosure title had occurred.

The Comptroller General would be required to determine whether there was substantial reason to believe such a violation had occurred, to make an investigation and, where justifiable, to refer to the United States Attorney General those matters requiring further action.

(f) In order to furnish maximum information to the public concerning campaign contributions and expenditures, the Committee adopted an amendment to that section of title II which governs the organization of political committees.

The amendment requires each political committee which solicits contributions to include on the face or front page of any literature or advertisement soliciting funds a notice that reports disclosing a detailed account of receipts and expenditures would be filed with the Comptroller General and that copies of such reports would be available at the purchaser's expense from the Superintendent of Documents in Washington, D.C. Such a notification will not only protect potential contributors, but will also encourage full participation by grassroots contributors in the policies and programs enunciated by national political action committees by insuring full knowledge of how individual contributions are spent.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF S. 382

TITLE I—AMENDMENTS TO COMMUNICATIONS ACT OF 1934; LIMITATIONS ON CAMPAIGN EXPENDITURES FOR NONBROADCAST COMMUNICATIONS MEDIA

Section 101(a) exempts the use of a broadcast station's facilities by a legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office in primary and general elections from the equal opportunities requirement of section 315(a) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended, provided that such Federal candidates are given maximum flexibility in the choice of program format.

Section 101(b) limits the charges made for the use of broadcast station facilities by a legally qualified candidate for any public office 45 days before primary elections, and 60 days before general elections to the lowest unit charge of the station for the same amount of time in the same time period. At all other times charges to legally qualified candidates could not exceed those made for comparable use of the station's facilities.

Section 101(c) provides that willful or repeated failure by a broadcast licensee to allow reasonable access or to permit purchase of reasonable amounts of time for the use of broadcasting stations by a legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office on behalf of his candidacy, shall be grounds for revocation of his broadcast station license under section 312(a) of the Communications Act of 1934, as amended.

Section 102(a) imposes a limitation on funds expended for use of broadcasting facilities (including community antenna television systems) in primary or runoff, or special, or general elections by or on behalf of legally qualified candidates for President, United States Senator or Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress. Funds spent by or on behalf of a Vice Presidential candidate are attributable to the limitation of the candidate for President with whom he is running. States may, by law, bring candidates for State and local offices under the broadcast expenditure limitations, subject to determination by the FCC that certain specified qualifications are met.

The section accomplishes the foregoing by:

(i) Defining "Federal elective office" to include the office of President, Vice President, United States Senator or Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress.

(ii) Defining "use of broadcasting stations by or on behalf of any candidate" to include not only broadcasts advocating a candidate's election, but also broadcasts urging the defeat of his opponent or derogating his opponent's stand on campaign issues.

(iii) Defining "legally qualified candidate" for the purposes of the spending limitation to mean any person who meets the qualifications prescribed by the applicable laws to hold the Federal elective office for which he is a candidate, and who is eligible under applicable State laws to be voted for by the electorate directly or by means of delegates or electors.

(iv) Placing a limitation on expenditures for use of broadcast facilities (including community antenna television systems) by candidates for Federal elective office of 5 cents multiplied by the estimate of resident population of voting age for such office, as determined by the Bureau of the Census in June of the year preceding the year in which the election is to be held, or $30,000 if that amount is greater. This limitation would apply separately to primary and general elections.

(v) Providing that amounts spent for the use of broadcasting facilities on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office shall be deemed to have been spent by such candidate.

(vi) Prohibiting the licensee of a broadcast station from making any charge for the use of his facilities by or on behalf of any candidate for Federal elective office unless the candidate or a person authorized by him in writing certifies in writing to the licensee that payment of such charge will not violate the candidate's limitation.

(vii) Requiring broadcasting stations and candidates to file with the Federal Communications Commission such reports at such times and containing such information as the Commission shall prescribe.

(viii) Permitting States by law to adopt limitations on expenditures for the use of broadcasting facilities by legally qualified candidates for any office of such State or political subdivision if the FCC determines that the State by law has specified a limitation upon total expenditures for use of broadcasting stations on behalf of the candidacy of each legally qualified candidate in such an election; and the amount of such limitation does not exceed the amount which would be determined for such election using the formula provided for determining the limitations upon candidates for Federal elective office.

Section 102(b) provides that in addition to the amount which he may spend under paragraph (2)(A) of this subsection for the use of broadcast communications media in connection with his campaign, a candidate for Federal office may spend for such use any unspent portion of the amount he is authorized to spend for the use of nonbroadcast communications media under section 103 of this title.

Section 103(a) defines "Federal elective office" to mean the office of President, Vice President, United States Senator or Representative or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress.

"Nonbroadcast communications medium" is defined to mean newspapers, magazines, and other periodical publications and billboard facilities.

"Legally qualified candidate" for purposes of the spending limitation on nonbroadcast communications media is defined to mean any person who meets the qualifications provided by the applicable laws to hold the Federal elective office for which he was a candidate and who is eligible under applicable State laws to be voted for by the electorate directly or by means of delegates or electors.

"Use of any nonbroadcast communications media by or on behalf of any candidate" is defined to include not only amounts spent for advocating a candidate's election, but also amounts spent for urging the defeat of his opponent or derogating his opponent's stand on campaign issues.

Section 103(b) limits the charges for the use of any nonbroadcast communications medium by a legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office 45 days before primary elections, and 60 days before general elections to the lowest unit rate charged others by the person furnishing such medium for the same amount of space

Section 103(c)(1) imposes a limitation on funds spent for the use of nonbroadcast communications facilities in primary or runoff, or special, or general elections by or on behalf of legally qualified candidates for Federal elective office. The limitation is 5 cents multiplied by the estimate of resident population of voting age for such office, as determined by the Bureau of Census in June of the year preceding the year in which the election is to be held, or $30,000 if that amount is greater. This limitation would apply separately for primary and general elections.

Section 103(c)(2) provides that a legally qualified candidate for nomination for election to the office of President may not spend a total amount for all primary elections held for such office in which he is a candidate in excess of the limitation provided by the first sentence of this paragraph.

Section 103(d) provides that amounts spent for the use of nonbroadcast communications medium on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office shall be determined to be spent by such candidate. Amounts spent for the use of nonbroadcast communications medium by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for Vice President shall be deemed to have been spent by the candidate for the office of President with whom he is running.

Section 103(e) prohibits any person making any charge for the use of any nonbroadcast communications medium by or on behalf of any candidate for Federal elective office unless the candidate or his representative authorized by him in writing certifies in writing to such person that payment for such charge will not violate the candidate's limitation.

Any person who furnishes the use of any nonbroadcast communications medium for the benefit of any candidate for Federal elective office at the rate less than the rate normally charged by such person for such use shall be determined to have made a contribution to such candidate in the amount equal to the excess of the rate normally charged over the rate charged such candidate.

Section 103(f) provides that violations of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine not to exceed $5,000, imprisonment not to exceed 5 years, or both.

Section 104(a) defines "price index" to mean the annual average over a calendar year of the Consumer Price Index published monthly by the Bureau of Labor Statistics and "base period" to mean the calendar year 1970.

Section 104(b) provides that the amounts computed under the spending limitations for broadcast and nonbroadcast communications media be increased yearly by the percentum difference between the price index for the immediate preceding calendar year and the price index for the base period.

Section 105 provides that the amendments made by section 101(b) shall take effect 30 days after the date of enactment of the legislation; and that the amendments made by section 102 to take effect on such date as the Federal Communications Commission shall prescribe, but not later than 120 days after the date of enactment of the legislation. The remainder of the title will take effect upon the date of enactment.

All reports shall be complete as of such date as the Comptroller General may prescribe, which shall not be less than 5 days before the date of filing.

The Committee fully realizes the practical difficulties inherent in filing absolutely accurate reports of expenditures and contributions fifteen days and five days preceding an election. In the heat of a political campaign, absolute accuracy is often impossible, yet the electorate is entitled to full and complete disclosure particularly just before an election. It is contemplated that all candidates and political committees will make every effort to provide as precise an estimate as possible if specific figures are not available.

(b) Each report shall disclose—

- (1) cash on hand at the beginning of the reporting period;
- (2) name and address of each contributor to committee or candidate of contributions in excess of $100 per calendar year together with details of amounts and dates;

- (4) name and address of committees or candidates from whom the reporting committee or candidate received or to whom the reporting committee or candidate made any transfers of funds with amounts and dates of transfers;
- (5) each loan to or from any person in excess of $100 per calendar year, with names and addresses of lenders and endorsers, amounts and dates;

- (12) the amount and nature of debts and obligations owed by or to the committee as the Comptroller General may prescribe;
- (13) other data as required by the Comptroller General.

(c) Reports required by subsection (a) shall be cumulative during the relative calendar year but where no change occurs in an already reported item, only the amount need be carried forward. If no contributions or expenditures have been accepted or expended during a calendar year the treasurer of a political committee or the candidate must file a statement to that effect.

Section 305. Reports by Others than Political Committees

(a) Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or expenditures other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in excess of $100 in a calendar year shall file with the Comptroller General a statement containing the data required by section 304. All statements shall be filed on same dates as those required for committees but need not be cumulative.

(b) (1) This section requires any business which is regulated by the Civil Aeronautics Board, the Federal Communications Commission, or the Interstate Commerce Commission and which furnishes goods or services to or for a candidate or a political committee supporting that candidate to file with the Comptroller General a statement disclosing in detail the names of the parties involved, a description of the goods or services furnished, the value of such goods or services and the nature of any bond, property, or other security posted as collateral for the payment of goods or services rendered.

(b) A copy of each report or statement shall be retained by the person filing for a period to be designated by the Comptroller General.

(c) The Comptroller General may relieve any category of political committees of the filing requirements of section 204 if such committee (1) primarily supports persons seeking State or local office and not Federal office and, (2) does not operate in more than one State or on a statewide basis.

(d) The Comptroller General shall prescribe the manner of reporting debts, contracts, agreements, and promises to make contributions and expenditures, in separate schedules and such separate statements shall not be included in determining aggregate contributions and expenditures until the amounts reported therein have been paid.

Section 307. Reports on Convention Financing

Each committee or other organization which (1) represents a State political subdivision thereof, or any group of persons, in dealing with officials of a national political party involving a convention to nominate candidates for President or Vice-President, or (2) represents a national political party in arranging for a convention to nominate Presidential or Vice Presidential candidates shall within 60 days after the end of the convention but not later than 20 days before the date for choosing Presidential and Vice-Presidential electors, file a statement with the Comptroller General furnishing in such detail as the Comptroller General requires the sources of its funds and the purposes for which the funds were expended.

- (4) to make all reports and statements filed with him available for public inspection and copying within 48 hours of receipt;
- (5) to preserve statements for 10 years except those relating solely to candidates for the House of Representatives which shall be preserved only 5 years from the date of receipt;

(6) to compile and maintain current lists of all statements;
 (7) to prepare and publish annual reports and compilations of (A) total contributions and expenditures reported by candidates, committees and others, (B) total amounts expended according to categories he shall determine and broken down to candidate, party and nonparty expenditures on the national, State, and local levels for candidates and committees, and (C) aggregate amounts contributed by any contributor shown to have given $100 or more;

(8) to publish comparisons of current total contributions and expenditures with those of preceding elections, from time to time;

(9) to publish such other reports as he may deem appropriate;

(10) to assure wide dissemination of statistics, summaries, and reports prepared under this Act;

(11) to make timely audits and field investigations concerning the reports and statements required to be filed and alleged failures to comply with the provisions of this title;

(12) to report apparent violations of law to appropriate law enforcement authorities; and

(13) to prescribe suitable rules and regulations to carry out the provisions of this title.

Section 308(b) provides legal recourse for persons who believe a violation has occurred. Action would be initiated with the Comptroller General and, thereafter, would proceed to the Attorney General.

Section 309. Statements Filed with the Clerk of the United States Court

(a) A copy of each statement required to be filed with the Comptroller General shall be filed with the Clerk of the United States District for the district in which is located—the principal office of the political committee, or the residence of a candidate or other person.

The Comptroller General may require the filing of reports or statements with other U.S. District Court Clerks where he determines the public interest will be served.

(b) It shall be the duty of the Clerk of the U.S. District Court—

(1) to receive and maintain all reports and statements required under this title;

(2) to preserve such reports and statements for 10 years except those relating solely to candidates for the House of Representatives which shall be preserved for only 5 years;

(3) to make reports and statements available for public inspection and copying within 48 hours following receipt; and

(4) to compile and maintain a current list of all statements.

No person shall make a contribution in the name of another person, and no person shall knowingly accept a contribution made by one person in the name of another person.

Section 311. Penalty for Violations

Any person who violates any of the provisions of this title shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than 1 year, or both.

Section 312. State Laws Not Affected

(a) Nothing in this title shall be deemed to invalidate any provision of any State law, except where compliance with any such provision of law would result in a violation of a provision of this title.

(b) The Comptroller General shall encourage and cooperate with the election officials in the several states to develop procedures which will eliminate the necessity of multiple filings by permitting the filing of copies of Federal reports to satisfy the State requirements.

Section 313. Partial Invalidity

If any provision of this title, or the application thereof, to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the validity of the remainder of the title and the application of such provision to other persons and circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

Section 314. Repealing Clause

(a) The Federal Corrupt Practices Act is repealed.

(b) In case of any conviction under this Act, where the punishment inflicted does not include imprisonment, such conviction shall be deemed a misdemeanor conviction only.

COST ESTIMATES PURSUANT TO SECTION 252(a) OF THE LEGISLATIVE REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1970

Section 252(a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 requires that any committee reporting a bill of a public character shall include in its accompanying report an estimate of the costs which would be incurred in effecting such legislation, or a statement of the reasons compliance with this requirement is impracticable.

Pursuant to that stipulation, the Committee on Commerce stated in its report on S. 382 (S. Rept. 92-96) as follows:

In accordance with Section 252(a) of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970 (Public Law 91-510, 91st Congress) the Committee estimates that the additional cost of the Bureau of the Census in order for it to discharge its responsibilities under the legislation would be an additional $100,000 for each fiscal year. This amount is the amount the Director of the Bureau of the Census informed your Committee is necessary.

It is impracticable for your Committee to estimate any additional cost to the FCC until the Commission adopts rules and procedures to carry out its obligations under the act. Similarly it is impracticable at this time for your Committee to estimate additional costs for the Secretary of the Senate, Clerk of the House of Representatives, and the clerks of the various U.S. District Courts under Title II of the legislation, and the Internal Revenue Service or Department of the Treasury under Title III.

The committee is not aware of any estimates of costs made by any Federal agency which are different from those made by the Committee.

The Committee on Rules and Administration has amended S. 382 by transferring from the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House of Representatives to the Comptroller General the duties in connection with the registration of and reporting by political committees. Title III of the amended bill would place in that Office the responsibilities with respect to registration of political committees and any reports required to be filed (1) by each candidate for Federal for Federal office, (3) by each person who makes contributions or expenditures in excess of $100 within any calendar year other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, and (4) by any committee or other organization involved in arrangement for conventions for national political parties.

The Comptroller General estimates that the additional costs which would be incurred by the General Accounting Office in discharging its responsibilities under S. 382 as amended would amount to $1.9 million annually, and that while the amount needed would vary somewhat from year to year, an average of that amount would be required for the purpose during each of the first 5 years the provisions of the bill would be in effect.

The Committee on Rules and Administration appreciates that the Comptroller General of necessity has had to base his estimate on certain assumptions as to the nature and scope of the additional responsibilities which the bill would place in his Office. The committee has no available information which would enable it to question the estimate of costs or to consider the same other than reasonable, considering the many intangible factors involved.

ROLLCALL VOTES IN RULES COMMITTEE

APPENDIX

The following pertinent information on (1) the constitutional power of Congress to legislate in matters of elections, (2) the history of Federal election laws, and (3) the existing Federal laws on the subject of campaign finances, is included as an appendix to the committee's report on S. 382.

CONSTITUTIONAL POWER OF CONGRESS TO LEGISLATE IN MATTERS OF ELECTIONS

Sources.—The following provisions of the Constitution determine and circumscribe the power of Congress to legislate on the subject of Federal elections:

Article I, Section 2.—The House of Representatives shall be composed of Members chosen every second year by the people of the several States, and the Electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislature.

Amendment XVII.—The Senate of the United States shall be composed of two Senators from each State, elected by the people thereof, for six years; and each Senator shall have one vote. The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State Legislatures. * * *

Article II, Section 1, Clause 2.—Each State shall appoint, in such manner as the Legislature thereof may direct, a number of electors, equal to the whole number of Senators and Representatives to which the State may be entitled in the Congress: but no Senator or Representative, or person, holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector.

Article I, Section 4.—The times, places and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives, shall be prescribed in each State by the Legislature thereof; but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations, except as to the places of choosing Senators.

Article I, Section 8, Clause 18.—To make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing Powers, and all other powers vested by this Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any Department or Officer thereof.

Article I, Section 5.—Each House shall be the Judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members * * *.

Amendment I.—Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances.

Interpretation.—In the domain of elections, the Constitution explicitly introduces the principle of checks and balances and mutually restricts the Congress and the State legislatures.

It leaves it to the States to determine the qualifications of electors voting for congressional candidates and the manner of appointing presidential and vice-presidential electors. Furthermore, the Constitution makes the States primarily responsible for laws relating to the times, places, and manner of elections for Senators and Representatives.

On the other hand, Congress is given the power, at any time, to make or alter such laws. Only the change of places of choosing Senators is left outside of congressional jurisdiction. Moreover, Congress is given the exclusive power to judge the elections, returns, and qualifications of its Members. In addition, the "necessary and proper clause" places at the disposal of Congress the fullness of legislative means to make effective the grant of specific powers (McCulloch v. Maryland, 4 Wheat. 316).

In the net result, the analysis of relevant constitutional provisions shows that Congress possesses a wide range of authority to regulate Federal elections. Aside from the powers reserved in this field to the States, only the first amendment would prevent Congress from establishing regulations that would infringe on the right of free speech and assembly.

HISTORICAL OUTLINE OF FEDERAL ELECTION LAWS

Early legislation.—The first comprehensive Federal statute dealing with corruption in elections was adopted in 1870, when the Enforcement Act (16 Stat. 44) outlawed every type of fraudulent and corrupt practice in connection with elections, specifically forbidding false registration, bribery, illegal voting, making false returns of votes cast, interference in any manner with officers of election, and the neglect by any such officer of any duty required of him by State or Federal law. These laws were held invalid, in part, as applied to municipal elections in United States v. Reese (92 U.S. 214 (1876)), but were otherwise found to be a constitutional exercise of the authority conferred by the Constitution with respect to the election of Members of Congress. (Ex Parte Siebold, 100 U.S. 371 (1880)). Despite these rulings of the Supreme Court, Congress in 1894 (28 Stat. 36) repealed almost all of the provisions of the Enforcement Act.

Developments from 1907.—A new period in the history of Federal regulations of national elections began in 1907 when Congress passed the Tillman Act, prohibiting national banks and corporations from making contributions in connection with Federal elections (34 Stat. 814). From that time on, campaign finances stood in the forefront of Federal election legislation. In 1910 Congress enacted a comprehensive statute which required all interstate political committees to report campaign contributions and expenditures, identifying as their source all contributions of $100 or more and all expenditures of $10 or more.

All other persons making direct expenditures in an amount exceeding $50 were also required to submit such statements. Substantial penalties were provided for the violation of the act.

In subsequent years, the statute of 1910 was amended, and in 1925 Congress passed the Corrupt Practices Act, which, with its amendments, constitutes the major part of the material of the existing Federal law dealing with campaign finances. The Tillman Act of 1907, in its original form, was included in the Corrupt Practices Act. But in 1944, the War Labor Disputes Act extended the prohibition of 1907 to include certain financial activities by labor unions. This amendment was made permanent by the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947, and the prohibition was further extended to apply to campaign expenditures, primary elections, and political conventions or caucuses held to select candidates for elective Federal office.

In 1939, Congress enacted "An act to prevent pernicious political activities," which was designed primarily to prohibit active participation in politics by Federal employees and the use of relief funds for political purposes (the Hatch Act). In 1940 certain provisions of that act were extended to include State and local employees paid in whole or in part from Federal funds. As passed, the later act included provisions limiting annual political contributions by individuals to $5,000 to any one political committee or in behalf of any candidate or in connection with any campaign for Federal election, and limiting interstate political committees to a maximum of $3 million in contributions or expenditures in any 1 year.

EXISTING FEDERAL LAW ON THE SUBJECT OF CAMPAIGN FINANCES

The Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925 was enacted as title III, sections 301-319, of "An act reclassifying the salaries of postmaster and employees of the postal service, readjusting their salaries and compensation on an equitable basis, increasing postal rates to provide for such readjustment, and for other purposes."

Subsequently, the Corrupt Practices Act was split into two parts. Sections 310-313 were repealed and enacted into positive law as sections 597, 599, and 610 of title 18, United States Code. The remaining sections of the Corrupt Practices Act appear as sections 241-248 and 252-255 of title 2, United States Code, which has not yet been enacted into positive law.

The Hatch Political Activities Act of 1939—"An act to prevent pernicious political activities"—was enacted August 2, 1939 (Public Law 252, 76th Cong.), and was subsequently amended several times. In the present state of the law, the original sections of the Hatch Act have become sections 594, 595, 598, 600, 601, 604, 605, 608, 609, and 611 of title 18, United States Code, and appear as sections 118i, 118k, 118k-1, 118k-2, 118k-3, 118l, 118m, and 118n of title 5, United States Code.

In addition, sections 591, 602, and 612 of title 18, United States Code, relate to regulation of elections.

SUPPLEMENTAL VIEWS OF MR. ALLEN

While I voted to order reported from our Committee on Rules and Administration the bill, S. 382, as amended, I feel that it is subject to the objection that it does not limit the overall cost of campaigning. While commendable in purpose and potentially effective in the limited area of its operation, it simply does not go far enough.

The bill would limit campaign expenditures in two categories only, (1) broadcast media advertising, and (2) nonbroadcast media advertising, such as newspapers, magazines and other periodicals, and billboard facilities.

The limit set is 5¢ for each person of voting age for such office and each of the two categories of advertising. However, the expenditures are interchangeable, so that actually a limit of 10¢ for each person of voting age for such office is provided, to be divided as the candidate wishes between the two categories.

In most cases, the limits set are much higher than those set by S. 3637 which passed during the 91st Congress but was vetoed by the President and his veto sustained.

In the President's veto message, he said that S. 3637 did not limit the overall cost of campaigning. Neither does S. 382.

He also said in his message:

The problem with campaign spending is not radio and television; the problem is spending. This bill plugs only one hole in a sieve.

Candidates who had and wanted to spend large sums of money, could and would simply shift their advertising out of radio and television into other media—magazines, newspapers, billboards, pamphlets, and direct mail. There would be no restriction on the amount they could spend in these media.

Hence, nothing in this bill would mean less campaign spending.

In fact, the bill might tend to increase rather than decrease the total amount that candidates spend in their campaigns. It is a fact of political life that in many Congressional districts and States a candidate can reach more voters per dollar through radio and TV than any other means of communication. Severely limiting the use of TV and radio in these areas would only force the candidate to spend more by requiring him to use more expensive techniques.

By restricting the amount of time a candidate can obtain on television and radio, this legislation would severely limit the ability of many candidates to get their message to the greatest number of the electorate. The people deserve to know more, not less, about the candidates and where they stand.

These same criticisms apply to S. 382 except that nonbroadcast media advertising has now been limited along with radio and TV.

The President seemingly favors an overall limitation on expenditures; and with this position I agree.

The bill places no limit on expenditures for mass mailings, for handbills, brochures, printing, WATS lines, telephones, postage, stationery, automobiles, trucks, telegrams, campaign headquarters (state and various local ones), unlimited campaign workers, airplane rentals and tickets, buses, trains (special and regular), campaign newspapers, movie theatre film advertisements, campaign staffs, public relation firms, production expenses for broadcasts, public opinion polls, paid campaigners and poll watchers, novelties, bumper stickers, sample ballots.

I feel that an overall limit should be placed on the total amount of campaign contributions and expenditures that a candidate may receive or spend.

I would feel that a limit of 10¢ or less per person of voting age for an office should be set for all expenditures not limited by the broadcast and nonbroadcast media advertising limitations.

Total contributions that might be received could thus be limited to 20¢ or less per person of voting age for such office. This limitation on the total amount of contributions would probably be more effective than merely adding the 10¢ or less limitation for all expenses other than media advertising. I would also feel that the candidate's own expenditures should be treated as contributions to the campaign.

I submit that there is even greater need to limit expenditure for nonmedia advertising than for media advertising. Media advertising is open and aboveboard and available for all to see. Overuse of media advertising might even be counter-productive if the electorate felt that the candidate was overspending in that field. The nonmedia expenditures would not be as apparent to the public but could be as effective and as expensive. It would be in the field of nonmedia expenditures that irregularities, or corrupt practices or abuses, if any, might be more likely to occur. A limit should be placed on nonmedia expenditures, and I plan to offer an amendment providing for such a limit.

JAMES B. ALLEN.

From the time when I was first elected to the Senate in 1958, I have been attempting to bring about comprehensive and effective improvements in Federal election laws, and especially those pertaining to campaign contributions and expenditures and the public disclosure of all political finances.

I have introduced and supported remedial legislation during each Congress since 1959. Some bills were passed by the Senate—S. 2436 in 1960; S. 2426 in 1961; and S. 1880 in 1967—but none was acted upon by the House of Representatives.

In 1971, S. 382 was introduced with recommendations much broader in scope than those of previous proposals. It affects the communications media, public disclosure provisions, and tax incentives. The Commerce Committee held public hearings and gave careful consideration to the bill in executive sessions before reporting the measure to the Senate. The Committee on Rules and Administration thereafter held additional public hearings prior to adopting additional amendments and ordering the bill to be reported.

In my judgment, the bill, S. 382, as reported by the Commerce Committee on May 6, 1971, and by the Committee on Rules and Administration, contains substantial and necessary improvements in the overall campaign procedures as they relate to candidates for Federal elective office and should eliminate the loopholes and weaknesses of existing law.

However, I believe some of the amendments go too far and will either create new outlets for excessive expenditures or impose inordinate reporting burdens upon political committees and certain regulated businesses. Accordingly, I am expressing my concern over and disapproval of particular changes in the bill, with the hope that perfecting amendments will be adopted by the Senate.

1. Section 101(a) of the bill was amended so as to exclude from the operation of section 315(a) of the Communications Act of 1934, not only candidates for the Offices of President and Vice President of the United States, but all candidates for Federal elective office, including candidates for the U.S. Senate and the House of Representatives.

The amendment may create too many problems relative to broadcasters who may wish to offer free time to congressional candidates, particularly with respect to candidates for the House, and especially in those States having large numbers of congressional districts. It is conceivable that a broadcaster could select candidates in certain areas and districts of a given State over those in other areas and districts for the privilege of receiving free time. Obviously, candidates not directly benefiting from such a choice could suffer damage because of an inability to obtain equal free time in their districts for adequate exposure to the public. Furthermore, the amendment provides that all such Federal candidates must be given "maximum flexibility in the choice of program format." This provision is ambiguous, vague, and uncertain in such degree as to cast doubt upon its intent and its value. Additionally, the bulk of testimony related to presidential candidates only.

I hope the Senate will give this amendment its careful consideration so that it may be either clarified and made definitely equitable in application or struck from the bill.

2. Section 102(2)(b) of the bill was amended so as to permit a candidate to spend for the use of broadcast media any unspent portion of the amount he is authorized to spend for nonbroadcast media, and section 103(a)(2) of the bill was amended so as to permit a candidate to spend for the use of nonbroadcast media any unspent portion of the amount he is authorized to spend for broadcast media.

In effect, notwithstanding the efforts of the Commerce Committee to set definite and distinct limitations on expenditures by a candidate for broadcast and nonbroadcast media, this amendment allows Federal candidates to double their purchases of television or radio time or, conversely, to double their expenditures for newspaper or periodical advertisements or for billboards.

The Commerce Committee made every effort to determine the amounts a candidate should reasonably need in order to obtain fair and adequate exposure to the public for broadcast and nonbroadcast media without overburdening the viewing public, and any change in those determinations especially a change which doubles the fair amounts, renders the limitation meaningless. Limitations originally set by the Commerce Committee were considered to be adequate for candidate exposure. Based upon 1970 election statistics, this amendment would permit doubling of expenditures and nullify the value of the limitation.

The Senate should either reject this amendment or reduce the total limit on expenditures for those media covered by the bill.

3. Section 206 of the bill was amended to prohibit the extension of credit to any candidate or other person on behalf of the candidate by any business regulated by the Civil Aeronautics Board, the Federal Communications Board, or the Interstate Commerce Commission, unless any debt so created is secured in full by property, bond, or other security.

Further, section 305 of the bill is amended so as to require that any such regulated business which extends credit must file detailed reports with the Comptroller General and with the department or agency by which such business is regulated.

This amendment was politically inspired. It reflects the fact that one of the National Committees carries a very heavy debt, some of which was incurred for expenses owed to regulated industries. It further reflects the economic fact that candidates who are not independently wealthy or supported by individuals or groups who have wealth, will not be able to post security in full in order to obtain credit for those kinds of services which are vitally necessary to every candidate in presenting his views and programs to the voters of this Nation.

This certainly must be referred to as the "rich man's" or "fat cat" amendment. Otherwise, one must be ignorant of the economic facts of life. Moreover, it implies that regulated industries have not and will not exercise reasonable prudence in the ordinary course of business; that credit may be extended without any evidence of ability to pay debts or reasonable expectation that debts will be repaid in due course. This amendment would bar or curtail the normal or bona fide use of a credit card unless security in full is posted.

Further, the amendment requires any regulated business which extends credit, even if security is provided, to file numerous detailed reports with the Comptroller General and elsewhere, which are not required to be filed by any other person or organization which makes a political contribution or expenditure to candidates or political committees. I point out also that the extension of credit, in the ordinary course of business, is not a contribution or expenditure within the purview of this bill, but, unfortunately, could be so construed if this amendment is accepted by the Senate.

In my considered judgment, the amendment is arbitrary and discriminatory as to candidates, imposes onerous and expensive accounting responsibilities upon regulated businesses, is unnecessary, and should be rejected by the Senate.

4. Section 302 of the bill was amended by adding a new subsection (f) which requires any political committee to include in any written solicitation for funds a notice stating that it would file with the Comptroller General a report showing a detailed account of receipts and expenditures, and, further, that copies of those accounts would be available to the public from the Superintendent of Documents at the cost of the person ordering the copies.

This amendment seems at first glance to have some merit because it calls for specific disclosure by committees soliciting funds. But, all political committees are required by section 304 of the bill to submit reports to the Comptroller General on the 10th day of March, June, and September in each year and also by the 31st day of January. Also, reports must be filed by each committee on the 15th day before an election and on the fifth day before an election. Not only must each of those reports be filed with the Comptroller General, but copies must be filed with the clerk of the U.S. district court for the district in which is located the principal office of the committee. Pursuant to the bill, each of the reports must be made available for public inspection and for copying at public expense. The Comptroller General must publish annual reports, special reports, other reports which he may deem to be appropriate and assure wide dissemination of statistics, summaries, and all reports prepared in accordance with the bill.

Therefore, it ought to be clear that the public would be provided with total information concerning all receipts and expenditures pertaining to political committees, without this additional burdensome, expensive, and superfluous amendment. I hope it will be rejected.

HOWARD W. CANNON.

SUPPLEMENTAL VIEWS OF MR. PELL

Basic reform of campaign finance practices in Federal elections is long overdue. Indeed, without effective reform, a further erosion of public confidence in the integrity of the Federal elective process is inevitable.

But confidence in the elective process will not be maintained or restored by campaign finance legislation that gives the appearance of reform without the substance. Such legislation, in fact, could well lead to increased public skepticism.

It is for this reason that I am particularly opposed to the liberalization of campaign expenditure limitations adopted by the Committee on Rules and Administration during the consideration of S. 382.

The bill as referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration limited such expenditures to 5 cents per person of voting age, with an additional 5 cents per person of voting age permitted for campaign expenditures in other media. The reported bill, by permitting a merger of these two limits, would allow in effect an expenditure of up to 10 cents per person of voting age for broadcast media campaign expenditures if candidates elect to concentrate their campaign funds on television and radio.

This combined limit is so liberal that it would permit a nationwide inundation of political broadcasts in the final weeks before an election. I believe the separate limitation on broadcast and nonbroadcast media should be restored.

Second, the committee adopted an amendment prohibiting the extension of credit to candidates or political committees by businesses regulated by the FFC, ICC, or CAB, unless the debt is secured in full by bond, property, or other security.

I believe this is an unnecessary and unwise provision that would result primarily in increasing the advantage already held by well-financed candidates for Federal elective office.

In application, the provision would even deny to a candidate the routine and normal use of a travel credit card. The affected industries, I believe, are capable of managing their extension of credit to candidates or political committees without the rigid and inflexible requirement imposed by this provision.

CLAIBORNE PELL.

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. SCOTT

The Committee on Rules and Administration has made some significant improvements in S. 382, the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971. As previously reported by the Commerce Committee, the bill contained several provisions which had originally appeared in S. 956, my own campaign reform bill. These changes dealt, for the most part, with political broadcasting and advertising. As now reported, S. 382 reflects some of the suggestions I offered to the Rules Committee in testimony on May 25, 1971.

First, the committee adopted an amendment to give candidates maximum flexibility in campaign spending by providing interchangeability between the broadcast and nonbroadcast expenditure limits. This new provision takes into account the great variances in style associated with political campaigns, not to mention geographical considerations. Furthermore, the adoption of this overall spending limit makes the bill less of an "incumbent's bill", since relatively unknown challengers would now be allowed greater, and essential, access to the broadcast media; and the new spending formula would not unfairly discriminate against broadcasters, since they could continue to receive their fair share of the market.

Second, the committee unanimously agreed to repeal the existing law which, at least on paper, has purported to limit individual political contributions to $5,000. This limit has proven totally unenforceable since it was enacted several decades ago. And, because of the law's unenforceability, it has seriously undermined public confidence in political campaigns. Accordingly, the committee felt, and I heartily concur, that full reporting and disclosure, rather than arbitrary and meaningless limitations on contributions, is a better way to curb potential abuses or excesses.

Third, the committee agreed to invest the Comptroller General with the authority to monitor campaign spending. As the chief executive officer of the General Accounting Office, technically an arm of Congress, he can use the vast resources of his Agency to provide the public with accurate and timely information as to "who is giving how much to whom and when?" I must note here, with some amusement, that former Senator Joseph Clark and I offered an amendment to the Election Reform Act of 1967 which did designate the Comptroller General as the custodian of campaign spending statements, instead of vesting such authority with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate. Not only did the Rules Committee reject the amendment during an executive session, but on September 12, 1967, it was defeated on the Senate floor by a vote of 30 to 56.

Now that the committee has decisively vindicated my earlier position, I intend to go one step further. While I do believe that the GAO possesses the requisite manpower and expertise, I am fearful that giving them authority to investigate complaints and to report violations might be burdensome and uncomfortable. Therefore, I hope to present to the Senate an amendment which would create a fully independent and autonomous body to handle this function. The GAO would still play an active and integral role in the information accumulation and dissemination process, but it would be denied actual decisionmaking powers at the command level. This power would lie solely with the new, independent body.

And finally, although I did not testify on this particular point, S. 382 now contains a provision setting forth a procedure by which citizens can file complaints against candidates if there is a suspicion of a violation. First appearing in S. 956, this section also permits actions against complainants (to deter frivolous complaints), and outlines the way in which a suspected violation is handled, all the way up to an expedited court hearing. This is the one provision in the bill that will enable the public to get a better look at the investigative process to be used against suspected violators of the law.

During my appearance before the committee, I also indicated that I had undertaken a study of political campaign debts to federally regulated industries. My interest in this subject is not new, but it was fired by the outrageous information which surfaced after the 1968 presidential campaign. Dr. Herbert Alexander, one of the Nation's leading authorities on campaign spending, outlined this problem in the March 1970 issue Fortune magazine:

True to the old political saying—that winners pay their bills, and losers negotiate—several of 1968's losers settled their debts by negotiation rather than by full payment.

The McCarthy campaign was about $1,300,000 in the hole by the time it ended. McCarthy's financial managers paid all bills of $400 or less in full, and negotiated settlement of larger debts—a step that created an awkward situation for some creditors. Many of these large bills—for hotel rooms, car rental, telephone service, and air travel—were tendered by publicly owned corporations, some of them in regulated industries. When a corporation agrees to settle a politician's bill for less than full value, it is in effect making an indirect campaign contribution. Even when the company is forced to take what it can get in order to avoid a larger loss, the settlement can be difficult to explain to stockholders or to various regulatory bodies. Some substantial amounts were involved in the McCarthy settlements. Various McCarthy committees owed A.T. & T. $305,000 for telephone service, but wound up paying only $75,000. American Airlines, which was owed $285,459, got $141,903.

Knowing that the Congress was likely to consider a campaign reform bill in 1971, and realizing that there might also be a few 1972 presidential contenders, I wanted to see if there was a way to control this problem. First, however, it was necessary to determine how widespread the practice was, so I wrote a letter to the General Accounting Office asking them to investigate:

APRIL 19, 1971.

HON. ELMER B. STAATS,
Comptroller General of the United States,
General Accounting Office,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. COMPTROLLER GENERAL: You may know that I have sponsored legislation this year to reform our archaic campaign spending laws. If this effort succeeds, the public is entitled, at the very least, to accurate and timely information pertaining to Federal candidates and to those who aid them.

In the interest of full reporting and disclosure of all forms of campaign assistance, direct or indirect, I am concerned that some of the industries regulated by independent agencies of the U.S. Government, by their billing procedures or other practices, may inadvertently be contributing to the election campaigns of Federal candidates. Specifically, I am referring to the air carriers regulated by the Civil Aeronautics Board, the wire (and perhaps electronic) communications regulated by the Federal Communications Commission, and the surface carriers regulated by the Interstate Commerce Commission. I recall several instances in which candidates who incurred debt with one or more of these federally regulated industries negotiated their debt downward to a substantially reduced figure after the elections. To say the least, such dubious practices on the part of these industries reflect a rather dull sense of business acumen, not to mention a questionable code of ethics. Furthermore, there is also the distinct possibility of setting bad precedent and encouraging corruption. Be that as it may, there remains the very delicate question as to whether or not this type of activity is in the public interest since it may constitute an unlawful corporate contribution. Equally important to the public is the fact that special treatment for political candidates, in this case an indirect Federal subsidy, has never been authorized by the Congress and the President.

Suggested remedies might include either actual or estimated prepayment of bills, special authority for limited periods of either free or reduced-rate services, provisions for allowing candidates to liquidate debts over extended periods with low interest payments, or perhaps the depositing of funds in special escrow accounts. However, in order to consider these or other suggestions, we will need a great deal more information than is now readily available on the subject of candidates' debts.

In its deliberations on campaign reform, I am hopeful that Congress will address itself to this particular problem. As such, I respectfully request you to provide me with a complete accounting of all outstanding debts and negotiated settlements associated with these or other industries under Government regulation in the course of Federal political campaigns from 1962 to the present. The year 1962 is no arbitrary choice. It will yield at least a 9-year history, whether or not a significant pattern emerges. It will also include the last two presidential campaigns and elections, each of which dealt acknowledged serious blows to our major political parties—the Republicans in 1964, and the Democrats in 1968. In other words, I seek to examine this problem in the clearest light and the fullest scope.

In my view, any industry which is federally regulated and/or federally subsidized ought to account fully to the public for all its undertakings, especially when political campaigns are involved. It is absolutely imperative that the public interest prevail in such matters.

I do not believe that federally governed industries willingly or intentionally aim to lose money on political candidates. Nor do I believe that there is any collusion or conspiracy on the part of political candidates to defraud federally governed industries. And as much as I realize that substantially more than 50 percent of all political candidates are unsuccessful in their bids for public office, I do recognize that there is usually no conscious or deliberate intent to lose an election.

Some may interpret my intentions here as either morbidly punitive or unabashedly partisan. In anticipation of such charges, I want to make it clear that I seek only to air the problem, which plagues virtually every candidate, and to assist in bringing about some solutions. I seek not to penalize past practices; rather, I see this as an opportunity to conduct an independent, nonpartisan inquiry which may serve to halt a potentially habitual and dangerous trend for the future. We must prevent the recurrence of any such activity. The integrity of political candidates rises far above party labels.

The few instances to which I referred in this letter are serious enough to warrant full congressional study with a view toward either corrective legislation or supplementary administrative regulation. Your assistance and recommendations in this effort will be most appreciated.

With good wishes,
Sincerely,

(Signed) HUGH SCOTT,
U.S. Senator.

By May 25, 1971, I had some feedback on my request, and I relayed it to the Rules Committee when I testified:

In the course of my study of campaign financing, I became aware of certain practices which are, at the very least, questionable. I, for one, simply do not ascribe to the old political saying that winners pay their bills and losers negotiate. To learn of the extent of such practices, especially as they relate to federally regulated industries, I have asked the General Accounting Office to provide me with a detailed study of all the outstanding debts and negotiated settlements since 1962. The results of the GAO inquiry haven't yet come in, but I have learned that the agencies supposedly regulating these industries don't even keep such records. At the minimum, we must require them to do so. My interest in this practice has generated a great deal of support from some sectors, the airlines in particular. They are usually the ones left holding the bag for unsuccessful candidates. I know of one airline which is carrying outstanding debts from political candidates and parties of over $1 million. Similarly, there are at least $1.5 million in outstanding telephone bills. In order to curb such practices, I intend to offer an amendment requiring any candidate or political committee to negotiate a binding contract, backed up by a bond or other security, with the provider of the service. Such contracts will also be included in the candidate's filing reports. For the public's protection, for the candidate's protection and the businessman's protection, such action is essential.

On June 3, 1971, the committee adopted my amendment to protect federally regulated businesses from incurring possibly uncollectable debts following political campaigns, and to place a financial obligation upon a candidate's campaign organization to back up such debt. This amendment, I believe, is a big step toward fiscal responsibility for political candidates. For the first time, common carriers will be given the enabling authority to prevent some of the abuses that were so prevalent in 1968.

Readers of my letter to the General Accounting Office, or my amendment, surely cannot, in good faith impugn my motives. According to the New York Times, however, a member of the Senate Democratic policy committee said that "a prohibition on political credit would benefit the 'fat cats' who can afford to finance a campaign on a cash-and-carry basis, at the expense of the poor party or candidate who cannot."

Am I to infer from that comment that the Senate Democratic policy committee favors, for example, free rides on airplanes for political candidates? Present laws, as I read them, clearly forbid such practices. A closer reading of my amendment will yield no "cash-and-carry" requirement; rather, as in the case of a bank loan, the debt created by such credit must be secured. That is all it asks of the candidate. Surely, this kind of requirement poses no hardships.

If, however, my colleagues wish to propose alternatives, such as properly justified limited or indirect subsidies to candidates, I am prepared to consider them. My bill, S. 956, does contain special reduced-rate mailing privileges for candidates, so the concept is not a new one for me.

Following the adoption of my amendment by the committee, I detected an oversight in the language which I hope to correct on the Senate floor. On a strict reading of the amendment, the use of credit cards might, inadvertently, be prohibited, especially when the service involved is for the candidate's personal use. I intend, therefore, to offer a clarifying amendment which would exempt their use. Other technical amendments have also been brought to my attention, and I intend to offer them at the appropriate time.

If the avowed purpose of S. 382 is "to promote fair practices in the conduct of election campaigns for Federal political offices," then I deem absolutely essential the retention of this amendment to prohibit the extension of unsecured credit to political candidates. There is no "right to rook" anybody in a political campaign. To incur debts and refuse to pay them simply forces others, against their will, to make up the contributions, perhaps in unintended violation of the election laws.

HUGH SCOTT.

SUPPLEMENTAL VIEWS OF MESSRS. PROUTY, COOPER, AND SCOTT

INTRODUCTION

S. 382 as amended should be promptly enacted. It represents effective, meaningful, and workable election campaign reform legislation which is long overdue.

The committee met the challenge involved in developing a meaningful piece of legislation which will restore public confidence in our election process. The importance of meeting the challenge cannot be overemphasized, because by its very nature, campaign reform legislation can become bogged down in partisan politics.

The committee carefully considered all parts of S. 382 and adopted amendments which made this campaign reform measure stronger, more workable, and more meaningful. As amended S. 382 will restore public confidence in the integrity of the election process.

We cannot afford to procrastinate. Democracy succeeds only where citizens have faith and trust in their Government and its elected officials. The turbulent 1960's should have convinced us all that millions of our citizens have lost faith in our democratic process. Prompt enactment of S. 382 as amended can be the most effective method for restoring to the public the confidence necessary for democracy to work.

The committee considered all aspects of S. 382. The deliberations were both long and thoughtful. We are certain that we speak for every member of the committee when we state that all of us intend to do everything humanly possible to see that during this session of Congress there will be a Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971. We are in complete agreement with the committee report and in these views we merely intend to provide some background and elaborate on the contents of S. 382 as amended.

BACKGROUND

The Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925 has probably been worse than having no law regulating Federal elections. It is full of loopholes and, in effect, provides neither the candidates nor the public with any guidance or information concerning the election process.

On its face it appears to require disclosure of campaign contributions and expenditures.

On its face it appears to limit individual contributions to $5,000.

On its face it appears to place an overall limit on the amount of money that candidates could spend in a campaign.

All of these, appearances of regulation, are an illusion. Campaign committees formed in the District of Columbia or any territory of the United States are not required to report contributions or expenditures made on the behalf of a candidate for Federal office. Individuals are not limited to $5,000 contributions because an individual can give $5,000 to 5,000 separate committees supporting the same candidate.

There is no overall limitation on the amount that a candidate can spend in a campaign because committees working on the candidate's behalf are not affected by the overall limitation. In fact, the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925 is a shame. It is a dangerous sham because over the years it has created an illusion of regulation of the Federal elective process. As an illusion it has retarded meaningful reform in an area that particularly needs reform. It has provided an easy excuse for preserving the status quo.

During the 1960's Congress made some attempts to reform our election campaign laws. For the most part those attempts resembled illusions more than reality because all the bills with the exception of S. 3637 in the last Congress were passed by only one body of the Congress.

In 1969 Congress did pass S. 3637 which would have limited campaign expenditures on radio and television. In vetoing that bill President Nixon stated, in part:

S. 3637 does not limit the overall cost of campaigning. It merely limits the amount that candidates can spend on radio and television. In doing so, it unfairly endangers freedom of discussion, discriminates against the broadcast media, favors the incumbent officeholder over the officeseeker and gives an unfair advantage to the famous.

The President called upon Congress to enact comprehensive and meaningful reform of our laws governing Federal elections.

Had S. 3637 become law, there can be no question but that the pressure for meaningful overall effective reform would not have today existed.

S. 382 was considered in part by the Commerce Committee. This committee considered the bill in its entirety and adopted a number of amendemnts. It is our judgment that history may record the enactment of S. 382 as amended as a most significant piece of legislation, because it goes to the very heart of our democratic process. The importance of this legislation compels us to discuss in detail the various titles of the bill.

TITLE I—LIMITATIONS ON CAMPAIGN SPENDING AND POLITICAL ADVERTISEMENT CHARGES

All elected public officials are keenly aware of the fact that political campaigns cost more today than they did in the past. Some have argued that the communications media is the primary reason that campaign costs have increased. Quite frankly, there is no clear evidence to substantiate this fact. It should be noted that enactment of S. 382 as amended will provide us with detailed facts and figures concerning all campaign spending. Title III of the bill calls for complete and full disclosure of all expenditures.

Title I was extensively considered by the Senate Commerce Committee. However, numerous witnesses who appeared before the committee contributed valuable testimony relating to the provisions of title I. Recognizing the interrelationship between title I and the other titles of the bill, the committee carefully considered all of the provisions contained in title I.

In general, title I represents an effort to lower campaign expenditures. This is an admirable goal with which everyone can agree.

Differences arise in determining which is the best method for lowering campaign costs without depriving the voter of the opportunity of making an intelligent choice. This latter consideration is particularly important if we are to insure against enacting legislation which favors incumbent officeholders who are generally better known and better able to "make news". We believe that title I as amended represents an effective and realistic way for lowering campaign costs. There are four distinct elements that are designed to lower the cost of political campaigns:

1. *Repeal of the equal time requirements of section 315 of the Federal Communications Act in order to encourage broadcasters to provide additional free time to all Federal candidates.*¹
2. The requirement that the communications media charge political candidates at the "lowest unit rate".
3. Limiting the reduced rate to 45 days preceding a primary election and 60 days preceding a general election, thereby encouraging shorter campaigns.
4. Limiting candidates' expenditures on the communications media while preserving campaign flexibility.

Section 315 Exemptions

The committee heard considerable testimony from broadcasters to the effect that the equal time requirement of section 315 of the Federal Communications Act inhibits broadcasters from providing political candidates with free time. Under the "equal time requirement" if a broadcaster grants one candidate free time, he must by law provide all other candidates for the same office with precisely the same amount of time. In most elections there are only two or three serious candidates. The views of those serious candidates are seldom heard on free radio or television time because a number of fringe candidates or potential candidates are waiting in the wings to demand precisely the same amount of time given to serious candidates. The net result of the equal time requirement has been "no time offered".

The Senate Commerce Committee recognized the inhibiting effects of the equal time requirement of section 315. The bill as reported from that committee repeals the equal time provision but only for presidential and vice-presidential candidates. Testimony before this committee clearly shows that the exemption should extend to all candidates for Federal office. In his testimony before the committee, Deputy Attorney General Richard Kleindienst urged the committee to extend the exemption:

We agree that section 315 has produced the wrong results, but these are not limited to presidential and vice-presidential candidates. They are equally applicable to candidates for other Federal offices. Every argument supporting limited repeal supports total repeal. The fairness doctrine enforced by the Federal Communications Commission will afford all candidates access to broadcasting facilities on an equitable basis. We urge total repeal of section 315.

¹ Senator Cooper wishes to note that in committee he voted against extending the repeal of the equal time provision to all Federal candidates.

The president of the Mutual Broadcasting System, Mr. Victor Diehm, supported the Deputy Attorney General's position.

* * * by its present language S. 382 would repeal the equal opportunity provision of section 315 of the Communications Act for presidential and vice-presidential candidates. Extension of this policy to all Federal office seekers would permit coverage of all serious candidates to a much greater extent than is now possible.

It should be pointed out that the public interest standard and all other applicable considerations bearing on a broadcast licensee stewardship of the airways always remain in full force. Abuse, if it should occur, could be readily redressed.

Stations freed from the threat of great swarms of candidates appearing for a variety of reasons would be able to concentrate coverage on a bona fide candidate to the benefit of the public.

While I feel complete repeal of this ill-named equal opportunity section of the Communications Act would be appropriate, certainly it should be removed at least for those offices with which this legislation deals—the Federal offices.

The committee heard testimony from the president of the North Carolina Association of Broadcasters, Mr. Richard Barron, reemphasizing the need for repealing the equal time requirements for all Federal candidates.

First, we agree with the provisions of the bill that would call for the repeal of section 315(a) of the Federal Communications Act to delete the equal time requirement for presidential and vice-presidential candidates.

We recommend, however, that the bill be expanded in this regard so as to delete the equal time requirements for all candidates.

We agree with Deputy Attorney General Richard G. Kleindienst in his testimony of March 31 that section 315 "Contrary to its purposes, has had the effects of discouraging broadcasters from offering free time and coverage."

This is also in accord with Dr. Frank Stanton of CBS when he stated that "Because section 315 requires equal time for every candidate for an office, however insignificant or frivolous his candidacy, the practical effect of the law has been to deny free broadcast time to major candidates or to force free time to be shared with fringe candidates."

"Therefore, we recommend the repeal of section 315(a) and its equal time requirements for all candidates."

The following considerations convinced the committee that the equal time requirement should be removed for all Federal candidates. Free time if given to political candidates would reduce the costs of campaigns. Broadcasters have been unanimous in claiming that the equal time requirements of section 315 inhibit them from providing free time. The FCC studies confirms the fact that very little free time is provided. Consequently, incumbents who tend to be better known and have an ability to "make news" are presently in a much better position than nonincumbents. Therefore, the committee removed the equal-time requirement for all Federal candidates.

Reduce Media Charges

The committee retained those parts of the bill reported by the Senate Commerce Committee requiring the communications media to charge political candidates at the "lowest unit rate." History has demonstrated that candidates for political office are charged more for the same amount of space or time than major advertisers. While we do not have any definitive facts as to the differences between "lowest unit rate" and the amount being charged political candidates, we are hopeful that an overall reduction in campaign costs will occur as a result of this legislation.

Encouragement of Shorter Campaigns

The committee retained the provision added by the Senate Commerce Committee limiting the "lowest unit rate" requirement to 45 days preceding a primary election and 60 days preceding a general election. Everyone agrees that political campaigns tend to be too long. We are hopeful that the 45- and 60-day provisions will encourage shorter campaigns.

Spending Limitations

The committee retained a limitation on candidate spending for the communications media. The committee was concerned that the bill as reported from the Senate Commerce Committee contained separate but identical limitations for broadcast and nonbroadcast communications media. The committee hearings brought out the danger inherent in such rigid structure contained in the limitations.

The Senate Commerce Committee report recognized the difficulties in having separate but identical spending limitations.

Some of the witnesses who testified before your committee urged there be one total limitation on all media spending with discretion left to the candidate to determine what amounts to spend on broadcast and nonbroadcast advertising. There is merit to this contention especially since campaigns differ according to the personal style of a candidate and the area of the country in which the election is being held.

On the balance, however, your committee opted against such an approach. Television is unquestionably the most used media in political campaigns, and it has been the most significant contributor to the spiraling cost of these campaigns. If candidates were given complete discretion to spend on the use of this media your committee was fearful that in the closing months of a campaign the airwaves might become inundated with political broadcasts to the exclusion of entertainment and other public interest programs. (S. Report 92-96, p. 30).

Deputy Attorney General Richard Kleindienst addressed that particular reason in the following manner:

We think the economic facts of life in the broadcasting industry and the long-term self-interest of broadcasters will adequately protect the public from any real possibility of an inundation of the air by political advertisements. We also believe that compartmentalized spending limitations ignore differences in candidates and variances in media coverage capabilities and media rates throughout the Nation. Candidates should have the flexibility to structure their campaigns to produce the most efficient and effective communication with the electorate.

In all candor, it is extremely difficult to establish any limitation without having complete and accurate facts concerning existing campaign practices and expenditures. Under the present law, candidates are not required to disclose their exact expenditures. Consequently, Congress has nothing upon which to base a realistic limitation. Nevertheless, we are convinced that some limitation is necessary in order to curb campaign costs.

The committee did have before it preliminary expenditure figures for radio and television during the 1970 campaign. Those figures indicated that had the separate broadcast spending limitation been in effect during the 1970 campaign, statewide candidates in nearly half the States would have violated the law.¹ Had the separate limitation proposed by the Commerce Committee been in effect in 1968, the amount that the President of the United States had spent on radio and television would have been cut in half.

This committee concluded that it would be extremely risky to arbitrarily set an unrealistically low spending limitation. The overall intent of S. 382 is to restore the confidence of the American public in the election process. An unrealistic spending limitation for radio and television would simply mean that the American public would be deprived of being fully informed about a candidate and the issues. This fact coupled with the fact that a limitation was placed on nonbroadcast communications spending without having a single fact indicating how much candidates had spent on nonbroadcast media in the past. We have no sure way of knowing whether candidates spend twice as much for newspaper advertisements as they do for television advertisements. We have no detailed information concerning the amount of money candidates spend for billboard facilities. We have no detailed information about the amount of money that candidates spend for advertisements in magazines and other publications. Nevertheless, the bill as reported to this committee set a limitation on nonbroadcast spending of 5 cents times the resident population of voting age.

We were faced with the impossible task of guessing how much money is spent by political candidates in the nonbroadcast communications media. We were placed in this position because at present there is no effective disclosure law or agency to compile nonbroadcast communications spending.

We believe that the committee amendment which, in effect, placed an overall spending limitation on communications media goes a long way toward insuring that an effective spending limitation is workable. However, we do want to emphasize that the information concerning spending patterns on the communications media is today very limited.

How much spending is enough to insure truly democratic elections and how much is too much are at this point in history impossible to determine. An even greater risk is inherent in making binding decision for the future.

In examining campaign spending on television, we suspect that the report by the FCC on campaign spending in 1970 has considerable significance. In all candor, however, none of us at this time know what significance it has. For example, the FCC report indicated that total political spending for radio and television advertising reached $50.3 million including $2.7 million by minor parties. This represented an increase of 57 percent over the last comparable figure for 1966. Despite the increase the actual number of political broadcasting hours declined sharply to 7,535 from the 1966 total of 11,499 hours.

We can only conclude from that statistic that television time was more expensive in 1970 than 1966. As a matter of fact, it would seem to indicate that a political candidate could get nearly twice as much time for his dollar in 1966 than he could in 1970. Certainly this statistic seems to put to bed any doubts that might have existed as to whether or not the committee proposes a strict spending limitation.

We must not lose sight of the fact that S. 382 contemplates permanent legislation. It is not a bill enacted merely for the next election. A recent article in the June 10th edition of the Washington Post gives some indication as to the escalation of media advertising costs. In the Washington, D.C., area alone, media advertising costs rose 8.8 percent between April 1970 and April 1971. The article went on to point out that this was a smaller increase than the average 10.8 percent rise in media costs over the previous 5 years. Of all media costs, television rates rose the sharpest. Over the past 6 years in Washington, D.C., television rates rose 80.2 percent. This far outstrips any future adjustments which may be made in the formula as a result of the cost-of-living increase provision contained in the bill.

Reluctantly, we must conclude that for all practical purposes the lowest unit rate requirements contained in the bill seem meaningless.

Title I continues to be the only part of S. 382 which runs the risk of eroding rather than strengthening our democratic process.

TITLE II—CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENTS

Corporations, labor unions, and banks are prohibited from making contributions to candidates for Federal office. The purpose of the prohibition is to protect the integrity of the election process. Naturally, effective enforcement of this prohibition has been difficult because of the lack of effective disclosure requirements.

This committee carefully examined all of the criminal code provisions relating to Federal elections. A number of changes were made in existing law which will significantly help restore public confidence.

Specifically the committee amended the Criminal Code with respect to the following:

1. Made lawful bona fide bank loans to political candidates;
2. Expanded the definition of political contribution and political expenditure;
3. Eliminated unregulated political committees;
4. Repealed the limitation on the amount of individual contributions;
5. Eliminated the maximum limitation on the amount of money any one political committee can handle; and
6. Prohibited unsecured debts by political candidates for certain regulated industries.

Bank Loans

First, in section 201 the definition of contribution and expenditure was modified so as to permit candidates for Federal office to obtain bona fide bank loans. Under the present law a bank is prohibited from making a contribution or expenditure to a political candidate. In the future, banks will continue to be prohibited from making contributions or expenditures to political candidates. However, the committee clarified the law so that ordinary bank loans could be obtained. The reason for this change is obvious. No one wants a Federal election law which, in effect, says that only the very wealthy can run for elective office. As a practical matter, it is often necessary for a candidate to borrow money in order to defray immediate and pressing campaign expenses. Under the present law, there was a real danger in permitting even bona fide loans to political candidates because in the absence of an effective disclosure law it would be very easy for a bank making a loan never to collect it. S. 382, as amended, has rigid and effective disclosure requirements. All bona fide loans made to political candidates must be reported. The candidate must continue to report his loan until it is fully repaid.

Define Contributions and Expenditures

Second, it should be noted that the definitions of "contribution" and "expenditure" include "anything of value". This would mean that contributions in the form of facilities, equipment, supplies, personnel, advertising or personal or other services without a charge, or at a charge which is below the usual charge for such items, is considered as a contribution or expenditure to or on behalf of the candidate for Federal office. Since section 301 of title III contains an identical definition, all such donated services are not only subject to criminal code provisions but also must be disclosed under the provisions of title III.

Elimination of Unregulated Political Committees

Third, the committee eliminated the serious loophole in present law which has the effect of permitting political committees organized in the District of Columbia or U.S. territories to escape all provisions of the law. Specifically, the committee terminated the existence of the unregulated District of Columbia Committee by adding the following definition of "State" to 18 U.S.C. 591:

"State" means each State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States.

Contribution Limitations

Fourth, the committee carefully examined the desirability of having a limitation on individual contributions. The committee rejected placing a limitation on individual contributions for three reasons:

- (1) Such a limitation probably is unconstitutional;
- (2) Such a limitation is completely unworkable; and
- (3) Full disclosure makes such a limitation unnecessary.

Prof. Ralph Winter, of Yale Law School, stated the following:

It is my judgment that the first amendment plainly prohibits the setting of a legal maximum on the political activities in which an individual may engage. This is the case whether or not the maximum is imposed in the name of equalizing opportunity or whether an actual discriminatory effect can be shown.

Even if such a limitation were constitutional, it clearly would be unworkable. Section 204 of S. 382 as originally introduced, would have limited individual contributions to an aggregate amount of $5,000, whether given directly or indirectly to a political candidate. Not only would the $5,000 limitation have invited evasion of the law by encouraging backroom cash contributions but also it would have created a situation whereby both the contributor and the candidate could have inadvertently violated the law. Such a situation would arise whenever an individual gave $5,000 to a particular candidate and any additional money to an organization or committee which in turn made any contribution to the same candidate. Deputy Attorney General Richard G. Kleindienst in testifying before the committee succinctly summed up the problem:

Further, the proposed section would impose felony sanctions for aggregate contributions exceeding the limitation in any amount, and regardless of the intent of the contributor. In view of the perplexing array of political committees which solicit campaign contributions, inadvertent violations are likely and intentional violations may easily be made to appear inadvertent. Such a proscription would be virtually impossible for the Department to enforce and the public would be deluded if it believed otherwise.

Moreover, it was recognized that full and complete disclosure really solves the problem of large contributions. Under the new disclosure provisions contained in title II the public will know exactly how a candidate's campaign is financed. Since the disclosure provisions require reports 15 days and 5 days before an election, the voter will be in a position to make a judgement at the polls concerning the effect of large individual contributions to a political candidate.

Recognizing that the present limitation on individual contributions is merely a sham, the committee adopted an amendment which would repeal 18 U.S.C. 608.

Limitations on Committee Receipts

Fifth, under the present law it is unlawful for any political committee to collect or expend more than $3 million. This 1925 requirement was also subject to easy evasion. National and interstate political committees simply created other committees, none of which received the limitation. As a practical matter, the national committees of both major political parties received and spent far in excess of $3 million. Since they also will be required to make full and complete disclosure, 18 U.S.C. 608 is repealed.

Unwarranted and Uncollectable Debts

Finally, a very significant change in title II is the committee amendment prohibiting airlines, telephone companies, and other federally regulated businesses from extending unsecured credit to political candidates. We were shocked to learn that these regulated industries have been unable to collect large sums of money from candidates for Federal office. The committee amendment insures that these corporations will not be placed in a situation of inadvertently making unlawful contributions to political candidates of what amounts to debt forgiveness. It also protects the public which uses the services of such regulated industries, for ultimately users must pay higher rates because of the bad debts.¹

TITLE III—PROVISIONS FOR FULL AND COMPLETE DISCLOSURE OF ALL POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

A recent article in Parade Magazine contained a headline "The Nation's Worst Scandal." The article concluded as follows:

As things now stand, large segments of the educated public are losing faith in the too high cost of democracy. They suspect that the oil lobby, the labor lobby, the doctors' lobby, the postal lobby, the people with the money and the clout again and again exercise undue influence upon the Nation's legislators, confronting them time after time with a conflict of interest and an almost perennial debt of gratitude which must be paid off in special-interest legislation.

As we pointed out in the beginning of these views "democracy succeeds only where citizens have faith and trust in their Government and its elected officials." All the witnesses before the committee acknowledge that under the present law there is widespread dissatisfaction in the political process. Sidney H. Scheuer, the chairman of the National Committee for an Effective Congress, summarized some of the publicity which has created an atmosphere of distrust and lack of confidence in the democratic process:

In the 1970 campaign alone, countless newspapers and magazines appeared with such glaring headlines as: "Unseen Fund Raisers, Financing Lobbyists," "False Front' Campaign Funds: How They Work," "Campaign Spending Violations Found," "Bank PAC Funds Data Surfaced After Vote," "Five Political Funds Don't Report Aid."

It makes little difference that not all these stories concern clear-cut violations of the law, that many only demonstrate the enormous size of the loopholes in that law. Each instance stokes the fires of public cynicism and the common suspicion of widespread wrongdoing. As a result, the reputation of politics and all politicians suffers.

The lack of accurate information concerning campaign financing generates this type of publicity. Every witness before the committee urged a change in the present law, which actually discourages disclosures. A respected Twentieth Century Fund Task Force on Financing Congressional Campaigns in its 1970 report entitled "Electing Congress—The Financial Dilemma" came to the following conclusion:

* * * * *

We believe that full public disclosure and publication of all campaign contributions and expenditures are the best disciplines available to make campaigns honest and fair.¹

* * * * *

If there were full public disclosure and publication of all campaign contributions and expenditures during a campaign, the voters themselves could better judge whether a candidate has spent too much. This policy would do more to protect the political system from unbridled spending than legal limits on the size of contributions and expenditures.²

* * * * *

In this modern age where mass communications have created an information rich public, the present ineffective disclosure laws have the effect of shrouding Federal campaign financing in unhealthy and unwarranted secrecy. The lack of complete and full disclosure erodes competence in the entire elective process and if allowed to continue would only serve to generate pressures against our democratic form of government.

There are five basic considerations in developing a meaningful disclosure law:

1. Determining who are required to make periodic reports;
2. Determining what such reports should include;
3. Determining when such reports should be filed;
4. Determining the agency of government entrusted with the responsibility for administering the disclosure law; and
5. Insuring the widest possible dissemination of reports made under the disclosure law.

Who Are Required To Make Periodic Reports

On its face the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925 requires disclosure. However, we have pointed out that law is fraught with loopholes. Committees organized solely within a State supporting a particular candidate do not have to report. Committees organized in the District of Columbia or any U.S. territory are freed from reporting. Consequently most contributions and expenditures in any political campaign go completely unreported.

Recognizing that only full and complete disclosure will restore the confidence of the American people, the committee requires every candidate and every committee supporting a candidate to file a report (section 304). In addition individuals who make contributions or expenditures other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate must file a report if the contribution or expenditures exceeds $100 (section 305). A specific provision is also included to require any business regulated by the Civil Aeronautics Board, the Federal Communications Commission, or the Interstate Commerce Commission to file a report if it extends to a political candidate or political committee any credit.

What Reports Should Include

The committee included language in the bill requiring as comprehensive a report as possible. Candidates and committees must report in detail all contributions and expenditures. It is the committee's intention that committees supporting more than one candidate should itemize with specificity contributions made to each candidate.

Every committee is required to have a chairman and a treasurer. The treasurer has the duty of maintaining the names and addresses of each contributor of more than $100.

The committee is confident that candidates and committees will be able to work out procedures to insure that they will be able to provide the detailed information necessary under the act.

When Reports Should Be Filed

Any disclosure law has very little effect on the election process if it is filed after elections. Therefore, the committee determined that reports should be filed on the 10th day of March, June, and September in each year. In election years there is the additional requirement that reports be filed 15 days prior to an election and again 5 days prior to an election. This provision is included so that the voters will be in a position to judge for themselves the method of financing a particular campaign. The committee fully realizes the practical difficulties inherent in filing absolutely accurate reports of expenditures and contributions fifteen days and five days preceding an election. In the heat of a political campaign, absolute accuracy is often impossible, yet the electorate is entitled to full and complete disclosure particularly just before an election. It is contemplated that all candidates and political committees will make every effort to provide as precise and realistic an estimate as possible if specific figures are not available.

In election years there is also the additional requirement that candidates and committees file a report on January 31. Generally a sufficient period of time will have passed between election day and January 31 to insure the absolute accuracy of this report.

Responsibility for Administering the Disclosure Law

We are pleased that the committee changed title III so as to remove the responsibility of administering the disclosure law from the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate. The Senate Commerce Committee recognized the difficulty in entrusting the responsibility to these officials when it stated the following in its report:

The principal concern of the committee was title I of the legislation because the subject matter of that title was within its primary jurisdiction.

There was, however, strong feeling expressed by some members of the committee that an independent Federal Elections Commission should be created, in lieu of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, to supervise the enforcement of this legislation. The committee members strongly recommend to the Committee on Rules and Administration that they give this matter very serious consideration * * *

[S. Rept. 92-96, p. 33.]

Herbert Alexander, the director of the Citizens Research Foundation, and a leading authority on campaign financing, testified before the committee in favor of establishment of an independent elections commission. We are persuaded by Mr. Alexander's testimony:

A succession of policy statements and reports of commissions and task forces has recommended a single joint repository in the Federal Government to which political fund reports would be made. This was the recommendation of—

The President's Commission on Campaign Costs, Financing Presidential Campaigns (1962)

The Committee on Economic Development, Financing a Better Election System (1968)

The Twentieth Century Fund Task Force, Electing Congress (1970)

The Association of the Bar of the City of New York, Congress and the Public Trust (1970)

All these groups contained individuals bringing varied and extensive experience in political finance and its study, and all proposed the establishment of a single agency to replace the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate as the repository of political fund reports. In 1966, and again in 1967, the Subcommittee on Elections of the House Administration Committee proposed that a Federal Elections Commission be established for this purpose. In 1967 the Senate rejected an amendment offered in floor debate to establish a single repository, but it received impressive bipartisan support.

A major reason for creating a Federal Elections Commission is to isolate the repository as much as possible from political pressures * * *

The committee did entrust this responsibility with the Comptroller General of the United States in lieu of the Clerk of the House or Secretary of the Senate. This is an improvement over the original provisions of the bill. However, we doubt that it goes far enough in order to completely restore public confidence in the election process. The Comptroller General and the General Accounting Office are in the legislative branch of Government. Their prime responsibility is to the Congress of the United States.

In placing the Comptroller General in the position of administering a campaign disclosure law, we are placing upon him the impossible burden of deciding whether or not his "employers" have complied with the law. The integrity and thoroughness of the Comptroller General and the General Accounting Office is beyond question. We must consider that his effectiveness in conducting investigations and studies for individual Members of Congress could be impaired if he were placed into the position of questioning the completeness of a disclosure by a Member or a committee supporting a Member.

As a matter of fact one of the campaign reform bills introduced in this Congress, S. 1121, contained a title placing responsibility for administering the disclosure provisions in the office of the Comptroller General. The Comptroller General of the United States, Elmer E. Staats, in his letter of May 25, 1971 to the Chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, Senator Warren G. Magnuson, strongly opposed being given this responsibility. Specifically the Comptroller General stated:

* * * It is the position of the General Accounting Office that we should not be given the responsibility for any audit, investigative and enforcement duties in connection with campaign fund reporting. We consider that the effectiveness of our Office depends in large measure upon a reputation for independence of action and objectivity of view. Not only must we remain free from political influence, but we must zealously avoid being placed in a position in which we might be subject to criticism, whether justified or not, that our actions and decisions are prejudiced or influenced by political considerations. We are, therefore, apprehensive of any measure that might place us in a position where we might be subject to such criticism, the inevitable result of which would be a diminution of congressional and public confidence in our integrity and objectivity.

Because our relationship to the Congress closely resembles that of principal and agent, we especially wish to avoid being placed in the anomalous situation of having to investigate and report on our principal. Over the years this Office has had frequent and recurring associations with many of the various committees of the Congress as well as with many of the individual members thereof. Our relationship has been most harmonious. However, we are fearful that the relationship would be severely impaired were we required to investigate, inquire into, and report on individual members of the Congress concerning campaign funds and expenditures.

We agree that there is a need for legislation relating to the disclosure and financing of Federal election campaign costs, but strongly recommend that the administration of any legislation in this area not be placed in the General Accounting Office.

We are convinced that the establishment of an independent Federal Elections Commission insures the greatest public confidence. Naturally, the Comptroller General and the General Accounting Office could continue to provide the support and service necessary for carrying out the disclosure law. However, the creation of an independent commission would place policy decisions in a body isolated from employer employee relationships.

Widest Possible Dissemination of Reports

Herbert Alexander, in testifying before the committee, stated:

Public reporting of campaign and political finances consists of two elements: disclosure and publicity. Disclosure is only a first step; the larger purpose is to inform the public about sources of funds and categories of expenditures.

The committee has attempted to insure the widest dissemination of the material obtained under the disclosure law. The candidate or political committee must not only file a report with the Attorney General but also with the clerk of the district court in his State or congressional district. The clerk of the district court is required to maintain the reports and make them available to the public (section 309). In addition, the Comptroller General is given the responsibility to prepare and publish annual reports and compilations. Those reports must include a breakdown of total contributions and expenditures reported by candidates, committees, and others. The total amount must be broken down into specific categories. Individual contributors giving the aggregate more than $100 must be identified by name and address.

To further protect the public, the committee adopted an amendment which will require political committees soliciting contributions to carry the following notification letting the public know how to obtain a copy of the report they have filed.

In compliance with Federal law a report has been (or will be) filed with the Comptroller General of the United States showing a detailed account of our receipts and expenditures. A copy of that report is available at a charge from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C.

We are convinced that such a notification will make absolutely certain that individuals living in remote areas of the country know the activities of political committees operating largely in Washington, D.C. Once such knowledge is readily available, we are confident that many existing committees will take full advantage of involving as many of their contributors as possible in the decisionmaking process.

CONCLUSION

We sincerely hope that the Members of the other body will provide tax incentives in order to encourage political contributions. We are certain that if it were possible for revenue measures to originate in the Senate, that our colleagues would share our concern that political contributions be encouraged from as broad a base as possible.

S. 382 as reported is a long overdue piece of legislation. Its prompt enactment is imperative.

WINSTON FROUTY,
JOHN SHERMAN COOPER,
HUGH SCOTT.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution may be made part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 134

Joint resolution to authorize and direct the President to proclaim September 12 through 19, 1971, to be "American Field-Service Week"

Whereas the American Field Service, originally founded as a volunteer ambulance corps to the French armies in 1914, performed with great sacrifice and distinction its task of transporting supplies and carrying the wounded in World War I and later in World War II and in 1946, created an international education program for high school students;

Whereas the aim of the American Field Service international scholarship programs is to promote understanding, friendship, and knowledge between the peoples of the world by arranging an interchange of secondary school students between the United States and other countries;

Whereas this is the twenty-fifth anniversary of the American Field Service international scholarship programs which have given over fifty-nine thousand students from every continent the opportunity to broaden their knowledge of other cultures and gain new insights into their own to the end that the peoples of all nations will benefit from their enriched understanding;

Whereas thousands of voluntary workers in communities throughout the United States and in over sixty countries of the world work together to implement this privately sponsored, non-political activity which serves as an extraordinary model of international cooperation; and

Whereas high tribute should be paid to the American Field Service for fostering a service of such worldwide importance, in the hope that thereby the goal of permanent peace so prevalent in all our minds today, can eventually be achieved: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is authorized and directed to proclaim the period beginning September 12, 1971, and ending September 19, 1971, as "American Field Service Week," and to call upon the citizens of the United States, especially schools and other educational institutions and organizations, to observe such period with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

By Mr. TOWER:

S.J. Res. 135. A joint resolution to authorize and request the President to issue annually a proclamation designating 1 day of each year as "National Law Officers Appreciation Day." Referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LAW OFFICERS APPRECIATION DAY

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I introduce for appropriate reference a joint resolution which would establish 1 day each year as "National Law Officers Appreciation Day." I believe that it is altogether fitting and proper that we have 1 day set aside in which we can pay proper respect and appreciation to those persons in our country who daily risk their lives in the fight against crime so that we may live securely in our homes. These men bear the brunt of the criticism of society and the violence, both organized and unorganized, that is all too prevalent in our Nation today.

At no other time in our history has the law enforcement officer been under greater stress than that under which he must operate today. To the old crimes with which he has long had to live, there have been added new ones such as violent protest with the resultant riots and general disrespect of all forms of property and rights of the law-abiding citizens. It is definitely time that we honor the patrolman who day after day and night after night is on the beat protecting our society from its domestic enemies. At times recently, this man must have wondered if anyone really knew that he was around or if anyone really cared that he was risking his life and well-being in order that the rest of us might continue to enjoy our ordered liberty. The time has come to give this lone man our full support and tell him that we are with him; that the struggle against crime is the struggle of all of us; that we fully appreciate the sacrifices that he is making.

Mr. President, I hope that many of my colleagues will join with me in cosponsoring this joint resolution. I intend to solicit these cosponsors at the earliest possible date. For the information of the Senate, I ask unanimous consent that my joint resolution be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 135

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is authorized and requested to issue annually a proclamation designating one day of each year, to be determined by the President, as "National Law Officers Appreciation Day", and calling upon the people of the United States and interested groups and organizations to observe such day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. SPONG. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971 and ask that it be printed and held at the desk.

The purpose of this amendment is to require political committees which support more than one candidate for election to itemize in their reports the expenditures made in behalf of each individual candidate.

As presently worded, the bill requires committees to disclose only the amount, date and purpose of expenditures in excess of $100 and the names of the persons to whom payments were made. But it does not hold political committees to the same requirement which is imposed on all other groups; namely, to report "the name of the candidate for the benefit of whose campaign the goods or services were purchased."

I believe this is essential information which, if not provided, could vitiate the whole reporting requirement. Candidates could evade the purpose of the act by simply channeling a large share of their campaign spending through party committees. This has been done in the past.

Under this bill, the committees would not be required to disclose how much of what they spent went for the benefit of candidate X or candidate Y. Nor would the candidates themselves have to report that information since they are responsible only for what they personally spend, not what is spent in their behalf.

The net result then is that the public would never have a full accounting of how much a candidate spent to be elected.

One of the purposes of this bill is to enlist public pressure as a means of holding campaign spending within reasonable bounds. That can only work where the public has all the facts and that is what my amendment seeks to provide.

In requiring political committees to itemize expenditures for each candidate, it is recognized that some spending will be for the entire slate of candidates as a slate. I assume the Comptroller General or the Federal Elections Commission, as the case may be, will provide for such situations in its reporting regulations.

When I proposed this amendment at the Rules Committee hearing, I was assured that it was the intent of the committee to require such itemized committee reports. I am hopeful, therefore, that the manager of the bill will support this amendment which will remove any question about the meaning of this section.

AMENDMENT NO. 264

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I am sure that all of us look forward to the forthcoming consideration of S. 382, The Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971.

As a ranking member of both the Senate Commerce Committee, and the Committee on Rules and Administration I have become deeply involved in the development of what I believe to be a most significant piece of legislation. I sincerely hope that all Members of this body will give careful consideration to all the provisions contained in S. 382.

Today, Mr. President, I send to the desk a technical amendment to S. 382, and ask that it be printed immediately following my remarks.

In the Committee on Rules and Administration I had an amendment adopted by a vote 6 to 3, which would require all organizations soliciting political contributions to affix the following notification on their requests for contributions.

In compliance with Federal law a report has been (or will be) filed with the Comptroller General of the United States showing a detailed account of our receipts and expenditures. A copy of that report is available at a charge from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C.

Subsequent to the adoption of my amendment by the committee, I was informed by legislative council that in order to clarify the authority for the Public Printer to make a charge for such documents language should be included in the bill to that effect. My amendment simply clarifies that point.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 264

On page 30, line 23, before "Any" insert "(1)".

On page 31, between lines 7 and 8, insert the following:

"(2) (A) The Comptroller General shall compile and furnish to the Public Printer not later than the last day of March of each year, an annual report for each political committee which has filed a report with him under this title during the period from March 10 of the preceding calendar year through January 31 of the year in which such annual report is made available to the Public Printer. Each such annual report shall contain—

"(i) a copy of the statement of organization of the political committee required under section 303, together with any amendments thereto; and

"(ii) a copy of each report filed by such committee under section 304 from March 10 of the preceding year through January 31 of the year in which the annual report is so furnished to the Public Printer.

"(B) The Public Printer shall make copies of such annual reports available for sale to the public by the Superintendent of Documents as soon as practicable after they are received from the Comptroller General."

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, in the next few days the Senate will be considering S. 382, the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971.

I am now announcing my intention to amend this important legislation, and I now offer the amendment for printing. At the appropriate time, I will call up the Federal voter registration amendment to S. 382 which will enable all citizens of the United States to register to vote in Federal elections at the time they complete their Federal income tax returns.

The Internal Revenue Service reaches 95 percent of the American people each year. It is an organization which has a reputation for responsibility, efficiency, and confidentiality which are necessary for the proper functioning of a national voter registration program.

Those persons who do not file a Federal tax return would be able to obtain a voter registration form from their local post office. All persons who register under this optional program—with their tax return or with the form obtained at the post office—would receive a Federal certificate of registration.

My amendment to S. 382 does not eliminate State registration laws. Persons can register through the Internal Revenue Service only if they are also eligible to register under applicable State laws. I do not view the Federal voter registration amendment as abridging the rights of any State. The amendment is designed to make Federal registration a convenience rather than a hindrance.

In the election of 1968, 40 percent of the American electorate did not vote. I believe the Federal voter registration amendment is an important first step in the direction of true universal suffrage in the United States.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment to S. 382 be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 266

"On page 52, after line 17, add the following:

AMENDMENTS NOS. 267 THROUGH 293

COMMENTS ON S. 382—CAMPAIGN REFORM

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, the matter of campaign reform will soon confront us all. S. 382 has been reported out of the Rules Committee and awaits consideration by the Senate. I have thoroughly reviewed and studied the bill; I think the bill has the laudable objective of restoring to the American people confidence and credibility in the electoral process. The committees dealing with the legislation have done a commendable job in view of the constitutional hurdles and the complexity of the problem.

I do not wish to speak generally about the need for campaign reform, for I made my feelings clear in the introductory remarks to S. 956, the Scott-Mathias bill. However, to demonstrate now my sincere desire to have tough and comprehensive reform legislation, I have gone over S. 382 with a most careful eye. I would like to tell the Members of the Senate of the difficulties which I encountered in S. 382; and, I plan to introduce amendments where I feel it is appropriate to do so.

S. 382 is divided into four distinct and independent titles; title I deals with broadcast media and nonbroadcast media; title II covers the criminal code amendments; title III handles the reporting and disclosure sections of the bill; and title IV covers amendments to the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. I will proceed to talk about each title separately, excluding any comments on title IV.

TITLE I. MEDIA

CONCEPT OF FAIRNESS

Section 315(a), the section in the Communications Act which puts a legislative mandate on licensees to treat all candidates similarly and equally in the allocation of free time has become burdensome to both the broadcast station and the candidate. The major candidates cannot get on the air to publicly expose their views unless the broadcast station decides to treat equally all other candidates—minor, fringe, and even casual candidates would take part in the gratuity. This spirit of fairness and equality is in keeping with the legislative intentions of 315(a) as well as with court decisions interpreting this section.

This legislative objection of nondiscrimination among the candidates was built into 315(a)'s promulgated rules and regulations. For instance, regulations clearly prohibit discrimination among candidates with regard to charges and access. Section 315(a) speaks of affording "equal opportunities" to all candidates.

The broadcast station often avoided the above problem by not granting free time to any candidate. This, as we know, though a decision based perhaps on good business judgment, was not in the best interests of the electorate nor was it fulfilling the licensee's obligation within the political process. Everyone—including the broadcast industry—has recognized the need for change. The industry and the Congress have both agreed on legislation which would give the broadcast industry the opportunity—and the discretion—to give only "major" candidates free access.

S. 382 attempts to solve the dilemma by taking Federal elections out of the purview of 135(a). I question this legislative approach.

If you take Federal elections out of 315(a), the question arises as to whether those rules, regulations, court decisions and ancillary laws would still apply to those now exempt Federal elections in order to guarantee the concept of equality and fairness among the "major" candidates. The FCC was unwilling to conjecture whether these guidelines would in fact apply. It would seem to me that a more direct route and one which would give the station less discretion and opportunity would be to simply exempt minor Federal candidates from this application of section 315(a).

There would be difficulty, I admit, in defining such a group as "major" or "minor" candidate. However, S. 956 contained such a definition in the franking privilege section of the bill. And the FCC would have to make certain anyhow what it meant by "major" if it wanted to give guidance to its licensees under the presently drafted bill as to the extent of permissible exclusions of candidates.

If these guidelines under the present 315(a) as applied to Federal elections would not now apply to S. 382, a licensee could discriminate as to charges under the bill.

A candidate for Federal office running under the purview of S. 382 could have three possible charges given to him by a licensee within the stated 105-day period prior to election. The station can give the candidate free time, charge lower than lowest unit cost, or the lowest unit cost. Section 101(b) page 3, line 9, speaks of the licensee being prohibited during this period from exceeding the lowest unit cost. Strictly construed, this does not prohibit giving charges lower than the lowest unit cost.

I have been told by the committee that if one is granted a charge which is lower than the lowest unit cost, that the new charge would then become the new lowest unit cost and all candidates charged higher than this rate would get a pro-rated refund in the excess amount. This interpretation cannot be derived by reading the bill or the appropriate hearings. Such an interpretation is quite unreasonable and indeed stretched. The matter of the refund is not mentioned at all in the bill and on the merits, it could cause innumerable problems for a candidate in his spending plans within the bill's ceiling.

There would be, it seems to me, only two prohibitions or guidelines for stations in their charges and treatment of candidates. First, the station would be prohibited under threat of revocation of its license—section 101(b), page 3, line 22, and the following of the drafted bill—from "willful or repeated failures to allow reasonable access or to permit reasonable amounts of time." Note that this section mentions any access; thus, if a candidate is ready, willing, and able to go on the media, the licensee could not then prevent his entry within the normal rules and customs of the broadcast industry. However, this would not prevent him from discriminating as to charges. Second, the fairness doctrine—section 315(a) would still apply, guaranteeing that the station would treat all issues equally and fairly. Notwithstanding these two recognized prohibitions, unless this latter doctrine is stretched to apply to charges and the matter of free time, the licensees could still discriminate in both these areas.

Even if the committee would clear up through amendments the matter of the meaning of lowest unit cost, this would only take care of the problem of discrimination as to charges lower than the lowest unit cost and not cover discrimination in the area of free time.

At this time, I am planning to offer amendments which will prohibit under the threat of revocation of license the discrimination as to free time by a licensee by amending subsection (7) on page 3 of the bill to this effect. This would also remedy in part what I consider to be a most unwise delegation of power to the FCC. Congress should begin to use its pen rather than its power to delegate its authority to achieve recognized public policy.

I understand there might be some attempt to delete this entire subsection (7). If such an objective is accomplished, a move which I will aggressively oppose, I will offer an amendment annexed to the previous subsection, hoping to accomplish the same objective.

S. 956, in its title III, attempts to codify the fairness doctrine in order to assure its application to campaign reform legislation. Perhaps a similar move might be considered by the committee.

COVERAGE—FEDERAL ELECTIVE OFFICE

Section 102 deals with the spending limitation of candidates for Federal office. It should be noted that unlike the reporting and disclosure title, the first two titles exclude coverage of the party conventions, caucus and so forth. It is omission is understandable, however, we should make it clear—a caveat should be made—that Congress will fill the void if the omission is abused.

COVERAGE—THE CANDIDATE

Subsection (c) of section 102, page 4, line 12 and the following, as well as section 103(a) (3), page 9, line 21, and the following defines "legally qualified candidate." Unless a candidate comes within this legislative definition, he is free to spend as much as he wants and is excluded from the spending limitations of the bill.

The definition, as presently drafted, has two parts: First, that the candidate qualify under Federal law—in the case of the office of Senator, this merely means that he be 30 years of age and a naturalized citizen; and second, he qualify under applicable State law. This is patently not enough. As drafted, both provisions omit any affirmative actions by the candidate, and only contemplate the passive, more formal acts of qualifying oneself for candidacy.

There might be situations in which a candidate could not as yet qualify under State law, though clearly a candidate in the eye of both the public and himself. Take the State law which requires for instance a period of days to follow from time of registration to the time in which he formally qualifies as a candidate under applicable State law. Does that mean that during those preceding days, the candidate can have a "Roman carnival" with regard to campaign expenditures? Obviously, if all States allowed write-in candidates, this would not be a serious problem for then every inchoate candidate would qualify under "applicable State law." However, we cannot control nor predict changes in State elections laws; thus, it would be wise to close this omission.

The FCC has in its regulations a definition of candidate which is broader than the one contained in S. 382 and one which might cover the above example. However, it could be argued quite persuasively, I think, that this congressionally declared definition supercedes the regulatory one.

I recommend that we add a third provision—a section (C) or (3) as the case may be, which would include in the alternative the candidate who spends or accepts contributions, or acquiesces the spending or contributing in behalf of his candidacy.

I agree that a candidate should be a candidate for the purposes of the spending ceiling only when he performs "the last act" of noncandidacy, as distinguished from the reporting and disclosure section which should cover "his first act," so to speak. However, as presently drafted, the loophole is much too big.

THE MECHANICS OF THE SPENDING CEILING

I said in my introductory remarks to S. 956, as well as before the Commerce Committee hearings on S. 956, that spending ceilings are basically unenforceable, arbitrary, and unconstitutional. S. 382 confirms that view. As drafted, I feel strongly that S. 382 will most likely be dragged through the courts to the disadvantage of campaign reform, and create a prosecutorial nightmare for the Federal Government.

As we know, S. 382 sets forth spending ceilings for all candidates to Federal office. As drafted those ceilings are 0.05 cent times the number of resident population in that political subdivision for the nonbroadcast media and a similar 0.05 cent spending limitation for the broadcast media. The Rules Committee added an amendment which would make these figures interchangeable; thus making the spending ceiling 10 cents for both broadcast media and nonbroadcast media, allowing the candidate to choose how he wants to divide his money among the two. I imagine this will become a major amendment for debate on the Senate floor. I only hope that the amounts derived will be based more on the public's interest and recognized data on campaign costs, rather than on political considerations.

However, my concern is with the mechanics of the spending ceiling—how broadcast media and nonbroadcast media charges are attributed to each candidate.

The two sections in both the broadcast media and nonbroadcast media sections which are of concern to me are the definitions of "use of broadcast stations by or on behalf of any candidate" and the appropriate certification sections. The former forms the perimeter and basis for the latter. In other words, if an advertisement or media presentation comes within this definition, according to the interpretation by the committee, it cannot be viewed unless it receives certification by some candidate and thus the costs of that presentation are attributed to that candidate's spending ceiling.

In addition the definition becomes the basis for eligibility for lowest unit cost charges by a licensee.

Again, I feel the bill is unclear as to the process of certification. A close reading of the bill with regard to the certification process could raise other meanings than those derived by the committee. I hope the committee, through appropriate amendments, will make clear its intentions.

Thus, this definition's intent and meaning is of immense significance. Let us take a look at this definition as it appears in section 102, page 4, line 17, and the following, and section 103(a) (4), page 10, line 3, and the following.

"The use of broadcast stations by or on behalf of any candidate," the definition states, includes—giving the FCC discretion to add criteria—First, amounts spent advocating a candidate's election, second, amounts spent urging defeat of one's opponent, or third, amounts spent derogating his opponent's stand on campaign issues. Note that the definition contemplates advertisements both by candidate and on behalf of the candidate.

The latter requirement dealing with campaign issues is most objectionable. Let me cite a hypothetical example on how this becomes a real problem. Suppose a group wants to put on the air an advertisement urging support for air pollution legislation. The group goes to the broadcast station and first shows the ad to the licensee who in turn determines whether the advertisement comes within one of the three criteria mentioned above. The ad, for sake of example, makes no mention of any candidate's name in an effort to elect or defeat a particular candidate. The question then becomes is it derogation of a candidate's stand on some campaign issue? Ecology will presumably be an inherent issue in the elections to come.

The licensee would then make a determination—under the spirit of reasonableness as pronounced by the Commerce Committee hearings—as to whether the ad is in derogation of some candidate's stand. If he decides it is, he would then call the candidate who would presumably benefit from such a viewing and ask for certification. The candidate would then have to view the advertisement to see whether it would be worth attributing the costs of the ad to his spending ceiling. If it is not worth the candidate's certification, the pollution fighters are precluded from expressing their views. The situation becomes ludicrous when this group becomes the purchaser in behalf of the candidate which set the lowest unit cost scheme in the first place—under the present committee interpretation of the bill.

And if the candidate certifies, the group's ad is viewed as an advertisement associated with that candidate and charged the lowest unit cost for the viewing. If the ad is not considered a particular campaign issue, it can go on the air with normal commercial charges and subject to the normal customs and regulations of the industry.

Under present interpretation by the committee, if an applicant or candidate is dissatisfied with a decision by the broadcast station, he may appeal to the FCC for a final ruling on the matter.

The above example highlights the serious problems which I believe most would have with this bill.

The bill violates the public's right of free expression and free association which our Constitution guarantees. A group can no longer independently express itself on an issue related to a campaign unless they associate themselves with a particular candidate for purposes of certification and receive certification by a candidate. If both are not consented to, the expression is completely forbidden.

This, to me, is repugnant to America's ideals of freedom, the right to free expression and unabated participation in the electoral process.

It strips groups of any independence. It encourages—it directs—groups to be dependent upon a candidate. Independence of views is discouraged, dependence fostered. We all know how dependency in the political arena breeds obligations and inhibition of expression. The bill discourages the open discussion of substantive issues and controversy and encourages fireside Wall Street ads to influence one's candidacy. Noninvolvement and ignorance can easily be its by-product.

I find the bill tampering and upsetting the delicate balance of first amendment rights and the right of the Federal Government to legislate for the general welfare. The harm created by the bill, quite frankly, exceeds the harm attempted to be corrected. I doubt whether the first amendment permits statutory authorization for one person to determine whether a group or an individual can express their political views in such forms as newspapers, magazines, billboard facilities, and other periodicals as contemplated by S. 382.

The bill gives to the local broadcast stations, the FCC and sellers, in the non-broadcast media, enormous and dangerous powers to interpret the intent of Congress. This is another example of "delegation run wild." A station for example would on a case by case approach decide what ad is considered to be related to a particular campaign, whether it is major campaign issue or an issue which is in derogation of a particular candidate's stand. Do we want to delegate such authority? I for one do not. In addition, this delegation of judicial functions to the FCC raises some serious constitutional issues.

The bill at the same time gives too much authority to us—the prospective candidates, for the candidates would in essence control—in the strictest sense of that word—the political and quasi-political expression during 105 days prior to the election. This, I believe is an unreasonable power to bestow upon us. I can imagine interest groups running around from one candidate to another in an atmosphere of prior censorship and prior restraint in an attempt to guarantee certification. The public's right to know should not be curtailed by what the candidate wants to tell.

The only safeguards for the public to assure equality and nondiscrimination by the licensee in these instances are the fussy area of the "fairness doctrine" and the test of reasonableness as pronounced by the committee—a test which is found nowhere within the language of the bill. Congress must set forth explicit guidelines as to its intent and objectives within the bill.

It seems to me that if an advertisement does not specifically mention or reasonably refer to a candidate either in support of his candidacy or in derogation of his opponent, then that advertisement should be able to be viewed and be subject to the ordinary charges and process of exclusion and inclusion practiced by the broadcast and nonbroadcast industry.

In other words if it does not appear that the purchaser is controlled by the candidate or is attempting to influence the election of a candidate, he should not be governed by the certification provisions. If this is the intent of the committee and the Congress, it certainly is not clear in the present bill.

I believe the above problems can be resolved within the framework of the bill as drafted. And to this end, I am planning to make the following amendments.

I will offer amendments to change the definition of "use of broadcast time" to make it limited to the criteria of "influencing" the outcome of an election. The word "influencing" has an appropriate reference in the definition of "contribution" in title III. It would seem logical if one gives to another to influence his candidacy that amount, or value thereof, should be reported and disclosed as well as attributed toward his spending ceiling if that "giving" was in the form of a purchase of time or space. The amendment would exclude any reference to "campaign issue" and the dangerous authority given to the broadcast media and nonbroadcast media in this area.

This amendment would clear up the issue of negative campaigning for only if the ad is viewed to influence an election should it come within the certification rule.

This still does not dispense with all the first amendment problems for still the candidate could control those ads which are intended to influence his election. I do believe my amendment is a useful and workable compromise. Quite frankly, I do not believe that the Congress can enact a constitutionally sound bill on spending limitations. I have felt this way since cosponsoring S. 956 and my feelings were made even more distinct while studying the mechanics of S. 382.

One area which the bill omits and which should be considered by the full Senate, is the matter of injunctive relief by the candidate. What is the remedy if another candidate who watches the expenses of his opponent—a fact which should be expected under this legislation—discovers that he will soon exceed his limit by a certain expenditure? What can he do? As drafted, the bill affords no relief. We should seriously consider inserting a provision similar to that contained in title III for injunctive relief to any aggrieved party.

PREDICTABILITY OF AUTHORIZED PERSON

In both the broadcast media—section 102, page 7, lines 16 and 17—and the non-broadcast media—section 103, page 13, lines 3 and 4—the candidate or "a person specifically authorized" is given authority to certify for purposes of cost attribution within the spending ceiling. This person should not be one merely "authorized" by the candidate, for that person may vary from candidate to candidate, but rather should be a predictable person easily ascertained by the appropriate Federal authority and the broadcast station seeking certification.

I will offer amendments to make this person one who will be registered with the appropriate Federal authority and correspond to the person in title III who is responsible for the reporting and disclosure of the candidate's contributions and expenditures. A central campaign committee will be required in both titles to achieve these objectives. This concept was introduced in S. 956, the Scott-Mathias bill and is again, I believe, needed for sound campaign reform legislation.

SCOPE OF MEDIA

Section 102, on page 5, line 3 and the following outlines the coverage of the bill for purposes of the broadcast media. The definition clearly omits the use of closed circuit television. This, I believe, is a possible loophole. We have no way of forecasting the use of such a medium.

I understand that to put such media under the jurisdiction of the FCC, at this time, would be questionable. Its authority over certain kinds of cable television are currently in dispute. Thus to avoid the jurisdictional question—at least until the FCC's lines of authority are clearly drawn—the closed circuit TV question could be adequately handled in the bill by amending section 101's definition of the "use of broadcast stations" to include this medium. I plan to offer such an amendment.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTIONS

Section 102—page 6, line 9 and the following—and section 103(c)(1), page 11, line 19 and the following deals with the spending limitations for presidential primaries. The language reasonably construed is interpreted to mean that a president calculates how much he can spend in any one primary by first determining how much he can legally spend in the Nation—which is $0.05 times the number of resident population. Taking this figure, he can then divide that amount by as many primaries as he wishes to enter. He may spend it all in one State's primary or enter three, 10, or 50.

The language in general is fairly vague and should be tightened up. For instance, when it refers to the "resident population," for the purposes of this section, is it talking about resident Democrats or Republicans, or the resident population of the entire State? I have proceeded on the assumption of the latter interpretation.

This approach, I believe, discourages broad base participation by all States and their respective citizens. The Congress should declare a policy that it desires more presidential primaries, and that it desires more citizens of more States to have a realistic opportunity to determine the party nominee for President. It is unfair for a presidential aspirant to choose to enter one State's primary to the exclusion of another and yet use that State's population base for the purpose of spending ceilings in the primary of his choice.

An amendment will be offered which will limit the amount a president can spend to $0.05 times the estimated number of resident population of each State in which the candidate enters a primary. This amendment would not be limiting a candidate's choice but rather encouraging him to go into more primaries which in the end will result in a more responsive system of nominating a president. In the general election, no similar restrictions would be applied and the presidential nominee may spend as much as he wants within the established ceiling in each State or geographical region.

PROBLEM OF STATE SOVEREIGNTIES

Section 102—page 7, line 25, and the following—of the broadcast section provides that if the Federal Communications Commission makes certain findings as to the applicability of State law then that State's candidates will come within the purview of the bill as it pertains to licensees' certification and spending ceilings. I have no objection to the laudable objection of uniformity and permissive compliance with Federal law, but I do find constitutionally suspicious the concept of a Federal agency—in this case the FCC—determining the applicability of State law. This should be left to the States and their judicial process. I can see States and their governments resenting this preemption enough not to attempt to make uniform their election laws. The need for uniformity is clearly outweighed by constitutional protection of State sovereignty in the area of judicial affairs.

I plan to introduce an amendment which attempts to remedy this by providing that the State must specifically declare its intention in the State legislature to come within the Federal law. In addition, the Commission's determination would be omitted making the act completely permissive in nature on behalf of the State.

NONBROADCAST MEDIA COVERAGE: DIRECT MAILING

It should be noted that direct mailings are omitted from the spending ceiling in the nonbroadcast media section. There are sound reasons for its omission. One statewide mailing, for example, could eat up the entire nonbroadcast media ceiling. Also, it would be easy to avoid the application of ceilings by receiving large donations of stamps. And, as previously mentioned, a limit on direct mailings would really aggravate the constitutional question of free expression.

I plan to propose a franking amendment similar to the one offered in S. 956, for all candidates in varying degrees at reduced rates. If a cost-free franking privilege amendment is offered to all candidates rather than a reduced rate privilege which I prefer, I would then offer an amendment to have the direct mailings included in the nonbroadcast media coverage, for then, statewide mailings would be free and all others should be attributed to the spending ceiling.

EQUALITY BETWEEN THE BROADCAST MEDIA SECTIONS AND NONBROADCAST MEDIA

It is absolutely imperative that we treat alike broadcast media and nonbroadcast media. This was one of the President's requests; it is a fair and equitable principle to guide the bill. And I believe if not done, the bill will fail to meet constitutional requirements. I, of course, recognize the difficulty of complete equal treatment under the law, due to constitutional and jurisdictional problems of Federal law over nonbroadcast media. Nonetheless, an attempt must be made within a realistic framework to create such a parity.

Several parts of the bill come to mind which fail to meet this requirement. Firstly, as we know there is nothing in the nonbroadcast media which is equivalent to the fairness doctrine and related nondiscriminatory principles as they appear in the broadcast media section. The nonbroadcast media seller is virtually free to discriminate; the bill makes no attempt to remedy the problem.

In the broadcast media, if a licensee charges lower than lowest unit cost, according to the intent of the committee, that new rate then becomes the new lowest unit cost, and a refund is given to all candidates, making all candidates equal before the licensee. In the nonbroadcast media, free space, goods, or services or a reduction below the lowest unit cost is equivalent to a contribution—a term which is meaningless for there are no limitations on contributions—only spending. In the nonbroadcast media, reductions in cost are discouraged and yet the favored candidate can benefit from a gift which is not attributed to his spending ceiling. In the broadcast media section, presumably free time and reductions in cost are encouraged.

An amendment will be offered which will attempt to solve this particular disparity without getting into any constitutional problems of jurisdiction over the nonbroadcast media. If the nonbroadcast media charges one candidate less than the other—or gives one candidate free space, goods, or services, and not the other, the amendment will provide that the amount saved by the candidate shall be considered a contribution and expenditure and attributed toward his ceiling limitation. Thus, if candidates are treated differently by a nonbroadcast media seller, then the favored treatment should rightfully be considered a contribution and an expenditure and attributed toward the spending limitation. This is a means of gaining equality among the candidates without controlling the nonbroadcast media. The latter is free to charge and treat the candidates as it chooses; however, the candidate must take the consequences.

The second inequality is more patent. Violation of sections dealing with the broadcast media is 10 years or $1,000. For the nonbroadcast media it is 5 years or $5,000 or both. This unequal treatment becomes unworkable when you consider the present interchangeability of the spending limitations for broadcast media and nonbroadcast media. As presently drafted, if one exceeds the spending limit, he could say with impunity that he violated that sector which has the lesser penalty.

Two amendments will be offered. One will make both sanctions equal to the nonbroadcast media violations—subsection (f)—the other will insert in both, the qualification of "knowingly and willfully." This will take the sanction out of the "malum prohibitum" arena and into those criminal statutes which require intent and knowledge by the violator. If this is not done, a strict liability would be given to the actions of candidates; a responsibility which would be overbearing to the candidates. I believe it would be a lot more realistic to create a joint criminal responsibility and I hope the committee would consider such an amendment.

NOTIFICATION BY NONBROADCAST MEDIA

There is nothing in the bill as drafted, as it pertains to nonbroadcast media, which would require the sellers of nonbroadcast media to notify the FCC of any certification or even keep appropriate records. Such is not the case for the broadcast media sellers, for the FCC has extensive regulations for bookkeeping and notification procedures.

I will offer an amendment which will make mandatory similar notifications by nonbroadcast media when it sells goods and services under the certification section of the bill. It can certainly be argued that if the seller of the nonbroadcast media wants to partake in Federal elections—an act which is purely permissive in nature—he then must comply with all related Federal regulations.

EFFECTIVE DATE

The bill as presented to the floor recommends the effective date for title I to be 30 days after enactment in the case of section 101(b) and 120 days for section 102. Such a variance dismisses the equality of importance between the two, and the 120-day stipulation is too long for purposes of guaranteeing coverage of the next election.

I will offer an amendment to make both 60 days.

TITLE II: CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENTS BANK LOANS

Section 201—page 16, line 15 and the following—defines "contributions" for the purposes of this criminal title. A bank loan is properly exempt from the term "contribution." This is in keeping with recent court decisions, as well as policy decisions which attempt to encourage candidates to seek money from recognized and established money institutions. After all, the more money available through banks, the less the candidate has to go to "other" sources with their obligatory attachments.

However, loans should not be exempt from contributions, if they are given out of the ordinary course of business. For instance, if the bank alters its ordinary customs and regulations and gives money to a candidate the preference over another, such a loan should be considered a contribution. An amendment will be offered to add the words "in the ordinary course of business" after the word "regulations" which appears on pages 16 and 17, lines 20 and 22, respectively.

This amendment is offered in an attempt to prohibit discrimination toward any candidate in a Federal election by any banking institution. We must make all necessary efforts to assure this objective of equality throughout the entire legislation. This is another amendment offered to achieve this objective.

COLLATERAL

Section 206 on page 23 creates a new section to protect those service businesses whose rates are regulated by the Federal Government. The committee attempts to protect those businesses which provide transportation and public services to candidates by requiring full collateral for prospective services. This is a laudable policy in light of numerous and large unpaid bills in all these areas. However, I feel it is equally important to protect the other providers of services by offering an amendment prohibiting all others from compromising a debt for less than its face value. This would assure that those who deal with a federally regulated industry would not be put on a safer, higher level of protection, than those who do not.

CONTRIBUTION LIMITATIONS

S. 956 contained what I believe to be a section necessary in any campaign reform legislation. It reenacted section 608 of title 18 of the United States Code in the area of contribution limitations to limit the amount of money a candidate by himself or through his family, can give to influence his candidacy. In the case of a presidential election, the limitation was $50,000; in a senatorial election, $35,000; and an election held for the office of representative, delegate, or resident commissioner, the limitation was $25,000.

I intend to reintroduce this concept as an amendment to S. 382.

I feel a candidate should not be able to buy off any election in his behalf. Men and women elected to Federal office must be elected and chosen by their constituency and not by themselves.

Although I realize it is impossible to equalize all candidates before the public, I feel strongly that a deep pocket should not be a license to serve the public. If our Government is to represent all of America and its diversified economic interests, we must assure that not only the rich have an opportunity to serve.

A more plenary view on this subject appeared in my introductory remarks to S. 956.

TITLE III. REPORTING AND DISCLOSURE

Title III is the most important part of the 1971 campaign reform. It deals with the public's right to know. It guarantees responsive government as well as an alert and well-informed public. And, it is for these reasons, title III must be comprehensive and tough.

DEFINITION OF STATE

The first amendment which I feel is necessary is perfecting in nature. Title II and title III have two different definitions of "State." One appears on page 18, lines 19 through 22; the other on page 28, lines 20 through 22. It can be argued that the second definition's reference is inclusive and the "State" is limited in definition to the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and so forth. This drafting oversight should be corrected so no problem could be raised as to the jurisdiction of the bill.

An amendment will be offered to change this latter definition to conform with the definition on page 18.

FULL REPORTING AND DISCLOSURE

Throughout the bill, the name and address of a donor, seller, agent, and so forth, is required on some report. Accordingly, one may list his name and box office and satisfy the law.

This I feel is inadequate. It is important that the public and the regulating agency fully recognize and understand an individual's affiliation and financed ties with a candidate. If merely one's name and box office address or even a nonbusiness mailing address appear on a form 5 days prior to an election, there is hardly enough time for anyone interested in reporting to the public to get a complete and accurate picture of the candidate's financial affiliations. It is for these reasons that I will offer an amendment which will require that each person's principal place of business and occupation appear on the appropriate reporting forms.

EXPENDITURES IN BEHALF OF A POLITICAL COMMITTEE

Section 302(c)(3) as well as 302(d) require the treasurer of a political committee to keep a detailed account of all expenditures by such political committee or in behalf of such committee. This latter provision is to cover those individuals who buy services for a candidate. In addition, since this expenditure by the donor would be considered a contribution for purposes of the spending ceilings, it is important to have a cross-check. However, when page 35 requires expenditures to be reported to the Commission or the GAO, as the case may be, it leaves out this essential "in behalf of such committee" language and only refers to expenditures by such committee. The detailed list kept by the committee of these type expenditures is useless unless it is properly reported and disclosed to the Commission.

On page 35, line 18, I plan to offer an amendment to insert the words "or in behalf of such committee." This will assure reporting of the same expenditure information as is required to be kept by the treasurer.

An additional matter comes to mind in talking about this disclosure provision as it relates to expenditures. It is not clear whether this section covers the detailed reporting of services performed by multiservice corporations. If, for example, X, a multifaceted corporation, does $10,000 worth of business for a candidate in the area of printing, advertising, mailings, and so forth, would these enumerated services be listed separately with their respective costs or would the report only indicate the bulk amount of $10,000 and generally state the purposes for the expenditure?

In other words, does the word "each" on line 35 refer to the aggregate expenditure of each expenditure within the aggregate? Section 302(d) requires such a detailed report. This again is the section requiring merely that the treasurer keep certain data available for inspection. However, it is questionable whether the same amount of detail is required in the reporting section.

S. 956 contained such specificity and it seems to me it would be good policy to again make it part of this legislation. If this situation is not covered by the bill, I hope the committee will make the appropriate amendments.

TRANSFERS

As we all know, in the close ranks of political campaigns the adroit and able campaign treasurer is a most valuable asset of any candidate. The value a candidate places on such men is directly linked to the extraordinary costs of political campaigns and the need to expertly manage funds to obtain maximum results. These financial demands have too often bred abuses.

One particular abuse is not covered by S. 382. The rapid transfers of funds in any campaign coupled with the increased use of credit facilities permit a pyramiding of credit and hence of purchasing power which might significantly affect the relative posture of candidates in any one election. Although it is impossible to equalize financial positions of candidates, nor prevent the manipulation of money to one's benefit, it is important that the public know what the candidate is doing with the moneys received.

S. 382 as drafted does not disclose and report all the possible transfers, which might occur during a campaign. Section 303(b) subsection (9) should include a listing of all transfer agents as well as the now required banks, safety deposit boxes or other repositories. Such an amendment will be offered.

Subsection (b)(1) of section 304, the section dealing with reports by political committees, in addition should contain some provision to alert the Commission or the GAO, as the case may be, of rapid transfers of money. The definition of contribution and expenditure in title III contain provisions which include transfers between political committees. However, the problem arises when there is a transfer between banks or a nonpolitical committee.

An amendment will be offered to require reporting of all transfers, their recipients and amounts which are more than 10 percent of the amount of cash in each reporting period. In addition, if the 10-percent transfer occurs more than once during the reporting period, it would then have to be reported within 24 hours to the appropriate Federal agency.

CONTRIBUTIONS IN EXCESS OF $100

S. 382 requires only the reporting of contributions to the Federal agency which are "in excess" of $100. Reliable data presented at the hearings as well as published in numerous reports, indicate that by requiring reports in excess of $100 you omit a substantial number of $100 contributions.

It would seem logical that a person would write a check or give cash in the amount of $100 rather than in the amount of $101. This is a serious loophole which I feel must be filled. I will offer an amendment to delete the words "in excess" to achieve the above objective of including those $100 contributions.

CONTINUOUS REPORTS AFTER ELECTION

Subsection 12 of section 304 on page 36 requires the reporting of all debts and obligations owed by or to the committee. This is a laudable objective. However, the obligation by the candidate should extend beyond the election. The public should know whether a debt has been fully paid or whether it lingers on unsatisfied. The reporting of the debt is only half of the obligation owed.

I will offer an amendment which will add a provision to subsection 12 requiring such continuous reporting of debts and obligations to the appropriate Federal agency until they are completely extinguished.

CENTRAL CAMPAIGN COMMITTEE

As noted earlier in the remarks associated with title I of this bill, I intend to offer an amendment to that title creating a Central Campaign Committee for the purpose of making predictable that person who along with the candidate, is permitted to certify to costs attributed to the candidate's ceiling.

In title III I will offer an amendment which will expand the duties of this committee and in so doing make both titles work hand in hand. An amendment will be offered in section 304 (a)—page 33, line 21 and following; the section which sets forth the requirements of the reports for political committees. The amendment will require all contributions and expenditures for a particular candidate to be submitted to the Commission through his central campaign committee. This would have the effect of centralizing the reporting procedure of the candidate, as well as providing an effective check for all other political committees operating in the candidate's behalf.

The Central Campaign Committee would then logically be those people designated by the candidate who would be certifying costs for purposes of spending ceilings and would be reporting all contributions and expenditures. Such a centralization and predictability is absolutely essential if we are to have a meaningful, enforceable, and workable reform bill.

PURCHASER AND "USER"

Section 305 in the presently drafted bill contains reporting requirements for those other than a political committee. Among those listed are those businesses whose rates are regulated by the ICC, FCC, or CAB. Section (h) (1) (A) requires the name of the purchaser and the candidate for the benefit whose campaign, the services or goods were purchased. The "user" of such goods and services has been omitted. It is possible, it seems to me, for the purchaser and the candidate to be a different person than the user of such goods and services. This is in keeping with other provisions which enable acts "in behalf of" a candidate.

I will offer an amendment which will insert the word "user" in section 305(b) (1) (A) on page 34, line 14 and following.

PROPER DISCLOSURE

Title III of S. 382 sets forth a comprehensive and somewhat complex arrangement for the reporting of facts during an election for Federal office. However, there is little or nothing which guarantees exposure of these facts to the public and without this necessary ingredient the reporting becomes a mere academic exercise.

I will offer an amendment which will offer two methods of remedy for this lack of public exposure. The amendment would require the reports to be published in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and in papers of general circulation within the political jurisdiction representing the election. In both, the Commission or the GAO, as the case may be, will disseminate the condensed version to the appropriate recipients. In both, the expenses will be incurred by the Federal Government.

PRESERVATION OF RECORDS

Sections 308 and 309 contain provisions for preservation of the records reported to the Commission or the GAO, as the case may be, and the clerk of the U.S. district courts. In both a distinction is made between House races and other Federal elections. Information pertaining to House elections are preserved for 5 years—in all others the period of preservation is 10. I feel this distinction is unnecessary and unreasonable in light of the equality of the harm and the protection afforded the public intended in all Federal elections. We cannot put those elections to the House of Representatives on a lesser plane of exposure than all others.

I will offer an amendment to enable all records in all Federal elections to be preserved for 10 years. Quite frankly, I would prefer such reports to be preserved in perpetuity. This would not be impractical considering the modern methods of recordation. If offered, I would support such an amendment; however, I feel this prior amendment at this point is a realistic compromise.

In addition, S. 382 does not direct the district courts throughout the United States to preserve and maintain these reports in a uniform manner. In consonance with other amendments to this legislation, it is again necessary to make predictable and uniform reports filed for public disclosure. Although the report itself would be uniform, there is nothing to direct uniformity of organization. By adding the words "and uniform" in section 309(b) (1), page 45, line 3, we would accomplish this objective.

INDEPENDENT COMMISSION

I strongly believe that if we are going to have a workable and realistic scheme of reporting and disclosing campaign activities, it must be coordinated and directed by an independent Federal agency—a nonpolitical entity. I find if such duties were given to the Congress through each Chamber's clerks, it would defeat the entire objective of the bill. The GAO is a useful compromise, but quite frankly we cannot afford to compromise in this essential element of the legislation. GAO as an arm of the Congress would still be tainted with suspicion by the public and subjected to possible controls by the Congress.

I will offer an amendment to establish an Independent Election Commission; it will be similar to the version as introduced in S. 956.

S. 382 which has the GAO performing these services, does not give this Federal agency any subpoena authority—a necessary investigatory power. This should be considered if the Senate, in my view, unwisely decides to retain the GAO as the coordinating Federal agency.

TITLE V

I am proposing to add a new title to the bill which would create a franking privilege for all candidates at reduced rates. This amendment was contained in S. 956 and has been adequately explained in the introductory remarks to that bill.

The amendment serves the objective of providing the means for all candidates to have equitable access to the public and is a realistic way of reducing campaign costs.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the amendments referred to above be printed in the RECORD at this time.

There being no objection, the amendments were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 44, between lines 13 and 14 insert the following:

"(c) Reports required under sections 304, 305, and 307 shall be published, in a form to be developed by the Comptroller General under section 308(a) (2) which shall reduce as much as possible the volume of reported materials, but retain such information as may accurately reflect the true levels of all contributions to and expenditures by candidates and political committees, in the Congressional Record next published after such reports are made available for public inspection and copying under section 308(a) (4). However, if there is no Congressional Record published on any of the four days following the date on which such reports are made available for public inspection and copying, then a Congressional Record containing such reports shall be published on the fifth day following such date.

"(d) Reports published pursuant to the provisions of section 308(c) shall be published by and at the expense of the Comptroller General in the next issue of a newspaper of general circulation following the publication of such reports in the Congressional Record. Such publication shall be according to the following specifications:

(1) (a) Reports for a candidate for the House of Representatives shall be published in the two newspapers of largest general publication within the Congressional district in which he is a candidate.

(b) Reports for a candidate for the United States Senate shall be published in the five newspapers of largest general circulation within the State in which he is a candidate.

(c) Reports made with respect to a candidate for election to the Presidency shall be furnished to such a newspaper in each State in which the candidate's name appears on the official ballot for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to such office or for election of Presidential electors.

(2) Reports of all other candidates for Federal elective office shall be published in a manner to be prescribed by the Comptroller General, but such publication shall be as broad as practicable.

AMENDMENT No. 290

Following the last title of this bill, insert the following new title:

LIMITATIONS ON POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS, EXPENDITURES AND PURCHASES

(A) (1) No person, other than a political committee or a candidate, may make contributions directly or indirectly during any calendar year in an aggregate amount in excess of

(A) $25,000 to any candidate for the office of President in connection with his campaigns for nomination for election, and election to such office;

(B) $15,000 to any candidate for the office of Senator in connection with his campaigns for nomination for election, and election, to such office;

(C) $5,000 to any candidate for the office of Representative or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress, in connection with his campaigns for nomination for election, and election, to such office.

(2) Amounts contributed to a political committee which make contributions to or expenditures on behalf of only one candidate shall be held and considered to be contributions to such candidate. Amounts contributed to the candidate of any party for the office of Vice President shall be held and considered to be contributions to the candidate of the same party for the office of President.

(3) Indirect contributions are defined as the transfer of funds from a donor to a candidate through one or more other persons, including members of the donor's family, without a fair market return to the donor for the money thus expended. When such indirect contributions are made in a way to conceal the origin of the contributions, any citizen eligible to vote in the election in which the receiving candidate is standing or any public prosecutor at any jurisdiction which the receiving candidate will represent, may seek a court injunction requiring such indirect contributions to be assessed against the original donor and counted toward his limit. If such action is not taken and a donor exceeds his limit without refund from the candidate, beginning on the day of the election in which the candidate is standing the donor is subject to criminal prosecution for any contributions he has made under the meaning of this act that exceed his lawful limit. If a person through whom such contributions have been channeled willingly aided the original contributor to exceed his lawful limit, he too shall be subject to criminal prosecution.

(b) In addition to the limit set forth in section (a) no person, other than a political committee, may make aggregate contributions to any political committee organized to support two or more candidates or any number of such committees in excess of $10,000. Nor may any such person specify how his contribution to a political committee supporting two or more candidates should be apportioned among the candidates the committee is supporting. All such contributions must be deposited in the committee's general fund to be dispensed at the committee's judgment.

(c) A committee that is expending funds with the substantial purpose of affecting the election or defeat of a candidate shall be considered a political committee under the meaning of this Act, even if it is ostensibly organized to support an issue. Any citizen eligible to vote in the election that is allegedly influenced by such a committee has standing to show in court that the committee is a political committee required to observe the restrictions bearing on other political committees (both) regarding the amount that can be legally contributed to these committees and regarding the manner in which and the amount these committees can legally spend in behalf of a candidate. In judging whether such a committee is in fact a political committee the court may consider, among other things, its organizational history, the geographic distribution of its expenditures, and the degree to which its stand on the issue suggests to the voter a choice of candidates.

(d) (1) No political committee or candidate may sell any goods, commodities, advertising, articles, or services to any person other than a political committee or candidate. No person other than a political committee or candidate may purchase any goods, commodities, advertising, articles, or services from a political committee or a candidate.

(2) This subsection shall not apply to a sale or purchase—

(A) of any political campaign pin, button, badge, flag, emblem, hat, banner, or similar campaign souvenir or any political campaign literature or publications (but shall apply to sales of advertising including the sale of space in any publication), for prices not exceeding $25 each;

(B) tickets to political events or gatherings;

(C) of food or drink for a charge not substantially in excess of the normal charge therefor; or

(D) made in the course of the usual and known business, trade, or profession of any person or which is a normal arm's-length transaction between persons, or a transaction between a candidate and his spouse, child or parent.

(e) In all cases of violations of this section by a partnership, committee, association, corporation, or other organization or group of persons, the officers, directors, or managing heads thereof who knowingly and willfully participate in such violation shall be punished as herein provided.

(f) Any candidate adjudged guilty of the willful receipt of funds in violation of this provision shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both. A contributor who violates this section shall be fined an amount, not tax-deductible, twice as large as the amount by which he exceeded his limit and shall be subject to imprisonment for no more than one year.

THE HEALTH SECURITY ACT— AMENDMENT

AMENDMENT NO. 265

(Ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.)

MENTAL HEALTH CARE BENEFITS

Mr. MOSS. Mr. President, as a result of the dedicated and thoughtful work of countless people over years of time, mental illness has almost attained the public concern and understanding it deserves and needs. We are nearly to the point where an individual can seek psychiatric help without people thinking he is "crazy." In short, mental health hopefully will be dealt with in the same way as physical health in the not so distant future. Unfortunately, because of recent actions by the present administration, the future of these important and beneficial developments is in doubt.

In his message to Congress on health care last February, the President examined in detail the problems of our medical delivery system. He stated we were facing a "massive crisis," and that good care had become too scarce and too expensive for many; nonexistent for some. He cited the need for great changes in that system to insure decent care for all. But the President failed to mention the whole area of mental health, as if it were not an integral part of our Nation's well-being.

The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare issued this May a white paper entitled "Toward a Comprehensive Health Policy for the 1970's." The Department chose to describe the health policy as comprehensive, yet nothing was discussed concerning mental illness.

Not unexpectedly, when the President's health care plans, the National Health Insurance Partnership Act, and the Family Health Insurance Plan for low-income people, were introduced 2 months ago, mental health care benefits were absent.

The absence of these benefits in the proposal would be comprehensible if our present system was taking care of mental health care needs better than it is other problems. Yet the opposite is true. Indicators of performance, such as the number of people covered by insurance, extent of coverage, and proportion of those needing help who are treated, all show that if any part of our health care system demands improvement, it is in mental health. A good illustration is that the Director of the National Institute on Mental Health tells us that only 5 percent of the children who require treatment for emotional disturbances or mental illness receive it.

The administration's stance would be easier to understand if the problem were not so serious. But no one can deny the significance of mental illness.

One out of 10 Americans suffers pain and anguish as a result of some form of mental or emotional illness.

Fifteen to thirty percent of the workforce is seriously handicapped by emotional problems.

One-fourth of employee absenteeism is based on emotional factors.

Sixty-five to eighty percent of the people separated from jobs are dropped for personal rather than technical or economic reasons.

Personal factors account for nine tenths of industrial accidents.

Its total annual drain on the economy has been estimated at over $20 billion.

The American people realize the magnitude of the problem. Asked to identify those areas in which they felt the Government should be more active, those responding in a recent national poll placed mental health third, following only air and water pollution control.

We could accept the Department's thinking if the problem were going away. The facts show otherwise. The attitudes and behavior of the mentally ill may lead to divorce, disharmonious family relationships, excessive gambling, promiscuity, alcoholism, drug abuse, or crime. We are all too aware of the growth of these problems.

The position taken by those who support the National Health Insurance Partnership Act would make more sense if mental and physical health were not connected. However, all the work done in this field has demonstrated how interrelated the different kinds of illnesses are. We all know from common experience physiological problems are often the result of mental disorders, and that sickness or accidents many times cause emotional difficulties.

A recent study of a large group of people shows this interrelationship, and at the same time suggests how our health care system can work more effectively. Where outpatient psychiatric referral was available, utilization of medical services was markedly reduced. Fifty-six percent of those enrolled in this prepaid group practice program made fewer visits to the internal medicine department and 48 percent had fewer laboratory procedures performed. Several other studies

The last publicly-released HUD review slapped the Atlanta Model Cities agency on the wrist for failing to audit its 28 operating agencies.

So HUD took the bull by the horns and inspected accounting records of six agencies. It found "certain deficiencies" in two of the six "which we believe could have been detected by regular on-site monitoring of fiscal transactions."

Without identifying the errant agencies, HUD said its reviews disclosed:

"(1) Ineligible expenditures; (2) lack of documentation to support expenditures; (3) improper or no bank reconciliations; (4) checks not countersigned by two officers; (5) use of petty cash as a source from which to borrow money, and (6) purchase orders and/or contracts not available for inspection."

Needless to say, HUD recommended that Model Cities "give priority" to monitoring fiscal activities of its operating agencies.

Another snafu in coordination, according to the federal auditors, involved Model Cities' failure to document follow-up action it takes to correct deficiencies uncovered in evaluation reports.

Yet another section of the audit reveals the Model Cities agency has not bothered to obtain copies of the administrative policies of its various operating agencies.

The auditors said Model Cities should review the administrative policies and procedures of the operating agencies "and take exception to any cost which is in excess of those costs allowed by (Model Cities') own administrative policy."

Another eyebrow-raiser was failure of the Model Cities agency to document the basis on which contractors are selected or consultant fees paid.

Model Cities, the audit noted, awarded contracts to nine consulting firms. Not a word was found in the contract files to indicate how many other prospective contractors—if any—were considered, the basis on which the winners were chosen or how the fees were decided.

The auditors said the city purchasing agent advised them that the city does not require bids for professional services.

But they added: "We believe, however, that in any HUD-assisted program the consultant services contract files should, as a minimum, include the following information:

- (1) An explanation of how the amount of compensation or reimbursement to be paid was determined.
- (2) Identification of each prospective contractor considered.
- (3) Summary of bids and proposals, if any, received.

(4) Justification for non-competitive procurement of contract services and reasons for selection of the contractor, or justification for selection of other than the lowest bidder in competitive procurement.

Singled out for special attention by the auditors was James S. Robinson, doing business as Urban East Housing Consultant.

Urban East, no longer under contract, received $144,569, including $30,000 for "consultant and contract services."

What concerned the auditors was the absence of any cost breakdown to justify $30,000 for consultant and contract services.

In a classic piece of bureaucratic understatement, the auditors commented, "We believe, however, that even though this contract is being phased out that the operating agency should furnish the (Model Cities agency) some evidence of the reasonableness of the value of services rendered."

Here's what an Atlanta Urban Observatory housing study had to say about Urban East:

"The role of Urban East in housing development is something of an enigma from information and evaluations derived from our informants. Most of our informants agree that Urban East has accomplished very little in stimulating new housing."

The report said the firm's specific responsibility "is variably interpreted by our informants."

Some described it as a stop-gap organization designed to aid individual families in arranging for new housing.

Urban East told the academic evaluators that its broad responsibilities included counseling families with legal difficulties in existing housing, supervision of management in housing projects, developing feasibility studies for housing construction, aiding residents in applying for housing assistance under low-interest federal programs and locating sponsors for new housing on designated tracts.

But like other agencies involved in the no-go housing effort, Urban East's role was described by Urban Observatory officials as "fuzzy" and its ability to generate new housing "remained at a continuous level of inadequacy."

THE PERSIAN GULF

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, July 21, 1971

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, the Persian Gulf could become an increasingly important for the United States in the next decade. Without radical changes in the U.S. fuel and natural gas priorities and many new discoveries of energy deposits, the United States will, in the late 1970's and early 1980's, have to import more than a third of its oil from the Persian Gulf according to a State Department estimate. These estimates, however, never approach the nearly 90 percent dependency of Western Europe and Japan on Middle East oil.

Unfortunately, this time of increased potential importance of the oil deposits in the gulf corresponds with a time of increased potential political instability. The correct British decision to end its fig leaf of protection in the lower gulf area will have repercussions on an area that has changed little politically over the last century.

Many of the dormant political rivalries that could bring the whole gulf area to the brink of a period of violent upheaval were recently documented in an excellent article by David Holden entitled "The Persian Gulf: After the British Raj," which appeared in the July 1971 issue of Foreign Affairs.

The two major causes of the rivalries in the gulf area are religious and ethnic: the Persians or Iranians are mostly on the north side and the Arabs on the south side of the gulf; and the inhabitants of the area are both Shi'i and Sunni Muslims, the two largest sects in Islam. The Arab side of the gulf is predominantly Sunni, except for parts of the lower gulf, and Iraq and Iran are largely Shi'i.

In an area of small states, there are four major gulf powers, each of which is trying to assert some kind of great presence or influence as the British leave. Iran sees only increasing instability on the Arab side of the gulf and in order to protect her position, she indicates that she will reclaim three small islands near the mouth of the gulf—the Straits of Hormuz. Both Iraq and Saudi Arabia have interests in improving their respective positions in the area; they also spend some time feuding with each other. Kuwait, a small state with a big purse, is quietly using its influence to insure greater political stability in the lower Arab gulf.

Ten small entities occupy the rest of the Arab side of the gulf, but their smallness is accompanied by longstanding tribal rivalries and a penchant for being unable to reason together. Oman has been independent for some time and, indeed, had relations with the United States in the 1830's. Today Oman faces a south Yemeni and Chinese-inspired revolt at its back door. Bahrain, an island which refines and produces oil, is also seeking independence, and Qatar, a smaller producer of oil, is expected to follow. The seven remaining Trucial States, so-called because of the treaty relationship with England since the 1830's, are, with varying degrees of enthusiasm, considering the possibility of joining together in a federation which the British seek to establish before they depart at the end of 1971. Recently, six of the Trucial States ratified a federation constitution but there may be more changes before the British leave. Indeed, old family feuds between tribal leaders and the disparities between rich oil sheikhdoms and their very poor fishing communities threaten such a conglomeration before it comes into being.

Whether all these states will be able to stand alone remains to be seen. The revolutionary forces in the Arab world are becoming increasingly vocal and dominant. If social change and massive education are not given to the entire population of the area, tribal leaders, kings and sultans will be overthrown. For the United States there is only the role of providing technical assistance and acquainting itself with the problems of the region. In this exercise, David Holden's article is most useful. It follows:

THE PERSIAN GULF: AFTER THE BRITISH RAJ
(By David Holden)

When Sir Alec Douglas-Home, the British Foreign Secretary, told the House of Commons in March that all permanent British forces in the Persian Gulf would be withdrawn by the beginning of 1972 he signaled the end of the last important vestige of the nineteenth century's Pax Britannica and opened the door to what could be a major, and possibly painful, reconstruction of the Middle Eastern map.

Ever since Britain signed her first Arabian treaty with the Sultan of Muscat in 1798, in a successful attempt to close the Gulf to French naval forces during the Napoleonic wars, a "special relationship" has existed between Britain and the territories around the Gulf. In Persia, as Iran was generally known until after the Second World War, the British established a sphere of interest so important to them as an answer to Russia's imperial designs upon India that for a time in the nineteenth century there were two separate British diplomatic missions in Tehran—one appointed by the British Government in India and the other from the London Foreign Office. On the Arab shore of the Gulf the relationship was for many decades more arbitrary and more tenuous, being based essentially upon the exercise of Britain's maritime power over a number of

As in case of the McClellan resolution, the Bridges amendment was unanimously and overwhelmingly adopted in the Senate—by the vote of 76 to 0 on June 3, 1953. Twenty other members of the Senate, absent for the vote, recorded themselves that day in favor of the provision.

Long after the passions of the Korean war had subsided, section 105 lived on in the annual appropriation bill as a silent reminder of a bygone era. It was never discussed in the Senate or House reports, and it was rarely mentioned in the floor debates. Now, at last it has passed quietly from the scene, and almost no one mourns its loss.

I ask unanimous consent that the table be printed in the RECORD.

RUSSIA DENIES JEWISH EXODUS

Mr. PROXMIER. Mr. President, the Government of the Soviet Union has taken another step to sabotage the Soviet Jews' struggle for freedom. According to last night's Washington Star, the number of Soviet Jews leaving Russia dropped from an average of 36 a day to an average of five a day.

The Soviets are selling freedom. In order to leave the Jews must pay 4,000 rubles or $4,440—3 years' wages for the average working man—for the required documents.

This is just one more step by the Soviets in their campaign to persecute the Jewish population in that country. Although the Soviet Union is trying to convince the world that it does not discriminate against Soviet Jewry, the facts prove differently. As long as the world sits back and idly watches, the Russian Government will continue its "anti-Jewish" campaign. This body must do everything in its power to assist the Soviet Jews' move toward freedom.

I ask unanimous consent that the article from the Evening Star be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JEWISH EMIGRATION CUT BY SOVIET LAID TO ARABS

Moscow.—The Soviet government has drastically reduced Jewish emigration to Israel, cutting the number of daily departures from an average of 36 to 5.

Unofficial Soviet sources blamed the new restrictions on Arab criticism and on a bureaucratic snarl that developed after emigration was greatly increased in March.

The Soviet Union's Arab allies were upset over the increased flow of Russian Jewish emigrants, fearing they were swelling the ranks of Israeli military units.

The informants said the low level of emigration is likely to continue until the department that handles the emigrants is reorganized to take care of the load.

Meanwhile, Jewish sources reported that the Jews who do get out are being required to pay 4,000 rubles—$4,440 at the official rate—for exit visa, passport and renunciation of Soviet citizenship. And one source said the government is now confiscating the deposits of Jewish emigrants in the state savings program, which takes 10 per cent of all salaries.

"We have managed so far, and we will not let that stop us," said one Jewish source.

In March the Soviet government allowed Jewish emigration to increase from 83 to 1,500 a month following Jewish demonstrations in Moscow and international criticism of the trial of 10 Jews who planned to hijack a plane to get to Israel.

JUNE 29, 1971.

Hon. WILLIAM P. ROGERS,
The Secretary of State,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: On June 7 a State Department spokesman told the press that the United States support for Thai troops in Laos began as a program authorized by President Kennedy, that the troops are in Laos at the request of the Prime Minister of Laos and that United States financing of these troops is "fully consistent with all pertinent legislation." As Chairman of the Subcommittee on United States Security Agreements and Commitments Abroad, I am interested in obtaining background information and documentation relevant to these assertions by the Department's spokesman.

In this connection we would appreciate your furnishing the Subcommittee with the following information.

(1) A description of the specific decisions taken by President Kennedy to authorize United States funding of Thai troops in Laos, and of the subsequent actions taken by United States diplomatic and military authorities to implement such decisions.

(2) An explanation of the funding procedure used to provide financial support for Thai troops pursuant to President Kennedy's original authorization.

(3) A description of Prime Minister Souvanna Phouma's request for Thai troops, including answers to the following specific questions:

a. When was the Prime Minister's request (or requests) made?

b. In what form was the request made?

c. To whom and to what government or governments was it addressed?

d. What specifically did the Prime Minister request?

e. What did the Prime Minister's request say with regard to arrangements for financial support and publicity concerning Thai troops?

f. What response was given to the Prime Minister by the person, government or governments to whom the request was addressed?

(4) An explanation of how Souvanna's request relates to the various undertakings of the Royal Lao Government in the Geneva Agreements of 1962.

(5) A detailed explanation of any discussions, arrangements and agreements, formal or informal, involving the United States Government and the Royal Lao Government or the Government of Thailand relative to past or present United States financing and support for Thai troops in Laos.

(6) An identification of the departments or agencies which have provided funds for support of each of the various programs involving Thai troops in Laos.

Because the above request is relevant to the Senate's consideration of pending legislation having to do with United States expenditures in Laos, we would respectfully request that the information be provided at earliest opportunity.

Sincerely,

STUART SYMINGTON,

Chairman, Subcommittee on U.S. Security Agreements and Commitments Abroad.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, this is getting to be quite an interesting development. When there was a crisis in the British Government in 1936, a story was around that Sir Winston Churchill suggested the King use the King's men. If, in accordance with press reports, the CIA is conducting a war in Laos, we might call them the President's men, people operating not only without the approval of Congress, but also without its knowledge.

SUPPLEMENTAL VIEWS OF MR. ALLEN

While I voted to order reported from our Committee on Rules and Administration the bill, S. 382, as amended, I feel that it is subject to the objection that it does not limit the overall cost of campaigning. While commendable in purpose and potentially effective in the limited area of its operation, it simply does not go far enough.

The bill would limit campaign expenditures in two categories only, (1) broadcast media advertising, and (2) nonbroadcast media advertising, such as newspapers, magazines and other periodicals, and billboard facilities.

The limit set is 5¢ for each person of voting age for such office and each of the two categories of advertising. However, the expenditures are interchangeable, so that actually a limit of 10¢ for each person of voting age for such office is provided, to be divided as the candidate wishes between the two categories.

In most cases, the limits set are much higher than those set by S. 3637 which passed during the 91st Congress but was vetoed by the President and his veto sustained.

In the President's veto message, he said that S. 3637 did not limit the overall cost of campaigning. Neither does S. 382.

He also said in his message:

"The problem with campaign spending is not radio and television; the problem is spending. This bill plugs only one hole in a sieve.

"Candidates who had and wanted to spend large sums of money, could and would simply shift their advertising out of radio and television into other media—magazines, newspapers, billboards, pamphlets, and direct mail. There would be no restriction on the amount they could spend in these media.

"Hence, nothing in this bill would mean less campaign spending.

"In fact, the bill might tend to increase rather than decrease the total amount that candidates spend in their campaigns. It is a fact of political life that in many Congressional districts and States a candidate can reach more voters per dollar through radio and TV than any other means of communication. Severely limiting the use of TV and radio in these areas would only force the candidate to spend more by requiring him to use more expensive techniques.

"By restricting the amount of time a candidate can obtain on television and radio, this legislation would severely limit the ability of many candidates to get their message to the greatest number of the electorate. The people deserve to know more, not less, about the candidates and where they stand."

These same criticisms apply to S. 382 except that nonbroadcast media advertising has been limited along with radio and TV.

The President seemingly favors an overall limitation on expenditures and with this position I agree.

The bill places no limit on expenditures for mass mailings, for handbills, brochures, printing, WATS lines, telephones, postage, campaign headquarters (state and various local ones), unlimited campaign workers, airplane rentals and tickets, buses, trains (special and regular), campaign newspapers, movie theatre film advertisements, campaign staffs, public relation firms, production expenses for broadcasts, public opinion polls, paid campaigners and poll watchers, novelties, bumper stickers, sample ballots.

I feel that an overall limit should be placed on the total amount of campaign contributions and expenditures that a candidate may receive or spend.

I would feel that a limit of 10c or less per person of voting age for an office should be set for all expenditures not limited by the broadcast and nonbroadcast media advertising limitations.

Total contributions that might be received could thus be limited to 20c or less per person of voting age for such office. This limitation on the total amount of contributions would probably be more effective than merely adding the 10c or less limitation for all expenses other than media advertising. I would also feel that the candidate's own expenditures should be treated as contributions to the campaign.

I submit that there is even greater need to limit expenditure for nonmedia advertising than for media advertising. Media advertising is open and aboveboard and available for all to see. Overuse of media advertising might even be counter-productive if the electorate felt that the candidate was overspending in that field. The nonmedia expenditures would not be as apparent to the public but could be as effective and as expensive. It would be in the field of nonmedia expenditures that irregularities, or corrupt practices or abuses, if any, might be more likely to occur. A limit should be placed on nonmedia expenditures, and I plan to offer an amendment providing for such a limit.

JAMES B. ALLEN.

AMENDMENT NO. 307

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

COMPARABLE UNIT RATE AMENDMENT

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, today I am introducing an amendment to S. 382, to promote fair campaign practices in Federal elections, which is designed to prevent political candidates from reaping an economic windfall because of the lowest unit rate provisions of this legislation.

Specifically, my amendment would alter section 101(b), which deals with broadcast media, by eliminating the requirement that such media charge political candidates for Federal elective office their lowest unit rate during the 45-day period preceding a primary election and the 60-day period preceding a special or general election and by substituting in lieu thereof a requirement that such candidates be assessed the rates charged for the "same class and amount of time and same frequency of use" during the specified periods. Similarly, my amendment would change section 103(b), which deals with nonbroadcast media, by eliminating the lowest unit pricing requirement and substituting a requirement that candidates be assessed the rate charged others by the person furnishing such medium for the "same class and amount of space and same frequency of use" during the time periods stipulated in the bill.

As presently written, sections 101(b) and 103(b) would require that a candidate purchasing prime television and radio time or buying space in the printed media be provided the same preferential rates that the media now gives its volume customers in order to attract additional advertising. Thus, these provisions would give volume advertising rates to a preferred group the members of which may very well not qualify under the usual volume and space criteria. In this sense, we are creating a discriminatory preference.

While I joined in voting to report S. 382, which I believe to be an important step forward in Federal campaign reform, I am strongly opposed to the concept of lowest unit pricing. One of the primary purposes of S. 382 is to limit political campaign expenditures. This is the effect of other sections of the bill. However, since sections 101(b) and 103(b) would drastically increase the value of the political dollar during the specified periods, this laudable goal would be partially thwarted. This is so because the amount of time and advertising space which a candidate could purchase with a specific amount of money would be substantially increased. Thus, these provisions are nothing more than a giveaway within the overall context of a limitation on political expenditures. If sections 101(b) and 103(b) are enacted, the broadcast and nonbroadcast media will be jammed during election time with political advertisements that do not meet the usual lowest unit pricing criteria.

In addition to thwarting one of the major purposes of S. 382, these provisions would have an extremely adverse economic impact on small broadcasters and elements of the print media. This impact would result from the fact that sections 101(b) and 103(b) would compel many elements of the media to give politicians bargain rates during prime time or in advertising space which could be more profitably utilized if allocated to other customers. In order to survive, some components of the media would find it necessary to abandon lowest unit pricing altogether. In many instances, the loss of income incurred by those radio and television stations, newspapers, and magazines which decide to retain lowest unit pricing would be just as great as for those which abandon it.

In my State of Alaska, which has many small broadcasters and elements of the print media, the economic consequences of sections 101(b) and 103(b) would be specially acute. The Alaska media is doing its best to provide our small population with modern, quality news and programming services; however, they are doing so on what often amounts to a shoe-string budget. To impose additional economic burdens on an industry which is now beleaguered by high taxes and other problems would result in the collapse of some broadcasters, newspapers, and other publications. This would be most unfortunate.

On a nationwide basis, the failure of some media elements would result in the increasing aggregation of communications resources in a few individuals and corporations. This type of aggregation is foreign to one of the basic tenets of our democracy; that is, that our citizens should be exposed to many ideas and points of view from which the best ideas will ultimately emerge. Over the years, we have seen an alarming decrease in the number of newspapers which serve the various cities of this Nation. This decrease is due to many factors. I do not want to see the Congress, through the enactment of restrictive legislation, add another factor which is sure to accelerate the trend toward the consolidation of communications media.

In many parts of Alaska and in other rural areas throughout the Nation, the collapse of small broadcast and print media would result in the termination of all sources of information, not just the end of a healthy competition between different sources. Again, one of the basic premises of our democracy would be violated since the citizenry in these areas would not have the information necessary to make the type of informed decisions upon which the ideological health of our Nation is so heavily dependent. In addition, in places like Alaska where access to weather data and public service information is so important to the safety of the people, the collapse of the commercial media would mean that Federal, State, and local governments would have to provide all such essential information. This would be most costly and unnecessary, especially in view of the willingness of the commercial media to disseminate public service information provided that governmental regulation does not deprive them of the economic wherewithal to do so.

Mr. President, I believe that the considerations which I have referred to today are compelling reasons for the elimination of the lowest unit pricing concept from S. 382, which, as amended by the Committees on Commerce and Rules, is indeed an important statement of political campaign reform. Accordingly, I ask the Members of this body to act favorably on the amendment which I have just described.

I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be printed at this point in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. In addition, I also request that the rate schedule of certain broadcast and nonbroadcast media in my State be printed in order to document further the contentions which I have made today.

There being no objection, the amendment and material were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I send to the desk an amendment to S. 382, the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, and ask that it be printed. This amendment is aimed at correcting what I view as a great infringement on the rights of individual union members in the United States—the use of union dues funds by labor organizations for political purposes.

Direct use of union dues money for supporting presidential, senatorial, or congressional candidates in campaigns is now illegal under title 18, section 610, of the United States Code. However, labor leaders can and do use dues money in State and local elections; and, as we all know, it is quite simple to get around this law by setting up a separate committee to support political candidates. This is frequently accomplished with only the thinnest veil of disguise.

When this happens, the individual union member from whom these funds are obtained has no choice of how the moneys are to be used. The choice of financially supporting particular candidates is that of union leaders, not the individual union members.

The individual member is often put in the position of contributing to the support of a candidate with whom he does not agree. The only remedy available to a union member is to bring a law suit to get back part of his dues if he does not agree with the union leader's choice of candidates. This remedy is expensive, inadequate, and, in reality, impractical. The cost of such a law suit, even in the nature of a class action, would be many times that of the dues paid. The remedy is fine in theory; in reality, it is non-existent.

Mr. President, my amendment is of particular importance in today's society where the political funds controlled by a large union coupled with the impact of today's sophisticated communications media could reverse the outcome of an election. My amendment would not halt a union from engaging in legitimate political activities involving particular issues or legislation. The unions, like other organizations, have a right to engage in activities which will further legitimate goals and objectives of their members. This is the job which is assigned to the union by the employees it represents. However, it is not the job of the labor union to use dues money which is often collected involuntarily under a union security agreement for the selection of officeholders. My amendment would only preclude the use by a labor organization or any other group or person of moneys collected from employees who are required to pay dues, fees, or assessments as a condition of employment.

The net effect of my amendment would be to allow all union members to contribute or not contribute to the political cause of their choosing. This would be accomplished without dilution of legitimate union political influence.

The amendment is a fair and equitable solution to the serious problem of abuse of individual political rights. I hope my colleagues in the Senate will support such necessary legislation.

EMERGENCY LOAN GUARANTEE ACT OF 1971

AMENDMENT NO. 309

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

EMERGENCY LOANS FOR U.S. BUSINESS AND AGRICULTURE

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. President, the proposed Federal guarantees of a $2 billion loan to the Lockheed Corp. graphically demonstrate the abuse of the American taxpayer which is perpetrated for the benefit of the oft-decried but still flourishing military-industrial complex. In the words of John Kenneth Galbraith, the loan guarantees at issue represent nothing so much as "socialism for the rich."

Approval of these guarantees will commit this Government to act vigorously to protect a mismanaged corporation's profits, many of which have been accrued from bungled Government contracts. It will insure the profits of the 24 major banks which have pleaded so touchingly for these guarantees. But it will also continue this Nation's sad neglect of the needs of small business, minority-run enterprise, and small farms. And the gnawing question whether Lockheed can ever be a solvent, stable company under the present management in the present economy would be ignored.

It is clear that the Federal Government has no business in bailing out big business. Just this sort of intertwining of business and government warps policy decisions to the extent that the interests of the taxpaying citizens are ignored. The integrity of the Federal Government should not be compromised by rushing into the breach every time a major corporation flounders.

However unpleasant such a policy of loan guarantees appears when considered in the abstract, it becomes odious in the sordid case of the Lockheed Corp. This company has been living off Government contracts for the last 20 years, during which time it has not built a successful large commercial airplane.

Lockheed has to its credit one of the most egregious abuses of a public contract in recent history: the C-5A cargo plane. The C-5A contract was awarded to Lockheed because the company deliberately underbid by 10 percent the sum required to complete the contract, misleading the Defense Department. Lockheed went on to pile up a $2 billion cost overrun, while the unit cost of the C-5A skyrocketed from $23 million to $60 million apiece. And the General Accounting Office recently reported that the giant cargo plane was unable to perform up to requirements.

Lockheed has also recorded smaller violations of the public trust. The Cheyenne helicopter program, which was scheduled to have been deployed by now, is still in the research and development stage due to the company's underestimation of cost and technical problems. A severe overrun has also been incurred on the SRAM rocket motor, which according to the GAO is still technically deficient. Both programs had fixed price contracts which were renegotiated to Lockheed's advantage.

None of this is surprising considering the recent disclosure by a former Lockheed executive of the rampant inefficiency and corporate irresponsibility within the company. For this is but a partial presentation of the mass of evidence that does not merely cloud Lockheed's reputation but which indicts the company for extreme incompetence and mismanagement.

The corporate picture does not brighten when we turn to the specific project in question—the L-1011 or Tri-Star commercial jet. Lockheed has had $400 million in loans until now for the project. The banks have refused further loans without Federal guarantees. They apparently recognize that their money is bound to be misallocated and misspent if they grant the loans. And they can further see that even if the Tri-Star is finally completed, the company only has 110 firm orders for commercial sale, well under the 300-plus mark which must be reached for the company to break even on the project.

No bank would survive if it loaned money under such circumstances. And why should the Federal Government make the loan? This Government has already put up $500 million in assets as collateral for loans for Lockheed for the C-5A. Should the company go bankrupt—an eventuality which should never be dismissed when dealing with this company—it is highly unlikely that the Government will be able to recover its funds. And Lockheed does not even say that this $250 million it all it needs to complete the Tri-Star program, leaving the door open for future loan applications.

The one appealing argument the proponents of this measure have put forth is the protection of 31,000 Lockheed jobs through the guarantee of these loans. But a better way to protect these jobs would be to have the company declare bankruptcy, reorganize, and rid itself of the present catastrophic management. One advantage of capitalism is that an inefficient company that cannot operate profitably must change or go under. But Congress is now asked to prevent this alternative from arising. Under such bankruptcy proceedings most of Lockheed's job openings would remain. And it is difficult to take seriously the administration's interest in providing jobs in light of the recent veto of a public works bill that would have established 200,000 jobs in the construction industry.

Perhaps, though, we should look at the situation through the eyes of Lockheed's competitors, and their employees. Both McDonnell-Douglas and Boeing are under great financial pressure, and will undoubtedly be at an unfair competitive disadvantage if Lockheed gets its loan guarantees. Shall this Government then guarantee loans for the other two companies to protect their jobs? Or shall we restrict ourselves to insuring the profits of only one company in the field? In either case the result would be an undermining of any element of free enterprise left in the aircraft industry.

An attempt has been made to obscure the purpose of the legislation by asking for $2 billion in loan guarantees, ostensibly for any large business which is in similar trouble. That does not change the fact that this legislation is designed to save Lockheed. It compounds the harm that will be done by this measure, however, by opening the door for future guaranteed loans to future Lockheeds. Earlier we were presented with the possibility of saving one company; now we see that the Federal Government is to become the lifeguard for all companies.

Thus, I oppose this measure. The Government should not be in the business of helping giant corporations to continue their incompetence. The job issue which has been raised concerns me, but is not so serious as Lockheed would have us think when compared with the dangerous precedents which would be set. This measure is one way to hasten the disappearance of free enterprise in this country as mammoth, inefficient, and Government-subsidized companies take over the landscape.

However, because the matter has progressed to the floor of the Senate, I am asking for some measure of economic justice by introducing an amendment to establish an equal $2 billion amount of loan guarantees for small businesses and farmers.

Just as Lockheed faces problems—mostly of its own making—many farmers and merchants are suffering from the effects of inflation and tight credit. There are now more than 10,000 small businesses across the Nation which are in danger of collapsing in this time of inflation-recession. Approval of this bill may clinch the failure of these companies, for banks will again be encouraged to loan to major corporations, which are protected by the Government, rather than to small businesses, which are at the mercy of an unfriendly marketplace.

This Nation must begin to address itself to the issue of the quality of the life we all share. We must decide now whether as a matter of national policy we will show preference for the assembly line over the small shop, corporate agriculture over the family farm, chainstores over neighborhood merchants. The resources of this Nation would be appropriately and profitably spent aiding the small businessman, the small farmer, and the minority businessman, all of whom are discriminated against by the structure of our financial and economic system. Two billion dollars of loan guarantees would go a long way toward helping the little man in our economy.

Surely, our values and our sense of justice have not been so perverted that we hasten to prop up Lockheed with its many failures and demonstrable irresponsibility in dealing with public moneys, while we abandon the sturdy entrepreneur who stands alone in industry, agriculture, and commerce. The economic deck is stacked stolidly against the individual, and this bill simply puts another ace up the sleeves of large corporations. I implore this body to spurn the attempt to make Government the handmaiden of big business.

The amendment which I am introducing would at least extend the same open hand to our farmers and small businessmen. For those who want to provide assistance to our major corporations—deemed "major" because of their size—it should not be difficult to recognize that we should also provide help to the small businessman and farmer who, in the aggregate, constitute the major underpinning of our economy.

Thus, in the name of economic justice, any Senator who supports the bill before us should have no difficulty in supporting this amendment.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the amendment that I am introducing be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 309

On page 2, line 14, insert the following: "In the case of guarantees of loans to farm owners or proprietors of small businesses under section 4(a)(3), the Board may delegate its authority to consider and grant or deny loan guarantees under this Act to the Farmers Home Administration or the Small Business Administration."

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

SUSPENSION OF AMERICAN AID TO PAKISTAN

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, I take great pleasure in announcing that the senior Senator from Colorado (Mr. AL-

LOTT) has agreed to cosponsor the Saxbe-Church amendment suspending American aid to Pakistan until adequate relief measures are undertaken in East Pakistan. In agreeing to cosponsor this amendment the Senator from Colorado stated:

It appears that West Pakistan is more concerned with military measures against East Pakistan, and is uninterested or incompetent regarding the desperate business of alleviating the suffering of East Pakistan.

We cannot control the actions of the West Pakistan government, but we should insist that American aid be used to alleviate the suffering, not intensify it.

Mr. President, I am aware that Pakistan may have been instrumental in arranging the Kissinger trip to China. I hope that we were not required to pay too high a price for Pakistan's role in this affair.

Mr. President, I invite the attention of Senators to further press accounts on Pakistan and ask unanimous consent that the articles be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BENGALI ADVOCATES OF PEACE WARNED ABOUT COLLABORATION

(By Henry S. Bradsher)

DACCA, EAST PAKISTAN.—Kondukar Mahabur Rahman does not sleep at home any more. It is unsafe.

He moves about warily during the daytime. At night he hides in the home of one friend or another. He is afraid of being murdered.

Rahman is a member of the peace committee at Jhikargacha, a small town near the Indian border on the road to Calcutta. Peace committees have been established all over East Pakistan since the army crack-down to collaborate with martial law authorities.

Rahman said he had received a threatening letter signed by the East Pakistan Communist party warning against collaboration.

Two peace committee chairmen in nearby villages have been killed, he said. He's worried.

LETTER OF WARNING

To the south, at Khulna, the top civil official for the southwestern part of East Pakistan, Commissioner Hasan Zaman, has received an unsigned letter warning him to quit working for the martial law regime or he would be killed. The chief police official for the area also was threatened. Both live behind armed guards.

The clandestine radio of the "Bangla Desh government," now—exiled opponents of rule from West Pakistan, frequently reports "executions" of peace committee members and other alleged enemies of the East Pakistani people.

While peace committee members are afraid of assassination, residents of a number of villages say they are afraid of peace committee members as well as the army.

ACCUSATION MADE

The peace committee members are accused of using their positions to even old political scores and for common gangsterism.

According to some prominent Bengali leaders, the most discredited and disreputable men came forward after the initial bloodshed in March and April to offer their services to the army. "They are people who would do anything for money or a plane ticket to Geneva", one leader said.

Many members are politicians who were wiped out when Mujibur Rahman's Awami League got 72 percent of the vote in last December's elections in East Pakistan. The League is now banned and Rahman is awaiting trial for treason.

President A. M. Yahya Khan has said by-elections will be held to fill the National Assembly seats of Awami League members whom the government thinks guilty of crimes.

GOVERNMENT GAINS

So far the government is known to have won over only about 20 of 160 Awami League members of the National Assembly. It hopes to pressure more into denouncing Mujibur Rahman, thus reducing its embarrassment at the lack of local support and limiting the number of by-elections.

Peace committee members apparently hope to win the by-elections and resume the political roles from which the voters dumped them in the free election Dec. 7.

The organizer of the peace committees was Khwaja Khairuddin, an old politician who got only 20 percent of the vote against "Sheikh Mujib" in Khairuddin's old Dacca constituency in December.

Khairuddin explained that the peace committees are supposed to provide communication between the people and the government.

FORMING AUXILIARIES

They are raising their own armed auxiliaries, he said.

Khairuddin estimated the number of peace committee members killed in the last two months at between 300 and 400.

He has been threatened and goes around Dacca with a carload of armed men.

The officer directing civil affairs in East Pakistan, Maj. Gen. Rao Farman Ali Khan, said the number of peace committee members killed was only about 100 and only 20 of them were important leaders.

But both a sampling of several areas and impressions of observers here suggest Khairuddin and right and the general was trying to play down the problem.

In Jessor district, where Jhikargacha is located, 421 committee members were reported killed in recent weeks. In Khulna district, 33 reportedly were killed.

These districts probably have higher than average tolls, but still the province-wide total seems high.

LITTLE MEANING SEEN

Gen. Farman said almost every Bengali working for or with the government in a prominent position has received a threatening letter. Therefore, he contended, the letters have little meaning—they would be more frightening if more selective.

This did not sound like the kind of reasoning with which Kondukar Mahaburur Tahman would agree, but there was no chance to go back and try it out on him.

Unable to spread its forces around enough to protect all peace committee members, as well as all bridges and other important points in the province, the army has tried to protect them with terror.

There have been reports of retaliatory killings of villagers where peace committee members have been murdered. Although this could not be directly confirmed, it followed logically from the announced policy of holding an area collectively responsible for anything that goes wrong in it.

REMINISCENT OF VIETNAM

The pattern of local representatives of the central authority having to sleep away from home in order to escape assassination is reminiscent of Vietnam.

The tests of security there is whether the village headmen or foreign advisers can sleep in their own residences.

But for all the atrocities of Vietnam, the Saigon government has never followed the practice of retaliating against the villagers when the headman gets murdered. There the assumption is that the villagers are likely to be as much in fear of and opposed to Viet Cong terror bands as the government's agents are.

Here, however, martial law authorities from West Pakistan seem to assume that underground assassins represent the feelings of the common people and the way to stop them is to bring pressure on the people.

REBELS MOVE FREELY IN PAKISTAN
 (By Lee Lescaze)

DACCA.—The guerrilla leader waited until two foreign reporters had been in the village for about 10 minutes before he appeared from behind a house, unarmed, but followed by a young man carrying a rifle.

He had agreed to the meeting on the condition that neither his name nor the name of the village he now lives in be reported.

He appeared to be so confident of his safety that no security guards were posted on the muddy road the reporters walked to reach him.

The Pakistan government said the only significant Liberation Army (Mukti Fauj) guerrilla elements fighting for East Pakistan's independence operate from sanctuaries across the Indian border, making hit-and-run raids.

The guerrilla, who is deputy leader of a platoon of 37 men, freely conceded that almost all his ammunition and weapons come from India and that he once took his unit into India after a successful ambush of army soldiers that he knew would bring reprisals.

However, he says that his band has been living in the same predominantly Moslem village since it returned from India June 29 and intends to stay well inside East Pakistan.

His men avoid the main roads some 5 miles from their base during the daytime, but otherwise they move freely, the guerrilla said. The night belongs to them and in the day, they have no fear of encountering soldiers in the waterlogged paddies and jute fields of this low-lying land.

They get no pay, but occasionally receive money from across the border which they use to pay for food. Some, the guerrilla explained, is not paid for. "We go from house to house picking up voluntary contributions."

He said the local farmers didn't mind supporting his men and were happy to have them in the village. Residents of a nearby village said later that they resented giving up scarce food, but that they preferred the guerrillas to the army.

All of the platoon's leaders are veterans of the Bengali regiments of the Pakistan army. The deputy leader served for 21 years as a noncommissioned officer before he retired a year ago.

He said that seven platoon members had regular military backgrounds and 30 are students recruited locally after the Pakistan army struck and the civil war began March 25.

The platoon operates independently, but has frequent contact with another platoon of roughly equal size that lives in a nearby village.

They receive no orders from higher military authorities, but send written reports of their actions by runner across the border to guerrilla camps in India, he said.

His men have sten guns, light machine guns and adequate supplies of ammunition, dynamite and mines, the guerrilla leader said. He added they have no shortage of medicine.

At the moment he is not interested in finding new recruits and appears to rely for ultimate victory on large numbers of guerrillas now training in India. He maintains that 200,000 will shortly move across the border to attack the army in his sector, but that figure seems enormously exaggerated.

He is suspicious of strangers and explained that if a man arrived in the village wanting to enlist, he would be shot as a Pakistan army agent. He was also determined that his platoon will execute any soldier taken prisoner, but none have been captured alive yet.

The largest action his unit has participated in was an ambush that he and other local residents believe killed more than 20 Pakistani soldiers in April.

It was after that fire-fight that he retreated to India, where he was housed and cared for by the Indian army. From the battles he watched at the border, he confirmed Pakistan's allegation that Indian artillery and mortars often fire across the border in support of guerrilla attacks on the Pakistan army.

Since returning to East Pakistan, his platoon has been relatively inactive considering their freedom of movement in a generally undefended countryside.

They ambushed an army truck and believe they wounded one soldier. Most recently, they raided a police station and captured 13 rifles without suffering or inflicting any casualties after the sentry fled.

The deputy platoon leader says that his unit has not suffered any casualties since the war began and that no one has deserted from his command.

He was reticent about future plans, but made it clear that his men will use their dynamite and mines to cut roads in an effort to further limit the movement of the army which relies on its jeeps and trucks and rarely ventures into the countryside.

In addition to harassing the army and police, the guerrillas want to assassinate members of the Peace Committees—groups of local people who work with the army and often decide for the army which local villagers are reliable and which should be arrested or shot.

Reports of Peace Committee members being killed are common throughout East Pakistan. The deputy platoon leader's men have caught and murdered one.

Their victim had ordered the murder of two men and, by the guerrilla leader's account, was not unprepared for their retribution.

He asked for an hour to say good-bye to his mother and after that time had elapsed, he emerged from the house and faced a "people's court" the guerrillas had hastily assembled by waking up several neighbors.

The unsurprising verdict was guilty and the guerrillas led him about a mile to the main road, where they shot him and left his body by the roadside.

Like the Pakistan army, the guerrillas have given themselves the power of life and death. The leader remarked that he had spent the last night unsuccessfully looking for another Peace Committee member who is marked for assassination.

He believes in the outlawed Awami League of Sheikh Mujibur Rahman which won Pakistan's first national election last December.

He sees the guerrilla movement as the military arm of the Awami League and is confident that the Awami League will become the ruling party when East Pakistan wins its independence.

He spoke unemotionally about his guerrilla activities and his view of the future, predicting that he would not have to live in East Pakistan's villages for long.

So far, the guerrilla leader has run a leisurely, relatively painless underground resistance struggle since March 25.

Most observers here do not share his conviction that the civil war will end soon. His platoon is likely to see much more fighting before there will be a chance that his goal can be achieved.

PAKISTAN REBELS BLAST DACCA POWER PLANTS

DACCA, EAST PAKISTAN.—East Pakistani rebels carrying automatic weapons stormed three power plants in Dacca and blasted them out of commission, leaving major industrial until today when the Washington Post in its lead editorial recognized the import and potential impact of this measure.

The Post's highly favorable editorial is encouraging to me and I commend it to Senators who will soon be considering this historic measure.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that this editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, July 21, 1971]

AIM FOR HIGHER EDUCATION

With little fanfare the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare last week reported out a higher education bill which—if it were to receive adequate funding—would lay a firm new foundation for federal support for higher education. Sponsored by Senator Pell, it would (1) establish a student grant program which would appreciably lower the barriers to higher education facing young people from low and lower-middle income families, and (2) give substantial financial aid to the colleges and universities that bear the cost of educating students from these income groups.

The proposed student grant program would depart from present legislation by introducing the principle of "entitlement" to student aid: i.e., anyone falling under the bill's definition of "needy" and "student" would be entitled to a federal grant. Any student in good standing at an accredited college, university or post-secondary vocational school would be eligible for a grant equal to $1,400 a year minus a "family contribution" depending on family income, assets, number of children and so forth. A student whose family's resources were too meager to permit them to make any contribution would receive the full $1,400 from the government; a student whose family could contribute $800 would receive $600, and so forth.

It should be noted that the bill does not guarantee everyone the right to go to college. Decisions about who should be admitted and what constitutes "good standing" are left to institutions of higher education themselves, but once admitted to student status everyone would have a right to aid if he could show a need. The principle of entitlement to student aid strikes us as both sound and just, although it will be expensive to implement.

Post-secondary education has become, rightly or wrongly, a virtual necessity for a dignified, well-paying job—a passport into the mainstream of American life. But the passports are issued unequally among the rich and the poor. In almost any group of high school graduates of roughly equal "ability" (as measured by high school grades or test scores) one finds a much higher proportion receiving higher education among upper than low income groups. The real inequality is even greater, of course, because low-income students have less chance of finishing high school and less chance of scoring well on conventional tests even if their true ability is high.

In recent years federal student aid programs have grown rapidly, and many low-income students have gone to college who would not have made it without the government money. But current programs are still far from adequate. The Education Opportunity Grant program has been meagerly funded by the Congress—approved requests far exceed available funds. Moreover, the program seems virtually designed to maximize the uncertainty facing the student. Funds are allotted to states in accordance with a formula that bears little relation to needs and some states are able to fill a far higher proportion of requests than others. Within states, funds are doled out by college student aid officers with different views of "need" (recent attempts by the Office of Education to target funds on the lowest income students have not yet had much effect—largely because hardly any new funds have been available). A student may be turned down for aid at one college, although a neighboring college would have been able to give him money—if he had only known. Colleges as well as students are unhappy with the uncertainty. Some have made efforts to encourage low-income students to apply, only to find they did not have any funds to offer them. Many college recruiters believe low-income students would work much harder in high school if they could be assured of funds for college.

The Nixon administration has also embraced the principle of student aid but the administration's student aid proposal, more complex and less generous than the Pell Bill, has not been enthusiastically received, or even well understood, on Capitol Hill. We believe the grant provisions of the Pell Bill are superior, partly because they are easier to comprehend and seem less likely to burden low income students with heavy debt.

Another important feature of the Pell Bill is a substantial program of aid to higher education institutions that enroll recipients of the proposed grants. A college, university or vocational school would receive a "cost of instruction allowance" for each federally aided student it enrolled. A very small college would receive $500 for each federally aided student, while larger ones would receive lower amounts ranging down to $100 per federally aided student.

The "cost of instruction" provision recognizes that no student pays his own way and that the federal government has an obligation, if it is adding to enrollment by passing out student aid, to help colleges meet the costs imposed by the extra students. The program would constitute a major form of federal aid to higher education institutions, not unlike the Green Bill now under consideration in the House. But unlike the Green Bill, which gives institutions federal money for every student enrolled, the Pell Bill would channel the aid toward institutions bearing the heaviest burden of educating low income students. This type of aid has been called a "bribe" to open educational gates to the poor. We prefer to think of it as an incentive to act in the national interest.

The particular cost of instruction formula in the Pell Bill could be improved. The present version is excessively favorable to small colleges. Unfortunately, the average small college, like the family farm, is probably an uneconomic anachronism more worthy of fond nostalgia than rescue with federal funds. Moreover, the Pell formula, which gives colleges a flat sum for each aided student (rather than a percentage of the aid granted) may encourage colleges to take in several marginally needy students in preference to one extremely needy one.

Basically, however, the Pell Bill is a good one. It is our hope that it will pass the Senate and that its passage will jar the House out of its current deadlock and enable passage of a major new higher education act in this session.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, is there further morning business?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is closed.

ORDER TO HOLD BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION AT THE DESK

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that H.R. 4762, a bill to extend the authority of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to establish and carry out a program of exchange of medical information and House Joint Resolution 3, to establish a Joint Committee on the Environment, when received from the House, be held at the desk.

This has been cleared all around.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTIONS CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Chair lays before the Senate S. 382, which the clerk will state by title.

The second assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 382) to promote fair practices in the conduct of election campaigns for Federal political offices, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Commerce and from the Committee on Rules and Administration with amendments.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. STEVENSON). Without objection, it is so ordered.

UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senate, I should like to state that, last evening, a series of negotiations were carried on in the office of the distinguished Republican leader, to see whether an agreement could be arrived at by means of which a time limitation could be agreed upon to assure the final disposition of the pending business. If such an agreement could be reached then it was—and still is—the intention of the leadership to lay the pending business aside and call up the bill reported by the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs, S. 2308, a bill to authorize emergency loan guarantees to major business enterprises.

On the basis of the negotiations carried on at that time—in which I did not participate except indirectly, but the distinguished deputy majority leader acting for me did—an agreement was arrived at which, of course, is subject to affirmation by the Senate as a whole.

If the agreement is entered into, I think it would allow us to carry on our business in an orderly and expeditious way, with the rights of all Senators being protected fully.

I should like at this time to ask the distinguished deputy majority leader to present to the Senate the unanimous-consent request which was worked out last evening and which is subject to this body's approval.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the further consideration of S. 382, the so-called Federal elections campaign bill, the bill be considered as having been amended in the form as reported by the Committee on Rules and Administration, and that the bill as thus amended be treated as original text for the purpose of further amendments; that it be ordered, and that it be in order, immediately, for the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) to offer a substitute for the entire bill; provided further, that it shall be in order at any time during the consideration of S. 382 for the majority leader or his designee to have laid before the Senate for its immediate consideration any of the following:

S. 2308, the emergency loan guarantee bill.

The HEW appropriation bill.

The Department of Transportation appropriation bill.

The public works appropriation bill.

The Appalachian regional development bill.

The Sugar Act.

Or other measures as agreed upon by the majority leader and the minority leader, and proceed with the consideration of any one of them until final disposition thereof, or at the discretion of the majority leader; provided further, that the debate on S. 382 be limited to 16 hours, the time to be equally divided between the majority and minority leaders or their designees, and that debate on any amendment be limited to 30 minutes, the time to be equally divided between the mover of such amendment and the majority leader or his designee, with the exception as to time for debate of the following amendments:

An amendment by the distinguished Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK), on which there would be 3 hours, equally divided.

Two amendments by the distinguished Senator from Vermont (Mr. PROUTY), on each of which there would be 3 hours, equally divided.

One amendment by the distinguished Senator from Arizona (Mr. FANNIN), on which there would be 2 hours, equally divided.

One amendment by the distinguished Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS), on which there would be 2 hours, equally divided.

Provided further, that no amendment not germane shall be received, and that no motion to table the amendment in the nature of a substitute by the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE), shall be in order; provided finally, that the majority and minority leaders or their designees may allot time under their control, for debate of the bill, to any Senator on any amendment, motion, or appeal, with the exception of a motion to lay on the table.

Mr. SPONG. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wonder if the distinguished deputy majority leader would answer a question for me. If this is agreed to, it would require the unanimous consent of the Senate for any non-germane amendment to be subsequently offered; is that correct?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. That is correct.

Mr. SPONG. The distinguished Senator from New Jersey (Mr. CASE) and I have considered the introduction of an amendment which may be ruled non-germane. It concerns public disclosure for judges, Members of Congress, and others.

We would prefer that this be considered after a hearing by the proper committee. The chairman of the subcommittee, the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON), has been busy with hearings on this bill. We would prefer that hearings on the measure which the distinguished Senator from New Jersey (Mr. CASE) and I have introduced, be held before bringing it to the Senate.

Nevertheless, we believe that our proposal relates to the legislation now before us, regardless of any ruling, and we are hopeful that early hearings can be held on our measure.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I would be happy to assure the distinguished Senator from Virginia that we would schedule hearings on his proposal.

His proposal is similar to one which the Senate acted on before, several years ago. I offered that as an amendment, to require full disclosure on the part of Senators, the judiciary, the executive, and legislative branches. It passed the Senate. I think that we should hold hearings on the bill and I would not like to see it tied to this bill when we have the opportunity to make some headway in the field of election reform.

So, I would be willing to assure the Senator that I will schedule hearings sometime after the recess, at an early date in the fall, and give him hearings on the proposal.

Mr. SPONG. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Nevada. I share his wish that we move forward with this legislation. On that basis I have no objection to the agreement. I again thank the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, would the distinguished assistant majority leader yield?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I would reserve the right to object and, of course, I will not object. I rise for the purpose of saying that I am in favor of the unanimous-consent request. It was worked out very carefully and with great consideration for the concerns of many Senators. It has been possible to have it accepted by the good will of a number of Senators having different concerns as to various bills.

I would like to indicate now that it is my intention to designate as manager of the bill on this side of the aisle the distinguished Senator from Vermont (Mr. PROUTY), the ranking minority member of the Committee on Rules and Administration, with the understanding that he would work out allocations of time with the distinguished ranking minority member of the Committee on Commerce, the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. COTTON).

I understand from the Senator from Vermont that that can and will be done. For that reason I do so designate the Senator from Vermont, as I have indicated.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I would like to address an inquiry to the Senator from West Virginia. It is my understanding that the limitation on time and also the procedure as contained in the unanimous consent request apply only to S. 382.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. The Senator is precisely correct. At the direction of the distinguished majority leader, it was made to do so.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, such limitations do not in any way apply to the exceptions, at least to the bills or to the matters which were contained in the request?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, would the Senator clarify his question?

Mr. WEICKER. I refer specifically to the matters which the Senator referred to, both the loan bill, S. 2308, and the various appropriations bills.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, may I say that the limitation on time that has been proposed at the direction of the majority leader deals only with S. 382, the Federal Elections Campaign bill.

Mr. WEICKER. I thank the Senator from West Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from West Virginia? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The unanimous-consent agreement is as follows:

Ordered, That, effective on Wednesday, July 21, 1971, during the further consideration of S. 382, to promote fair practices in the conduct of election campaigns for Federal political offices, and for other purposes, the bill be considered as having been amended in the form as reported by the Committee on Rules and Administration, and that the bill as thus amended be treated as original text for the purpose of further amendment, and that it be in order immediately for the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. Pastore) to offer a substitute for the entire bill.

(b) Section 315(b) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(b) The charges made for the use of any broadcasting station by any person who is a legally qualified candidate for any public office in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to such office shall not exceed—

"(1) during the forty-five days preceding the date of a primary election and during the sixty days preceding the date of a general or special election in which such person is a candidate, the lowest unit charge of the station for the same amount of time during the same period; and

"(2) at any other time, the charges made for comparable use of such station by other users thereof."

(c) Section 312(a) of such Act is amended by striking "or" at the end of clause (5), striking the period at the end of clause (6) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and "or", and adding at the end of such section 312(a) the following new clause:

"(7) for willful or repeated failure to allow reasonable access to or to permit purchase of reasonable amounts of time for the use of a broadcasting station by a legally qualified candidate on behalf of his candidacy."

EXPENDITURES LIMITATIONS FOR CANDIDATES FOR MAJOR ELECTIVE OFFICES

SEC. 102. Section 315 of the Communications Act of 1934 is further amended by redesignating subsection (c) as subsection (e) and by inserting immediately before such subsection the following new subsections.

"(c) (1) For purposes of this subsection (d), the term—

"(A) 'Federal elective office' means the office of President, Vice President, United States Senator or Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress;

"(B) 'use of broadcasting stations by or on behalf of any candidate' includes not only broadcasts advocating such candidate's election, but also broadcasts urging the defeat of his opponent or derogating his opponent's stand on campaign issues;

"(C) 'legally qualified candidate' means any person who (1) meets the qualifications prescribed by the applicable laws to hold the Federal elective office for which he is a candidate and (2) is eligible under applicable State law to be voted for by the electorate directly or by means of delegates or electors; and

"(D) 'broadcasting station' includes a community antenna television system, and the terms 'licensee' and 'station licensee' when used with respect to a community antenna television system, mean the operator of such system.

"(2) (A) No legally qualified candidate in any primary, runoff, general, or special election for a Federal elective office may spend for the use of broadcasting stations on behalf of his candidacy in such election a total amount in excess of—

(i) 5 cents multiplied by the estimate of resident population of voting age for such office, as determined by the Bureau of Census in June of the year preceding the year in which the election is to be held; or

(ii) $30,000, if greater than the amount determined under clause (1)

A legally qualified candidate for nomination for election to the office of President may not spend a total amount for all primary elections held for such office in which he is a candidate in excess of the limitation provided by the first sentence of this paragraph.

"(B) In addition to the amount which he may spend under paragraph (2) (A) of this subsection for the use of broadcast communications media in connection with his campaign, a candidate for Federal office may spend for such use any unspent portion of the amount he is authorized to spend for the use of nonbroadcast communications media under section 103 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

Amounts spent for the use of broadcasting stations by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate for the office of Vice President of the United States shall, for the purposes of this subsection, be deemed to have been spent by the candidate for the office of President of the United States with whom he is running.

"(4) No station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of any candidate for Federal elective office (or for nomination to such office) unless such candidate, or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so, certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate paragraph (2).

"(5) Broadcasting stations and candidates shall file with the Commission such reports at such times and containing such information as the Commission shall prescribe for the purpose of this subsection and, in the case of broadcasting stations, subsection (d).

"(d) If the Commission determines that—

"(1) a State by law—

"(A) has provided that a primary or other election for any office of such State or of a political subdivision thereof is subject to this subsection, and

"(B) has specified a limitation upon total expenditures for the use of broadcasting stations on behalf of the candidacy of each legally qualified candidate in such election, and

"(2) the amount of such limitation does not exceed the amount which would be determined for such election under subsection (c) had such election been an election for a Federal elective office, or nomination thereto, then no station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate in such election unless such candidate, or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so, certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate such limitation."

If no contributions or expenditures have been accepted or expended during a calendar year, the treasurer of the political committee or candidate shall file a statement to that effect.

REPORTS BY OTHERS THAN POLITICAL COMMITTEES

Every person (other than a political committee or candidate) who makes contributions or expenditures, other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate, in an aggregate amount in excess of $100 within a calendar year shall file with the Comptroller General a statement containing the information required by section 304. (d) The Comptroller General shall, by published regulations of general applicability, prescribe the manner in which contributions and expenditures in the nature of debts and other contracts, agreements, and prom-

Whenever in the judgment of the Comptroller General, after affording due notice and an opportunity for a hearing, any person has engaged or is about to engage in any acts or practices which constitute or will constitute a violation of any provision of this title or any regulation or order issued thereunder, the Attorney General on behalf of the United States shall institute a civil action for relief, including a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or any other appropriate order in the district court of the United States for the district in which the person is found, resides, or transacts business. Upon a proper showing that such person has engaged or is about to engage in such acts or practices, a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining order, or other order shall be granted without bond by such court.

EMERGENCY LOAN GUARANTEE ACT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the pending business be laid aside temporarily and that the Senate turn to the consideration of Calendar No. 264, S. 2308.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2308) to authorize emergency loan guarantees to major business enterprises.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we may have additional staff members on the floor from the Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs during the consideration of this measure.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, what was the request?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I asked unanimous consent that we may have additional staff members from the committee on the floor during the consideration of the measure.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Would the Senator limit the number of staff members?

Mr. SPARKMAN. I will limit it to eight.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may have two staff members on the floor during the debate on S. 2308.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I do not intend to object—would the Senator make it clear that those staff members will not remain on the floor during rollcall votes?

Mr. TAFT. I certainly will do that.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. WEICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to have two staff members on the floor during the debate on this measure, provided they will not be on the floor during any rollcall votes.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. No objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry, and I would like to direct the inquiry to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia, as I present it to the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. SPARKMAN. As I understand it, we have a standing rule, informal though it may be, that staff members generally do not remain on the floor during rollcall votes. Is that correct?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, if I may respond, the unanimous-consent agreement that was entered into at the beginning of the session with respect to staff personnel not remaining on the floor of the Senate during a rollcall vote was made to apply only to clerks of Senators but not to clerks of committees.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I am grateful to the deputy leader for that clarification.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask also that I may have two staff members on the floor during the consideration of this measure, with the understanding that they will not remain in the Chamber during rollcall votes.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object—I would like to state that I will have to object if such requests continue to be made, except on the part of Senators who have leading assignments in connection with the bill before the Senate; I do not object to the requests thus far made—with the stipulation that those staff people who are given the privilege of the floor stay seated and be quiet; else, Mr. President, I shall have to ask the Chair to call them to order.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, again I invite the attention of the Senator from West Virginia to this: I fully agree with his statement, and may I say that those who have made requests do have a vital interest in the legislation.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Yes. I understand that.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I also suggest that, insofar as it may be practicable, while a Member of the Senate may have two staff members here not more than one of them should sit on the floor with him, and the other should probably stay in the rear of the Chamber. I should think that would be satisfactory.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. If the Senator will yield further, Mr. President, I would hope that those Senators who have asked for additional staff members to have the privilege of the floor would supply the names of those staff members to the Sergeant at Arms, so that the order may be precisely and appropriately implemented.

Mr. SPARKMAN. That is with respect to the individual Senators rather than the committee?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. No.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, if I may ask the Senator to yield one additional time—

Mr. SPARKMAN. Yes, indeed.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I hope that it is the understanding of the Sergeant at Arms—and if it is not clear, I ask unanimous consent—that staff members of committees which have no jurisdiction over the measure being considered at a particular time are not included in that regulation which allows up to four staff members of any one committee to remain on the floor at any one time without unanimous consent being granted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD at this point a section-by-section summary of S. 2308, the bill under consideration, and I invite the attention of Senators to this summary when they have an opportunity to read it.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SENATE

constantly seeking suggestions for better ways to achieve energy security with all possible fairness to all. But energy security is, to my mind, an overriding consideration for those like myself, who have the formal responsibility that you not be cold and dark and powerless through energy shortage.

In his recent energy message the President announced that the Department of the Interior would establish a five-year advance schedule for off-shore oil and gas leasing. The Department of the Interior has advised that there are several likely prospects for natural gas and oil off the East Coast, including one off New England, if suitable environmental safeguards are provided. Here you might have an ultimate answer to a better fuel situation in New England.

As you balance the environmental implications with your fuel needs you should recognize that the alternative may be an ever-increasing flow of ship-borne oil. In 1969 there were approximately 525,000 tanker and tanker barge entries into seacoast ports of the United States, of which 1,244 were into the Portland Maine, harbor alone. Even the most conservative estimates indicate this volume of oil-bearing traffic may rise to over 750,000 entries by 1975.

Each of these vessels is a pollution hazard, and an accident to just one large tanker may cause an oil spill much greater than the entire amount involved in the blow-out off Santa Barbara. As a specific case in point, just two months before the damaging Santa Barbara occurrence, the tanker Keo broke up off Massachusetts because of hull failure and spilled 210,000 barrels of volatile #4 oil, far more oil than was lost in the California misfortune.

Our way of life wants more than adequate energy on a day-to-day basis. We want our energy to be consistent with the quality of life we seek to achieve. We want it secure from external disruptions over which our country has no control. We want it at a reasonable cost and without excessive concentration of private economic control.

We Americans do not have to choose between adequate energy and clean air and water. Both are necessary and will be attained; but we will have some troublesome years of transition in effecting these parallel objectives.

In energy as in every other field, problems come with progress. But progress has solved far more than it created. I have only to think back to the kerosene lamp, the woodburning stove and the horse-drawn plow to find reassurance. Today's energy problems are a great challenge. But we of our country have met and surmounted great challenges before, one of the first being the establishment of a sturdy society in New England. You have a great tradition. The first steps in surmounting a great challenge in our democratic system are to understand and to consult about the problems with which we must grapple. I hope these remarks have made a small contribution to that end.

UNIVERSAL VOTER REGISTRATION AMENDMENT TO FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, next week, during the debate on S. 382, the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, I intend to introduce an amendment to establish a system of universal voter registration for the Nation.

In large measure, the dismal turnout of American voters on election day is the result of the fact that the path to the polls is too often an obstacle course for the voter, instead of the incentive to total participation it ought to be. Each year, tens of millions of citizens are disfranchised by archaic requirements of registration and residence that should long since have gone the way of the poll tax.

Statistics demonstrate the appalling record of voter participation that America has compiled in recent years. Only 61 percent of our eligible voters actually went to the polls in the 1968 presidential election. Forty-seven million people stayed home, at a time when the winner—President Nixon—was receiving only 31 million votes. Incredible as it may seem, half again as many people stayed away from the polls and voted for the man who is our President.

Indeed, it is fair to say that, of all the great democracies of the Western World, the voting record of America is probably the worst. In 1970 in Britain, 72 percent of the eligible voters went to the polls, and they called it one of the lowest turnouts in history, the lowest since 1935, the cause of the Labor Party defeat. In the most recent elections in other democratic nations, the turnout has been even higher—75 percent in Ireland, 76 percent in Canada, 80 percent in France, 87 percent in Germany, 89 percent in Sweden and Denmark.

At the same time, however, we know that Americans who are registered are Americans who vote. In the 1968 Presidential election, 89 percent of the voters who were registered actually went to the polls and cast their ballots. The heart of the problem, therefore, is the inadequate system of voter registration that now bars millions of our citizens from participation in the most basic right of all in our democratic society—the right to vote. Just as the enactment of the 18-year-old vote last year marked a significant milestone in broadening the base of the electorate, so I believe the next major milestone must be comprehensive reform in our voter registration procedures.

The system of universal voter registration I propose would be based on a simple post card method and computer technology. It would be administered by a new agency to be established in the Census Bureau. Any citizen could register to vote simply by filling in his name, address, and date of birth on a post card form and mailing it to the new agency. Merely by filling out his address on the form, the citizen would determine his voting residence. There would be no requirement of residence for a specific period of time. At a single stroke, therefore, the system would do away not only with burdensome registration requirements, but also with unfair residence requirements that operate to bar voters in almost every State.

With the assistance of computers, the information would be stored, divided according to election districts, and made available by the Census Agency to appropriate State and local election officials, as the official list of eligible voters.

Use of the new voter registration list would be mandatory in Federal elections, and optional for State and local elections. I believe, however, that the simplicity, efficiency, and cost savings of the system would lead to its rapid acceptance for State and local elections as well, so that within a brief period of time, the Nation would have a truly universal voter registration system for all elections. Our system of democracy deserves no less.

A detailed description of the plan follows:

SUMMARY OF UNIVERSAL VOTER REGISTRATION AMENDMENT

1. A new agency—the Universal Voter Registration Administration (UVRA)—will be established in the Census Bureau. UVRA will be authorized to organize and administer a program of universal voter registration for all Federal elections, and to assist states in their registration for state and local elections.

2. A computer center at UVRA will be established to compile voter rolls on computer tapes. The information compiled will be the name, address, zip code, party designation, date of birth and local precinct of individuals registering to vote.

3. Individuals will register through post card voter registration forms, to be mailed to UVRA. Where appropriate, bilingual forms will be available. The cards will be postage free and will be of the type which allows visual scanning by computers to read the information. The post card form will contain a line for the signature of the individual wishing to register, and the penalty for fraud will be printed on the card. The post card forms will be widely available in all post offices and will also be available to private voter registration groups.

4. To avoid objections based on potential infringements of the right of privacy, UVRA information will not be available to any other Federal agency, and UVRA will not draw on information collected for other purposes by other Federal data centers such as the Internal Revenue Service or the Social Security Administration. The UVRA system will be used for voter registration and no other purpose. Individuals not wishing to register through UVRA will still be able to register through state and local election offices.

UVRA registration will close approximately 30 days before primary or general elections. At that time, the UVRA will compile lists of registered voters by local precincts, and forward the lists to the appropriate state or local election officials. Simply by having his name on the list, any person will thereby be authorized to vote in Federal elections. States will be able to supplement and update the lists in advance of the election.

5. UVRA will be authorized to publicize its lists at appropriate intervals, so that individuals may make changes and additions.

6. UVRA will be authorized to inform individuals of the location of their local polling places.

7. UVRA will be authorized to conduct a media campaign to inform voters of the new registration program, and to encourage voters to register early and spread the computer load evenly throughout the year.

8. Use of the UVRA list will be mandatory for all Federal elections and optional for State and local elections. If state and local officials decide to use the UVRA lists for state and local elections, they may not delete anyone from the list for failure to meet other qualifications.

9. The UVRA is authorized to request information from the states on persons 18 or older who have died in the state since the last report, as well as other appropriate information directly related to the purpose of voter registration.

RELATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND RED CHINA

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, the subject of Red China and the proper relations between the United States and that power have been much in the news lately.

ON
S.382
JULY 23, 1971

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, Thursday, July 15, the President of the United States announced to the Nation that an invitation had been extended to him to visit China sometime before May 1972.

The invitation followed his initiative in sending his personal adviser in national security affairs, Mr. Henry Kissinger, quietly to Peking to discuss questions of Sino-United States relations.

I must say, Mr. President, that the particular announcement caught me as it did many others, by complete surprise. In retrospect, however, it is a development which follows logically from the course which the President has been pursuing, to my personal knowledge, since February 1969. It is not unrelated to the progressive drawdown of U.S. forces from Vietnam. Nor is it unrelated to the Nixon doctrine of a lowered military profile in the Western Pacific. It is, moreover, in a direct line of policy descent with the easing of trade and travel restrictions with the Chinese People's Republic which has taken place under the present administration.

This unprecedented diplomatic initiative is, however, an enormous advance over these other measures. This journey for peace, as the President has termed it, constitutes a quantum leap forward in the Nation's diplomacy. It is an initiative which should not only be applauded, in my judgment, but support for it should be underscored by an articulation of the sentiment of the Congress.

To that end, Mr. President, I send to the desk on behalf of the minority leader and myself, a Senate concurrent resolution and ask that it be read and remain at the desk temporarily.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The concurrent resolution will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

S. CON. RES. 36

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the President of the United States be and is hereby commended for his outstanding initiative in furtherance of the foreign relations of the United States and world peace by deciding to undertake "a journey for peace" to the People's Republic of China.

Resolved, further, by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the Congress offer and does hereby offer its full faith and support to the President in carrying out the purposes of his journey.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 36) will be received and will lie at the desk.

(The concurrent resolution was subsequently referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.)

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I congratulate the distinguished majority leader on initiating this concurrent resolution, in which I am glad to join.

I feel that the majority of the Senate—perhaps all the Senate—on reading the concurrent resolution will wish to commend the President on a most important foreign policy decision, one which offers a hope for peace. The hope is there. While there are risks, the hope is good, and we should wish the President every success on this most important venture of his entire term of office.

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF

SENATE RESOLUTION 145

At the request of Mr. TUNNEY, the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. Mondale) and the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS) were added as cosponsors of Senate Resolution 145, urging the Voice of America to broadcast in Yiddish to the Soviet Union.

EMERGENCY LOAN GUARANTEE ACT—AMENDMENT

AMENDMENT NO. 322

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. MILLER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2308) to authorize emergency loan guarantees to major business enterprises.

THE FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN
ACT OF 1971—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 321

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I am today submitting an amendment to S. 382, the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971. I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be printed and ordered to lie on the table pending consideration of S. 382 by the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, this amendment is designed as a substitute for a provision already included in S. 382 which would prohibit the extension of unsecured credit, by certain federally regulated industries, to candidates for Federal office. This revised language takes into account the additional technical advice and assistance provided by the Civil Aeronautics Board, the Federal Communications Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Department of Justice.

As rewritten, my amendment would still forbid the granting of unsecured credit to candidates by certain industries. But it would permit normal credit card transactions so long as routine safeguards are in accompaniment. Furthermore, to avoid placing the full burden of compliance on the business, the candidate would be required to identify himself as such before engaging in a transaction. And in order to allow for some degree of flexibility, the independent agencies involved here would be empowered to promulgate additional regulations, within 90 days, to carry out the provisions of the amendment. Finally, reports of the transactions would henceforth be contained in the reports of the candidate, which are already required under the provisions of S. 382.

While existing law forbids corporations from making loans or advances to a candidate in connection with his campaign for Federal office, that provision has not generally been interpreted to preclude the extension of credit by an air carrier, for example, to a passenger or by a communications business to a subscriber. However, the practical effect of such extensions of credit is to create a debt. If the candidate charges communications or transportation services used in his campaign and fails to pay the bill, he has, in effect received an involuntary campaign contribution. The purpose of the prohibition contained in the amendment is to insure that certain regulated business will not be placed in a position of unlawfully, unavoidably, and unintentionally subsidizing political campaign expenses.

This revised amendment represents a significant technical improvement over the amendment originally adopted by the Rules Committee. Further background on the amendment itself is provided in my additional views on pages 109 through 113 of Senate Report No. 92-229. In those views, I deemed "absolutely essential the retention of this amendment to prohibit the extension of unsecured credit to political candidates." Information which has been collected at my request now more than justifies that comment.

Specifically, I asked the General Accounting Office for a complete accounting of all outstanding debts and negotiated settlements associated with certain federally regulated businesses in the course of past political campaigns. The compilation of data is nearly complete and it reveals what I consider to be clearly and totally unacceptable campaign practices by both political parties, not to mention the Federal common carriers themselves.

The information compiled speaks for itself—over $2.1 million in outstanding airline bills and nearly $400,000 in outstanding telephone bills. I think it is about time that we political candidates adhered to the fiscal responsibility and accountability standards which we set for others, be it the Pentagon or the Penn Central.

There are those who have said that this amendment is not necessary—that these businesses are fully capable of handling their own transactions. To hold such an opinion is to be completely unaware of the realities. Let us look at the problem as outlined by the General Telephone & Electronics Corp., the Nation's second largest telephone service with companies operating in 34 States. In his July 2, 1971, letter to me, the corporation's executive vice president for telephone operations, James J. Clerkin, Jr. said:

The GTE operating companies support in principle the requirement of Section 206 that the charges for telephone service rendered candidates be fully secured. As you are aware from statistics recently furnished the Federal Communications Commission, the telephone carriers have suffered financial losses in recent years on account of uncollectible debts due the carriers from political committees. We agree that regulated carriers should be protected against involuntary financing of political campaigns.

The basic problem here arises from the inability of the carriers to obtain sufficiently large advance deposits from political customers. In setting the amount of advance deposits in the past, the carriers have been seriously handicapped by the difficulties in justifying deposits sufficient to cover all charges to be incurred in the future by such political customers, while remaining within the limits of Section 202 (a) of the Communications Act of 1934, 47 U.S.C. Section 202 (a), which in general prohibits unjust or unreasonable discrimination among customers.

Proposed Section 206 would make clear that the carriers are entitled to obtain full security in advance for communications charges to be incurred by or on behalf of political candidates.

It is important to note again, for additional emphasis, that current Federal Communications Commission law forbids "unjust or unreasonable discrimination" or "undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantages" in "charges, practices, classifications, regulations, facilities, or services for or in connection with like communication service."

The Justice Department has amplified further, and supported, the need for this amendment. Associate Deputy Attorney General Wallace H. Johnson, in a letter to me on July 2, 1971, said:

Existing law prohibits corporations from making, and candidates, committees or others from accepting loans, advances or other contributions in connection with campaigns for nomination or election to Federal office (18 U.S.C. 610). This provision has never been construed, however, to prohibit the furnishing of goods or services on personal credit in the normal course of business.

When airlines, telephone companies and other regulated businesses extend credit for services rendered to a candidate in connection with his campaign, the transaction is very similar to a loan of money. If the debt created by the extension of credit is not paid, the practical effect is the same as that of a cash campaign contribution. Accordingly, the amendments are consistent with both existing law and the purposes of S. 382.

Interstate Commerce Commission Chairman George Stafford has offered his views on the amendment. In a July 16, 1971, letter to me, Chairman Stafford wrote:

This amendment would reinforce the Interstate Commerce Act and past Commission rulings on the extension of credit. Section 222 (c) of the Act prohibits carriers from knowingly and willfully permitting any person to obtain transportation subject to the Act for less than the applicable rate. If a carrier fraudulently tries to evade the requirements of this section, it can be fined up to $500 for an initial offense and up to $2,000 for subsequent offenses. The Code of Federal Regulations prescribes the maximum number of days that a carrier may extend credit (see 49 CFR 1320-1324). This Commission has stated that the extension of credit to shippers is the exception and not the rule, and carriers must not extend credit as a matter of course but only when assured of payment. The Commission permits carriers to extend credit only when assured of payment, and that is the main object of the amendment under consideration.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD several documents relating to the indebtedness of political candidates to certain federally regulated businesses, and the amendment I have just submitted.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNITED UTILITIES, INC.,
Kansas City, Mo., July 1, 1971.

MR. KELLY E. GRIFFITH,
Chief, Domestic Rates Division for Chief,
Common Carrier Bureau, Federal Communications Commission, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. GRIFFITH: Enclosed is the information requested in General Accounting Office letter of May 12, 1971 and June 10, 1971 insofar as we are able to comply.

Our records are not in form needed for expedient retrieval of this information as they are not categorized by class of account. Therefore, each account had to be examined and evaluated to determine if it fell within the category "campaign debts" (telephone service). We assume that this term (campaign debt) is intended to cover bills for telephone services to candidates during the campaign period which were not paid in full.

We have supplied the requested information for the General Election in the years 1968 and 1970 provided that the candidate's name, which will include such accounts as Citizens for —, is a part of the billed account. There are undoubtedly accounts that the very name shows some political affiliation but nothing would indicate support for a particular candidate. Due to the time and cost involved we did not attempt to identify and research these various organizations to determine if they supported local, state, or federal candidates and what candidates if they did happen to fall into the federal classification.

It would be an insurmountable task to provide the requested information from our records for primary elections. We will only be able to accomplish this if supplied with a list of primary candidates by year for each of our operating territories. The information we could then supply would be subject to the limitations for General Elections as discussed above.

The policies of the United Telephone System Companies with respect to billing and collection procedures of political campaign bad debts are not different than any other bad debt. When delinquent accounts develop, service is discontinued in accordance with filed tariffs and collection procedures begin. Specific administrative procedures vary slightly from one United Company to another but each company makes every reasonable effort to collect all amounts due. Where the known cost of collection exceeds the possible recovery the collection procedure is discontinued.

This information is submitted in accordance with your telephone agreement of June 23 to extend the due date to July 1, 1971.

Sincerely,

FRANK R. VENTURA.

GTE SERVICE CORP.,
Washington, D.C., July 16, 1971.

R: 9330.

MR. BEN WAPLE,
Secretary, Federal Communications Commission, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY: This letter is being written in response to the letters from the Chief, Domestic Rates Division of the Commission's Common Carrier Bureau, dated May 24 and July 7, 1971, to the Executive Vice President and General Counsel of GTE Service Corporation, Mr. Theodore F. Brophy. Mr. Brophy is presently out of the country, and I am responding in accordance with Mr. Brophy's letter to the Commission of July 9, 1971.

We are requested by the Commission to furnish on behalf of the GTE telephone operating companies certain information concerning uncontrollable accounts. Attachment No. 1 to Mr. Brophy's letter of June 25, 1971, indicated that the companies' books reflected no current outstanding debts for telephone service incurred by Federal candidates in the 1968 and 1970 campaigns and further indicated that election uncollectibles for years 1968-70 aggregated $75,189.75. With reference to these uncollectibles, Mr. Brophy's letter of July 9 stated that, "although our operating telephone companies have written off as uncollectible the campaign debts referred to in item 3 of that letter, they are still making every effort to collect the unpaid amounts."

The attachment to this letter lists "information by billing party and by candidate for all campaign debts for telephone service written off as uncollectible in the years 1968, 1969 and 1970", as requested in the July 7 letter. Efforts have been made by the Service Corporation to confirm from company records the accuracy of the data submitted herewith, although counsel is informed that certain contemporaneous records regarding these accounts are no longer available.

Certain discrepancies between the aggregate figures submitted on June 25 and the itemized figures submitted herewith result from deletion of: (1) several accounts relating to candidates for State office which were included in the original compilation; (2) one account with a balance of less than one dollar, as to which no confirmation was attempted; (iii) two accounts as to which payment has in fact been received; (iv) one account with a balance of $25.65 which now appears to not be a political account; and (v) two 1968 accounts with balances of less than $300 each where the customer believes that the bills have been paid, and we have been unable to reconcile the customer's accounts and the companies' accounts in the time available.

I trust that the attachment supplies the additional information that you require. Respectfully submitted.

WILLIAM MALONE,
Resident Attorney.

NEW YORK, N.Y.,
June 22, 1971.
FEDERAL COMMUNICATIONS COMMISSION,
Washington, D.C.
Attention: Mr. Kelley E. Griffith, Chief, Domestic Rates Division.

GENTLEMEN: Information on political campaign obligations is attached for your transmittal to Senator Scott as requested in your letter dated May 24.

Because of the strike of Western Union employees called on June 1, this information is of necessity confined to the more recent better known situations subject to ready identification. Every effort has been made to include the major accounts which would be of interest to Senator Scott. There are undoubtedly other unpaid balances which can be identified by employees experienced in their particular ledgers. Also there may be other write-offs prior to 1968 campaigns.

These are believed to be very few in number and involve more nominal amounts. As promptly as possible, after the strike is settled, a supplemental report will be submitted on these other accounts.

While the interest of Senator Scott is in political campaign debts, our records contain no identification to segregate political from personal traffic. For members of the Congress, it is therefore necessary to list all present outstanding bills for personal account or in excess of allowances even though only a small portion of the balance, if any, may have been incurred in connection with political activity.

Along similar lines, the obligations of State Committees may have been incurred to finance in part the campaigns of Congressional candidates. Available information has therefore been included in the report on these accounts.

It will be noted that it is policy to grant credit to political candidates prior to nomination only when the account is guaranteed by the national political party or by a rank, prominent businessman, or other individual sponsor with sufficient responsibility to assure payment. As the result of experience on 1968 campaign debts, policy is to be tightened for services rendered prior to nomination. Thereafter any granting of credit is to be in the name of and at the request of the national political party.

It is regretted that complete information cannot be included in this report. As soon as the strike is settled, we shall be able to complete our investigation and will rush the additional data to you as promptly as possible.

Yours very truly,
A. I. CULLEN,
Vice President and Comptroller.

AMERICAN TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH CO.,
New York, N.Y., July 7, 1971.
Mr. BERNARD STRASSBURG,
Chief, Common Carrier Bureau, Federal Communications Commission, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. STRASSBURG: This is in reply to your letters of May 24, 1971, and June 21, 1971 (file 9330), which enclosed copies of letters from the General Accounting Office (GAO) requesting that we obtain and furnish certain information regarding political campaign debts owed to the telephone companies.

In accordance with our initial reply of June 17, 1971, we are enclosing data for the years 1968, 1969, and 1970 with respect to the amounts "written off as uncollectible." The term "written off as uncollectible" means that, in accordance with the F.C.C.-prescribed Uniform System of Accounts, we have charged our reserve for uncollectible accounts with amounts which are impracticable of collection. An amount is not considered to be impracticable of collection until after significant collection effort has been made. However, we do not consider any such amount as written off in the sense of discharging the debtor; nor do we discontinue collection efforts. All amounts thereafter collected as a result of continuing collection efforts are credited to the reserve account.

The remainder of the information, as specified in the revised GAO request transmitted with your June 21, 1971, letter, is being processed and we expect it to be available by August 2, 1971.

If you have any questions regarding the attached information, we shall be glad to discuss them at your convenience.

Sincerely,

D. E. EMERSON.

Re Information on Political Campaign Debts.
Mr. ALLAN CRAIG,
Director, Bureau of Accounts and Statistics,
Civil Aeronautics Board, Washington,
D.C.

DEAR SIR: In response to your letter of May 14, 1971, reference the above, please be advised that insofar as pertains to United:

1. Outstanding campaign debts for candidates for federal office from 1962, as of April 30, 1971, are:

A. Nixon-Agnew campaign—Oct. & Nov. 1968, $75,107.55.

B. Humphrey-Muskie campaign—Oct. & Nov. 1968, $79,083.65.

C. Democratic National Committee (incurred by R. F. Kennedy)—Mar. & Apr. 1968, $12,651.97.

2. Eugene McCarthy and individuals acting for Mr. McCarthy incurred freight charges of approximately $1,213.66 during his campaign in the latter part of 1968. These charges were incurred without benefit of his campaign ATP account or the endorser to that account. When the campaign organization went out of business, they offered to pay 50¢ on the dollar for this account. Since United had no endorser and no other hope of recovery, the account was settled for $606.83 and an equal amount, $606.83, was written off. This write-off occurred during early 1969.

3. From May through September, 1968, the Eugene McCarthy for President National Headquarters incurred indebtedness of $34,386.03. Payment of $5,000 was made by the National Headquarters. An additional $425.00 representing the ATP deposit was also applied to the account. Litigation for the balance of $28,961.03 was settled in March of 1971 for $22,500.00. Approximately $1,525.00 of the balance was for charges of questionable recoverability. If the case had been pursued to judgment, attorneys fees could have been ½ or approximately $9,000.00, leaving a net to United of approximately $18,000.00. Since the present settlement netted United $20,000.00 ($2,500.00 in fees to counsel), United's counsel recommended settlement at that figure.

4. There is no different policy and procedure with respect to billing and collection of debts incurred by candidates for federal office during political campaigns. The policy and procedure applied is in accord with United's tariffs, where applicable, and is the same for the billing and collection of these as for any other debts.

Very truly yours,
R. E. BRUNO,
Senior Vice President, Finance and Property.

Subject: Information on Political Campaign Debts.

DEAR MR. CRAIG: Concerning your May 14, 1971, letter re the above mentioned subject, we respectfully submit the following:

(1) Outstanding campaign debts incurred by candidates for Federal office from 1962 to the present.

Name of candidate or political organization	Balance Apr. 30, 1971	Year debt incurred			Prior 1968
		1970	1969	1968
Republican National Finance Committee	$151,871		$18,587	$13,284
Richard M. Nixon	69,386		66,710	2,666
National Democratic Committee	426,833	$20,548	85,031	371,254
Robert F. Kennedy	415,120		328	4,792
Hubert H. Humphrey	138,762		120,113	8,649
McCarthy for President	135,872			135,872
Total	1,337,834	20,548	290,769	1,016,517

(2) No campaign debts have been written off by American Airlines from 1962 to the present.

(3) No amounts owed by candidates for Federal office were settled by American Airlines for less than full value during the period 1962 to the present.

(4) With the one exception of actually proceeding with a courtroom litigation, which we have never done in the case of political parties, political organizations, or political candidates, no differences exist in our billing and collection procedures regarding candidates and others served by American Airlines. In the case of Universal Air Travel Plan charges, we bill twice monthly. In all other cases we bill monthly. Follow-up of delinquent accounts is done intermittently by phone and by letter supplemented with periodic personal visits. Because of the substandard credit relations American Airlines has experienced with the above, we have taken a firm position regarding the assumption of new political accounts. We now ask for personal guarantees in all cases involving individual candidates and can report that we have declined the applications of at least two well-known candidates in the last year where guarantees have not been forthcoming.

If there is any additional information you would require, we will be more than happy to provide it.

Very truly yours,
R. M. BRESSLER,
Vice President and Treasurer.

Subject: Information on Political Campaign Debts per your letter of May 14, 1971.

Our total campaign debts are $2,910.38 and is for the following:

Hubert Humphrey Charged to Democratic National Committee, 2600 Virginia Avenue, Washington, D.C. 20037. Amount of debt: $2,910.38. Date of debt: September 30, 1968.

2. We have had no writeoff of campaign debts from 1962 to present time.

3. We have not negotiated any settlement for less than the full amount due us for any political candidate.

4. We have tried by regular billing to collect this but they state that they cannot pay as they have a large quantity of debts and no money. In our regular collections that would have been turned into a collection agency for collection but in this case this would be a useless effort.

Subject: Information on political campaign debts.

Western has no procedures for treating debts incurred by candidates for federal offices differently from debts incurred by others. Our experience in this area has been minimal.

Therefore, the response to this questionnaire involved the special review of the current accounts and a perusal of debts written off to see if any involved candidates for federal offices.

As to the current accounts, there are no amounts due from customers which can be identified as campaign debts incurred by candidates for federal offices.

All delinquent accounts are pursued through standard collection practices.

As to the write-offs of debts of candidates for federal office since 1962, we can identify only one such debt. A "Ticket-by-Mail" invoice for $376 was incurred in May 1968 and written off in September 1969. This invoice was related to the campaign of Senator Robert Kennedy and was incurred by Senator Ted Kennedy and a Mr. Burke.

It is not our practice to settle any debt for transportation, including any such debt incurred by a candidate for federal office, for less than the amount due. The perusal of our debt write-offs referred to above did not disclose any such settlements.

DEAR MR. CRAIG: In response to the itemized questions in your letter of May 14, 1971, on the matter of information on political campaign debts, we submit the following answers:

(1) There are no outstanding campaign debts on our books incurred by candidates for Federal office from 1962 to the present.

(2) No campaign debts incurred by candidates for Federal office from 1962 to the present have been written off in their entirety. See (3) below for partial writeoff.

(3) In May, 1968, we operated a charter flight in connection with the "McCarthy for President" campaign, the billed amount of which was $8,997.96. We received payment in the amount of $4,500.00 on November 7, 1968, from "McCarthy Finance Committee" and the balance of $4,497.96 was written off—also in November, 1968.

(4) We know of no specific policies and procedures of the certificated air carriers with respect to the billing for and collection of debts, incurred by candidates for Federal office during political campaigns. Insofar as our own policies and procedures are concerned, where we perform a service for an individual who is seeking Federal office, we apply the same policies and procedures to the collection of any resulting debt as we apply to any other person served by the Company.

Sincerely yours,

F. N. DAVEY.

Subject: Information on Political Campaign Debts Your letter dated May 14, 1971.

DEAR MR. CRAIG: In compliance with the above, the following information is submitted:

1. Democratic National Committee, (Hubert H. Humphrey), (Edmund S. Muskie), $208,-867.12 Balance May-August, 1968.

Republican National Committee $112,823.44 Balance September-November, 1970.

2. In keeping with accepted accounting practices, the Democratic National Committee receivable was written off at the year-end 1969. However, the account remains under active collection procedures.

3. None.

4. Eastern's policies and procedures with respect to billing and collection of receivables provide for active pursuit for payment commensurate with the type of transaction and credit terms. Accounts receivable are not normally allowed to remain on the books for more than one year after reaching collection status. The policy further provides that where there is reasonable potential for obtaining full or partial payment of the balance, collection activity will be continued beyond the anniversary date. All receivables are reviewed in year-end closing and as a normal procedure, the write-offs are reviewed by Price Waterhouse, our contract audit firm. Our policies with respect to debts incurred by candidates for Federal office during political campaigns are the same as those applied to others.

Sincerely,

J. R. LYNCH.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, this amendment is intended to supersede the amendment which prohibits extension of unsecured credit by certain federally regulated industries to candidates for Federal office. The purpose is to take into account the additional technical advice and assistance provided by the Civil Aeronautics Board, the Federal Communications Commission, the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the Department of Justice.

As rewritten, the amendment would still forbid the granting of unsecured credit to candidates by certain industries, when it would permit normal credit card transactions so long as routine safeguards are in accompaniment.

The supporting data will indicate that hundreds of thousands of dollars are remaining unpaid to airlines, telegraph companies, telephone companies, and others, and that these unpaid amounts are usually written off by the companies which, in effect, amounts to corporate contributions to both political parties, which are forbidden by law.

I hope that when I call up the amendment at the proper time, it will receive the support of Senators of both political parties, as this business of trying to run political campaign on-the-cuff is distinctly unfair and places a burden which not only should not be on the companies but is actually forcing them into making involuntary and illegal contributions.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

AMENDMENT NO. 324

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, the most troublesome political advertisements are TV spot commercials. Although spots can serve legitimate functions, they are also vehicles for political hucksterism, demagoguery, and superficiality.

For that reason, the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE) and I offer amendment 324 to S. 382. This amendment establishes a subceiling of 3½ cents per voting-age person for spots, defined as TV ads of less than 5 minutes duration.

As a practical matter, however, the amendment applies almost entirely to ads of 1 minute and under, since there is virtually no TV advertising sold in segments of more than 1 minute but less than 5 minutes. The amendment is based on the simple proposition that if a candidate wants to spend his full 5 cents on TV advertising, the least he can do is spend 1½ cents of it on longer ads which offer an opportunity for the treatment of issues.

This subceiling applies to candidates for Federal office and for Governor and Lieutenant Governor.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the amendment be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 324

On page 6, change the period in line 8 to a semicolon and insert the following immediately thereafter.

"provided that notwithstanding any other provision of this Act, no legally qualified candidate or person or organization acting on behalf of such a candidate in any primary, runoff, general, or special election for Governor, Lieutenant Governor, or Federal elective office shall spend for the purchase of television time in segments of less than five minutes duration an amount greater than 3½ cents multiplied by the estimate of resident population of voting age as determined in subparagraph (1) of this paragraph, or $21,000, whichever is greater."

CONTINUED INFLATION—DISAPPOINTING INCREASE IN CONSUMER PRICES

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the increase in the cost of living for June, announced by the Bureau of Labor Statistics today, reaffirms that the administration's do-nothing attitude with respect to incomes policy is a costly mistake. The Consumer Price Index rose 0.5 percent in June on a seasonally adjusted basis, an increase of 6 percent at an annual rate. This figure is especially significant since the CPI rose at an annual rate of 7.2 percent in May, following several months of slower price increases.

The 6-percent rise in June was due to larger than normal increases in the price been introduced, and I hope the President takes note of it, even if the Senate does not act immediately.

FLOOR DEBATE

Mr. HARTKE. I hope the President takes a suggestion from the resolution that what we are really doing is saying that the Constitution is the supreme law of the land and there is a way to change it if the people want to.

Historically, the concept that the President had treaty-making powers was not considered until 10 days before the final draft of the Constitution; the original draft gave all power to the Senate.

One other factor is extremely important in view of the announcement of the President's visit to Mainland China. Here we are with the President going to a country which has not been formally recognized by this country. Elements of secrecy have shrouded our preliminary negotiations, even though we are not at war with China and there is no evidence that our national security would have been damaged if Dr. Kissinger had gone over with full knowledge of the pending visit. There is no information what was decided in the 20 hours of discussion that I know of.

Perhaps Senators have other information as to the extent of those discussions, but there has been no information as to what ultimately is going to be discussed of a substantive nature affecting the future of the United States and its foreign relations. I think all the circumstances, in view of the Pentagon papers, indicate that there is good reason for the Senate to be in the position of advising and consenting, and that good reason relates not only to the warmaking power, which power has now taken 55,000 lives in Indochina, but goes also to the treaty-making power.

Here the argument goes that the President might not want to conclude the war that has been in existence, even though it might be the desire of the Senate to conclude it and even though it might be the desire of the people to conclude it as expressed to the Senate.

So the advice of the Senate section of the Constitution does not relate merely to the advice that the President might request, but advice could come from the Senate on its own desire. In other words, it should be the coequal branch of government which makes our system different from an authoritarian system and keeps it from being a one-man show.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The Senator is right. Our experience proves the soundness of the constitutional system. There are other instances of intervention without consultation of the Congress that we could mention in the last 50 or 75 years. It is only since the era of recurring wars, it seems to me, that there has been a real departure from the traditional role between the Congress and the Executive in these matters. There should have been a great deal more reliance and more trust in the Congress on the part of the Executive, but under the impact of several wars—certainly beginning with World War I—and the disastrous Wilsonian experience, and subsequently the present disaster, there a distortion of our constitutional system has developed.

I think this resolution is a step in the right direction, and is especially timely in view of the Senate's recent passage of the Mansfield amendment, which, in the context of the pending draft bill, has still been enacted. I really do not understand why the administration is so determined not to accept the Mansfield amendment. It is a valid statement of policy, and it seems to me that the Senate is entitled to make that statement. It was actually given advice there, only through a different vehicle, and I think it was well within the Senate's responsibility to do it, and I think history will prove the advice was correct advice. I hope that provision will be accepted.

I certainly commend the Senator from Indiana for introducing this measure. I am glad to see that there are Members of this body who do not believe that, because something has been the practice, because the Constitution has been ignored, we have to accept it. There is a sound constitutional principle involved also—the mere fact that the Constitution has been ignored in some respects does not mean those derelictions became the law of the land.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's 15 minutes have expired.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I simply want to thank the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee for his excellent analysis and his assurances that early hearings would be held, and also for the kind words he had to say concerning the resolution.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT—AMENDMENT

AMENDMENT NO. 335

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

INCOME TAX CREDIT FOR POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I submit an amendment to S. 382, the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, and I ask that it lie on the table and be printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROTH). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the amendment would establish a tax credit for political contributions. Under this title, a total of up to $50 for a single individual, or $100 for a married couple, would be allowed as a credit against Federal income taxes for contributions to political parties or candidates. The credit would be available for contributions to all elections—primaries or general elections—and to candidates at all levels—Federal, State, or local. Equally important, the credit would be for 100 percent of the amount of the contribution up to the stated limit.

The concept of tax credits for political contributions has had a distinguished history of support over the past decade. In 1962, President Kennedy's Commission on Campaign Costs issued its report, entitled "Financing Presidential Campaigns." One of the major recommendations in the Commission's report was the enactment of a tax credit for political contributions. As the report stated:

The recommended credit is intended to encourage large numbers of small gifts. The bulk of * * * campaign funds available to both parties is now supplied by a relatively small group of contributors, giving sums ranging from a few hundred to several thousands of dollars * * * We hope that this * * * incentive to small gifts will stimulate the massive giving needed by the parties. If it does not, other forms of governmental subsidy may be inevitable.

Virtually every major study of the political process in recent years has endorsed the concept of the tax credit, and the idea has also been pursued extensively in Congress.

In his message to Congress on "The Political Process in America," in May 1967, President Johnson recommended that Congress undertake an extensive review of the methods of financing election campaigns, by methods such as direct appropriations, tax credits or deductions, treasury vouchers, and various matching grant plans.

Then, in November 1967, after comprehensive hearings and executive sessions by the Senate Finance Committee on numerous proposals, the committee favorably reported H.R. 4890, the "Honest Elections Act of 1967." As recommended by the committee, the bill contained a number of major provisions, including an income tax credit of up to $25 for one-half of the political contributions made by a taxpayer. All but one of the 17 members of the committee supported this provision.

Subsequently, in the 91st Congress, together with Senator JAMES PEARSON of Kansas, I offered a tax credit amendment on the Senate floor during the debate on the Tax Reform Act of 1969. The amendment was narrowly defeated by margin of 50-45, but the vote was complicated by the fact that the amendment had itself been amended on the Senate floor to add provisions for the reporting and disclosure of campaign contributions, so that no full debate on the merits of the tax credit was possible.

In light of this prior history, I am confident that a majority of the full Senate favors a tax credit for political contributions, and I hope that such a provision may become part of our Internal Revenue Code in time for the 1972 election campaign.

The tax credit approach to financing political campaigns has several major advantages over all other methods that have been proposed for financing such campaigns.

First, the tax credit approach will provide a significant incentive for participation in the political process by a large proportion of the electorate. One of the most important goals in recent proposals to reform the political process has been to stimulate greater public participation in election campaigns. I believe that the modest tax credit I have proposed will significantly encourage political parties to solicit contributions from small donors. In recent election years, for example, there have been millions of individual campaign contributors, the overwhelming majority of whom were $1 or $2 contributors. By offering a tax credit for the full amount of contributions by small donors, we will encourage many more individuals to contribute, and will encourage existing small contributors to raise their contributions to a more substantial level.

Second, by encouraging contributions from small donors, the tax credit will help to break down the excessive reliance by candidates on large contributors. As a result, the credit will help to restore public faith in the integrity of the election process. It will help to eliminate the ambiguous relationships created for the successful candidate, in which he is obligated—or at least appears to be obligated—to his large contributors.

Third, the tax credit leaves the decision on the allocation of public funds, through the tax subsidy mechanism, to the choice of the individual taxpayer himself. This point is the central distinction between the tax credit approach and the various proposals made in recent years for the direct financing of political campaigns. Under the tax credit approach, unlike these other proposals, the Federal Government plays no part in determining which candidates or committees are to receive public funds or the amount of such funds that are to be made available to particular candidates. It is the citizen, and the citizen alone, who makes this determination.

Fourth, the tax credit offers financial assistance to candidates not only at the general election stage, but at the primary stage as well, where such assistance can often be of crucial importance.

Fifth, the tax credit offers assistance to candidates not only at the presidential level, but at the congressional, State, and local level as well. This point is especially important. As Senator Robert Kennedy stated in 1967:

Presidential candidates do not spring, like Minerva, from the brow of Jove. Men earn consideration for the Presidency by their performance in other public office—most often governor or senator. The expense of nomination to a governorship or a Senate seat—especially in the large states from which most Presidential candidates are drawn—is by itself a substantial barrier to all but men of wealth or their favored candidates. Thus, fair consideration for the Presidency itself requires public support for campaigns for lesser offices at all levels. This support can only come from tax incentives to individual contributions.

Before proposing this amendment, I gave serious consideration to including a tax deduction as an alternative to the tax credit. A tax deduction approach would have many of the advantages of a tax credit, especially with respect to the encouragement of individual choice and participation in the political process. However, a tax deduction would cause substantial inequities and disparities in the benefits afforded contributors. Those in the highest tax brackets, at whom the incentive should be least directed, would receive the greatest benefits, whereas taxpayers in the lowest brackets would receive the smallest benefits. Therefore, the proposed amendment contains no provision for a tax deduction.

I ask unanimous consent that the amendment may be printed at this point in the RECORD.

Because of the constitutional difficulty involved in the initiation of revenue measures in the Senate it may not be possible to include tax incentives for political contributors in S. 382 itself. If that proves to be the case, it is my hope that the Senate will consider the addition of such incentives to an appropriate House-passed bill at the earliest reasonable opportunity after the passage of S. 382.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NOTICE OF HEARINGS ON NOMINATIONS

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, the Senate section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy will hold a public hearing on Tuesday, August 3, 1971, at 4 p.m., in room S407, U.S. Capitol on the nominations of James R. Schlesinger and William O. Doub to be members of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Mr. Schlesinger has been nominated to fill the remainder of the term of Glenn T. Seaborg which expires on June 30, 1975.

Mr. Doub has been nominated to be a member of the AEC for a 5-year term expiring on June 30, 1976. He is scheduled to fill the vacancy previously held by Theos Thompson, deceased.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the biographies of Mr. Schlesinger and Mr. Doub which were provided to the Joint Committee with the submission of their nominations to the Atomic Energy Commission.

There being no objection, the biographies were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JAMES R. SCHLESINGER

James R. Schlesinger was named an Assistant Director of the Budget Bureau shortly after President Nixon's inauguration. His initial responsibilities were in the areas of national security and international programs and science policy.

In the Fall of 1969 he was named Acting Deputy Director of the Budget Bureau and later served as Acting Budget Director during the transition to Office of Management and Budget. As Acting Deputy Director, Mr. Schlesinger was responsible for natural resources programs and environmental policy. He served as the Budget Bureau's representative on the Environmental Quality Council. During that year, the budget and programs of the Interior Department were under his purview, and he was intimately involved in the planning for the Council on Environmental Quality, as well as the establishment of the new Environmental Protection Agency. In the Summer of 1970, he was named Assistant Director of the newly formed Office of Management and Budget with responsibility for national security and international programs.

Prior to joining the Nixon Administration, Mr. Schlesinger had been Director of Strategic Studies at the Rand Corporation, Santa Monica, California, where he had written extensively on the role of systems analyses in relation to political decision-making. He was also engaged in applying those techniques to strategy and to force structure determination. During that period he was a Consultant to the Bureau of the Budget on atomic energy matters. While at Rand he had served as Project Leader of a study on the control of nuclear proliferation which Rand had undertaken for the Federal Government.

Before his association with Rand, Mr. Schlesinger had been an Associate Professor of Economics at the University of Virginia. At that time he was recognized for work on monetary and fiscal policy and on the mechanics of inflation, and served as a Consultant to the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System. During 1957 he served as Consultant to the Naval War College. His book, "The Political Economy of National Security", was published in 1960.

Mr. Schlesinger received his A.B. degree in Economics (summa cum laude) from Harvard University in 1950. That same year he was the winner of the Frederick Sheldon Prize Fellowship, which enabled him to spend a year visiting some twenty-two countries. In 1951 he returned to Harvard, earning the A.M. degree in 1952, and his Ph.D. in 1956, both in Economics. His dissertation was on "Wage-cost-price Relationships and Economic Progress". At the same time, he served as Teaching Fellow in Economics, Teaching Fellow in Social Sciences, and Tutor in Eliot House.

Mr. Schlesinger was born in New York City on February 15, 1929. He is married to the former Rachel Mellinger of Springfield, Ohio. They reside with their eight children, who range in age from 3 months to 16 years, in Arlington, Virginia.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

THE AUTO EXCISE TAX

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an editorial entitled "Time to Cut Tax on Cars," published in the Pontiac Press, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Pontiac Press, July 21, 1971]

TIME TO CUT TAX ON CARS

Perhaps Michigan's two Senators, Robert Griffin and Phillip Hart, can be accused of regionalism in cosponsoring a bill to end the 7 percent excise tax on automobiles. But if this be so, let us have more of it.

On a $3,000 car, this strange tax adds $210 to the price.

The special tax was placed on automobiles during World War II. Its intent was not only revenue-raising but to discourage car buying in a wartime economy.

Almost every year since the war, someone has suggested removing the tax, but for various reasons it was left on.

Now seems to be a good time to finally get rid of it. The stimulation to Michigan's economy is obvious. But then more cars mean more steel, more fabrics, more rubber, and more money left in the hands of consumers all over the U.S.

Although the federal budget may suffer temporarily from this lack of income, in the long run, most economists would insist more actual income would result.

We wish Griffin and Hart success in their efforts.

ORGANIZATIONS SUPPORTING WELFARE REFORM

Mr. RIBICOFF. Mr. President, tomorrow the Senate Finance Committee will begin hearings on H.R. 1, which contains a major revision of this Nation's system for providing relief to its needy citizens. Welfare reform should not be viewed narrowly as just another program, but rather as the most direct way to win the war on poverty. The package of amendments which I introduced last week to H.R. 1 will, I am convinced, make this legislation the best hope for bringing 25 million Americans back into the mainstream of American society.

In the next few months many diverse groups, legislators, citizens, and the administration will be proposing additions, deletions, and modifications to H.R. 1. It is important, therefore, that we recognize the large areas of agreement which already exist among those seeking to reform our welfare system.

Widespread agreement exists on major proposals such as the increase of payment levels to at least the poverty level, the Federal assumption of costs, and administration under a uniform system, the provision of public and private sector jobs paying no less than the minimum wage with basic suitability protection, the provision of day-care services for those in manpower training programs or jobs, optional registration in such programs for mothers with preschool children, and fiscal relief for States and localities from the cost burdens of public assistance.

These proposals are included in the amendments to H.R. 1 I introduced last week. In addition, recent policy statements of several groups and organizations have also publicly supported these improvements in H.R. 1.

The history of welfare reform legislation in the last 2 years dramatically illustrates that no one claims his own proposals are chiseled in granite and represent the definitive answer to the chaos of the present welfare nonsystem. My proposals as well as those of the President, the Ways and Means Committee, and other major participants have been modified from time to time—not only to attain a politically achievable consensus, but also in recognition of the fact that none of us knows all the answers about how well or badly one or another proposal will work. We must be willing to observe a new system in operation and be ready to make changes where needed. Fewer changes will be necessitated, however, if we begin Senate consideration on the basis of common ground already achieved.

I ask unanimous consent that the accompanying policy statements be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the policy statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY THE AFL-CIO EXECUTIVE COUNCIL ON WELFARE REFORM, BAL HARBOUR, FLA., FEBRUARY 15, 1971.

The Administration's welfare reform program needs substantial improvement before the AFL-CIO could support its enactment.

Inflation, unemployment, inadequate and costly health care, inferior education, to name just a few—have forced more and more people on to the public assistance rolls. Indeed, the more the causes of poverty are ignored the greater the welfare "problem" will become.

The battle against poverty must be waged on two fronts—eliminating the causes of poverty so that fewer people will have to depend on welfare and improving the welfare program for those who must rely on it.

Jobs at decent wages and adequate social insurance payments would make it possible for millions to climb out of poverty.

By making unemployment a national policy to fight inflation, the Administration has virtually brought the decline of poverty to a halt.

In 1969 the decrease in poverty (defined for that year as $3700 for a four-person family) came almost to a standstill. With worsening economic conditions and expanding joblessness in 1970, it is probable that the long-term trend away from poverty has even been reversed.

Who are the poor?

More than 5½ million people, or about one-quarter of all the poor, are poor although the breadwinner works full-time all year. Their road out of poverty lies in decent jobs covered by a minimum wage raised to at least $2 an hour.

In proportion to their numbers, the elderly are twice as poor as the rest of the population. Approximately one-fifth of all people in poverty can live out their years in dignity and comfort only if Social Security benefits are substantially improved.

But there are some people—especially mothers with children in their care and large families headed by low-earnings workers—who will depend on welfare for their daily needs. Seven million of the poor, or 29 percent of all poor people, are in families headed by a woman. The Administration's welfare bill falls far short of what is needed to provide the answer to their poverty.

When, in the Summer of 1969, the President first announced his welfare reform proposal, he called for a payment level of $1,600 a year—less than $8.00 a week per person. But if a bill should be enacted in the coming months, it cannot be implemented until mid-1973 after many more months of inflation.

The AFL-CIO calls for reaching as rapidly as possible a national minimum welfare payment of no less than the government-defined poverty level. Until this level is reached, food stamps should be maintained at an adequate level or cashed out at their full value. Welfare payments should at least keep pace with the cost of living.

The AFL-CIO strongly opposes the provision in the Welfare Reform bill which could require recipients to take jobs under conditions denying them basic minimum protections. As reported by the House Ways and Means Committee in the last Congress, job assignments would have had to take account of such elements of suitability as the degree of risk to the individual's health and safety, his physical fitness for the work, prior training length of unemployment and distance from work. Although workers have long had these protections under unemployment compensation, the House of Representatives removed them from the bill it passed. The Congress must reverse this shameful disregard of the well-being and dignity of welfare recipients, by including these basic job protections in this year's legislation.

The potential for exploitation of welfare recipients was all the greater in the bill the House passed last year because it would have forced welfare recipients into jobs paying substandard wages. This is an unconscionable requirement which we will adamantly resist.

The basic purpose stated in the Fair Labor Standards Act is to eliminate as rapidly as possible "labor conditions detrimental to the maintenance of the minimum standard of living necessary for health, efficiency and general well-being of workers." To require large numbers of people to take jobs at subminimum wages or lose their welfare payments on which they and their families depend for the bare necessities of life would constitute an outrageous attack on the most defenseless and disadvantaged sector of our population.

The impact of such action would be far broader than the forced assignment of welfare recipients to substandard jobs. There is not the slightest doubt that requiring welfare recipients to take jobs below the FLSA rate will make it all the more difficult for employed family heads now working at jobs paying substandard wages to improve their incomes.

The Welfare Reform legislation must provide that jobs to which welfare recipients are assigned must pay wages at a rate equal to the prevailing wage in the locality or the federal or state minimum wage, whichever is mutual defense agreement. Peking lacks the military capacity to seize Taiwan by amphibious or airborne attack—and shows no plans of acquiring the necessary capacity in the near future.

Accordingly, I would urge the Administration to issue a declaration of intent to withdraw U.S. forces from Taiwan, concurrently with the withdrawal from Vietnam—as an important and timely element in the effort to defuse the Chinese Representation status of Taiwan issues before the pressure of time locks us (and Peking) into our old positions of confrontation in the U.N. this fall.

In reviewing the terms of S. Res. 37—which was introduced back on February 2—I am struck by how much forward movement has been achieved in the direction advocated by its terms respecting overall U.S.-China relations. We have had, of course, the dramatic break-through of "ping-pong" diplomacy.

Also, I wish to take this opportunity to commend President Nixon for his important initiatives respecting trade regulations, the lifting of travel restrictions, and the continued projection of a diplomatic posture of reconciliation with mainland China. Moreover, the press has carried numerous reports of intensive reviews, discussions and diplomatic exchanges by the Nixon Administration respecting a new position of the Chinese representation issue. The task is not simple but the timing is urgent.

The time has now come, in my judgment, for the U.S. to play an active role in finding a new formula which will provide for U.N. membership for the People's Republic of China, carrying with it occupancy of the permanent seat on the Security Council and to provide for continuing U.N. membership participation for the Republic of China on Taiwan. This is clearly the best policy for the U.S., and I believe that it is at least an interim solution which would command broad support in the General Assembly.

It is possible that either or both Peking and Taipei might refuse to participate in the U.N. under the conditions I have suggested. That would be most regrettable, in my judgment. Nonetheless, the door would always then be open to both to participate—and at a minimum, the absence of Peking from the U.N. no longer would be the result of an outmoded, unrealistic and counterproductive policy of the U.S.

A number of the younger, more "left" inclined U.S. China scholars have advocated that the U.S. accept Peking's terms respecting the status of Taiwan, as the price of better relations and securing Peking's participation in the U.N. I disagree with this view for several reasons. First, I am convinced that such a course by the U.S. would, in my judgment, virtually assure the ascendancy of the harder-line elements in Peking and reinforce Peking into its old position of intransigence and militancy—a position which Peking now seems very desirous of modifying. Any "half-way" abandonment of Taiwan by the U.S., far from improving relations, could soon lead to a serious confrontation between the U.S. and the People's Republic.

Second, a policy of total abandonment is a wrongful and impossible course for the U.S. Leaving aside moral considerations, abandoning Taiwan would make sense only if the U.S. pursued a policy of radical detente with China, aimed at establishing a close Washington-Peking axis as the foundation of our Asia policy. Such a radical policy is neither desirable or possible, in my judgment. Our relations with mainland China is a key element of our Asian policy—but must always be judged in the context of overall Asia policy. It is in this crucial regard that the U.S. must shape its China policy in consonance with our relations with Japan and our other Asian friends and allies. Their interests and their attitudes are important, and sometimes complicating factors. This is especially true respecting the question of Taiwan, an issue of great importance to Japan particularly.

The challenge of finding a way to bring the Peoples Republic of China into the council of nations on terms which are at least minimally tolerable to the parties concerned is one of the most urgent now facing the Nixon Administration. In importance, it perhaps ranks only behind the SALT negotiations and ending the Vietnam War—and it is closely related to both of these efforts.

Over the perspective of a decade, the greatest benefit likely to flow from Peking's participation in the U.N. will be the engagement of Peking in the international nuclear arms control negotiations and agreements conducted under U.N. auspices. I feel that there are now mutually compelling reasons for Washington and Peking also to work together in the international arms control field. China's attitude toward SALT ought to be a benign one. Like Washington and Moscow, Peking too stands to gain from a SALT agreement restraining the nuclear arms race, for superpower nuclear might be an even greater potential threat to China than it is to the U.S. or Russia—and in recent years Peking has been on different occasions in a posture of confrontation with both superpowers. Even if relations between Peking and Moscow continue to deteriorate, a SALT agreement could nonetheless benefit Peking by reducing the chances that the USSR will acquire a strategic posture allowing it the option of a preventive nuclear first strike against China.

The U.S. has a particular incentive in bringing China into nuclear arms control arrangements because, even under the Nixon Doctrine, the U.S. is pledged to provide a "nuclear shield" to our Asian friends and allies along China's periphery. Thus, under the Nixon Doctrine, the chances of nuclear embroilment with China might be greater than conventional embroilment of the Vietnam or Korea varieties. Accordingly, a key element in the success and viability of the Nixon Doctrine strategy could be the achievement of nuclear arms control arrangements with China.

Peking too has a special incentive to support international nuclear arms control agreements in the post-Vietnam period. The Non-Proliferation Treaty is central in this respect, for the two nations generally deemed most likely to "go nuclear" are India and Japan—China's greatest potential rivals and enemies in Asia. China clearly has major incentive in preserving the inhibitions against India or Japan "going nuclear"—for China's strategic position would be gravely deteriorated if Peking were faced not only with a nuclear USSR and USA but also nuclear close neighbors of such consequence as India and Japan.

In closing, let me reiterate my strong feeling that an important new tide is flowing in U.S.-China relations—potentially a very benign tide—and this is without any derogation of my every wish to seek detente and accommodation with the USSR. Nonetheless, I perceive a danger that the tide could be diverted into most troublesome channels, if a day is not found to handle the Chinese representation on question in the U.N. General Assembly this fall.

UNIVERSAL VOTER REGISTRATION FOR FEDERAL ELECTIONS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, later this week, on behalf of myself and a number of other Members of the Senate, I plan to submit an amendment to S. 382, "The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971." The purpose of the amendment is to establish a system of universal voter registration for the Nation. The amendment would contain the following principal provisions:

First, it would provide a simple post card system of voter registration, in which any citizen could register to vote merely by filling out a post card application form.

Second, burdensome residence requirements under existing laws would be abolished. Simply by filling out the address of his residence on the post card form, a citizen would establish his voting residence.

Third, a new computerized agency created within the Census Bureau—the Universal Voter Registration Administration—would process the post card forms, compile voting lists by precinct throughout the country, and make the lists available to State and local election officials at appropriate times before any election.

Fourth, use of the new system would be mandatory for all Federal elections and optional for State and local elections. Where the system is used for State and local elections, however, the Federal list must be accepted intact. No person entitled to vote in Federal elections can be deleted from the list for failure to meet other qualifications.

The time has come to take another major step forward in our national quest for universal suffrage. To be sure, we have made great strides in recent years. But always in the past, our efforts have ignored one of the most burdensome qualifications for voting—the requirement of registration, a requirement that operates to disfranchise tens of millions of Americans in every Federal election.

The history of the Nation since the Civil War is marked with significant milestones along the route we have taken to broaden our democracy and increase the base of participation by our citizens in the political life of the Nation. We have forbidden the use of race or sex as a qualification for voting. We have outlawed poll taxes. We have granted the franchise to citizens of the District of Columbia in presidential elections. A long line of civil rights acts and court decisions, especially in the decade of the fifties and sixties, has expanded the right to vote and ended many of the most flagrant discriminations against citizens at the polls. And, only last year, we lowered the voting age to 18, thereby giving the franchise to millions of young Americans who had been forced to bear all the other burdens and responsibilities of citizenship, but had been denied the most basic right of all in our democratic society, the right to vote.

Now that we have stripped away so many other blatant impediments to the right to vote, the existing practices of voter registration in America can be seen all the more clearly for what they are—an arbitrary, obsolete, and unfair system by which vast numbers of Americans are silenced at the polls. In spite of the progress we have made in extending the franchise, the voting record of America ranks among the worst of all the great democracies of the Western world.

Of the 120 million potential voters in the presidential election of 1968, only 73 million—or 61 percent—actually went to the polls. Forty-seven million people stayed home, at a time when the winner—President Nixon—was receiving only 31 million votes. Incredible as it may seem, half again as many people stayed away from the polls as voted for the man who is our President.

In 1970, in Britain, by contrast, 72 percent of the eligible voters went to the polls, and yet they called it one of the lowest turnouts in history, the lowest since 1935. In the most recent elections in other democratic nations, the turnout has been even higher—75 percent in Ireland, 76 percent in Canada, 80 percent in France, 87 percent in West Germany, 89 percent in Sweden and Denmark.

The low turnout of American voters has been a consistent flaw in the political life of our Nation for many years. In the presidential election of 1900, the turnout was 73 percent. Not once since then has our voter turnout exceeded 66 percent. Seven times it fell below 60 percent. Twice, in 1920 and 1924, it fell below 50 percent.

And yet, it has not always been this way. Throughout the greater part of the 19th century, voter turnout in our presidential elections ranged in the neighborhood of 70 to 80 percent. The highest turnout was in 1876, when 82 percent of the potential voters went to the polls. The lowest was in 1852, when "only" 70 percent did so.

It is no coincidence, therefore, that the turn of the century, which saw the advent of voter registration, also saw a sharp decline in voter turnout. According to a recent study, registration was adopted at the turn of the century partly for the worthy purpose of prohibiting the abuses of machine politics in the growing cities of the North, and partly for the darker purpose of disfranchising black citizens in the South. Today, as this history strongly implies, the requirement of voter registration is the largest single obstacle to the right to vote in America.

The figures in 1968 tell the story. Of the 120 million potential voters in the presidential election of 1968, only 82 million—or 68 percent—were registered to vote and therefore eligible to go to the polls on election day. But of that number, fully 73 million, or 89 percent, actually went to the polls and cast their ballots.

The lesson is clear. Americans who are registered are Americans who vote. Of the 47 million citizens who stayed home on election day, the overwhelming majority—38 million, or 81 percent—were not registered to vote. Only 19 percent of those who stayed home were citizens who were registered to vote.

THE PRESENT SYSTEM OF VOTER REGISTRATION

Clearly, the paramount cause of America's dismal record of voter participation today is our inadequate system of voter registration. Virtually without exception, the registration laws of the 50 States and the District of Columbia are a nightmare of confusing, conflicting, and overlapping requirements, ranging from Missouri, which has six different registration systems for cities, depending on their size, and a seventh system available to counties at their option, to North Dakota, which has no statewide laws requiring voter registration, although local jurisdictions may do so at their option.

Typically, State and local registration rolls are unwieldy, inaccurate, and obsolete. A large percentage of the names are persons no longer qualified to vote because of death, conviction of a crime, change of residence, or other reasons. In order to keep the lists at least reasonably current, the States are driven to the use of arbitrary rules, such as the disqualification of voters who fail to vote in a previous election, or requirements of annual or periodic reregistration.

The burdens of our present system of voter registration are multiple. Frequently, they are a thin disguise for blatant racial discrimination against the right to vote. The hearing records of Congress during the debates of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 and its extension in 1970 are replete with examples of such discrimination.

For some citizens, registration means loss of income through loss of time on the job or time away from business. Many individuals simply cannot take time off to register during working hours, and are thereby relegated to the status of second-class citizens.

For others, the most important burden is the sheer difficulty and inconvenience of the registration process. Too often, registration is an obstacle course for the voter instead of the incentive to total participation it ought to be. The obstacles are enormous. Many citizens find it difficult to determine where and when they can register. They refuse to endure the long lines and waiting periods. They are baffled by the inaccessibility of registration offices. In some States, registration offices may be open only a few hours a day or week. Other States prohibit precinct, neighborhood, or mobile registration. They allow registration only in the county courthouse, which may require a trip downtown or even out of town. Frequently, the expense of the trip itself is sufficient to inhibit registration—a de facto poll tax that frustrates the right to vote.

For still others, there is the problem of early registration deadlines. In a number of States, the registration books close weeks or months before the election, and there is no opportunity whatever to register in the period immediately preceding the election. In Mississippi, the registration offices close 4 months before the election—the rolls are routinely purged after the deadline, so that a citizen erroneously removed from the list has no opportunity to register again. In 14 other States with early registration deadlines—Arizona, California, Colorado, Georgia, Hawaii, Kentucky, Michigan, Montana, Nevada, New Jersey, New Mexico, Ohio, Pennsylvania, and Rhode Island—the registration books close more than a month before the election.

For yet another group of citizens, especially those who travel frequently, who are away from home for extended periods, or who are ill or disabled, the problem is the lack of any procedure for absentee registration. Although virtually every State has established absentee voting procedures, few have taken the additional step of establishing absentee registration procedures as an alternative to the traditional requirement that registration must be in person.

And finally, for another substantial group of citizens, the burden is one of unreasonable reregistration requirements. In Texas, for example, annual reregistration is required, a procedure declared unconstitutional by a Federal district court earlier this year and now subject to an appeal. Other States require voters to renew their registration so frequently that many citizens simply find themselves unable to keep up with the requirements. Often a citizen arrives at the polls to vote, only to be told that his registration has been canceled because he failed to vote in the previous election, even though he was never given notice of the cancellation.

An especially insidious aspect of the problem of registration is the evidence that the burden of State and local registration requirements falls most heavily on the poor, the black, the uneducated, and manual and service workers. For example, according to a census study of the 1968 election, 87 percent of those with a college degree are registered to vote, whereas only 49 percent of those with 1 to 4 years' education are registered. And, two decades of hearings in Congress on Civil Rights Acts and Voting Rights Acts have overwhelmingly demonstrated the ease with which voter registration requirements lend themselves to discriminatory application.

THE BURDEN OF RESIDENCE REQUIREMENT

Impediments to the right to vote of a different sort, but no less burdensome for millions of citizens, are the hundreds of different State and local residence requirements that now exist throughout the Nation. Typically, under present voting laws a potential voter must fulfill three different resident requirements before he is entitled to vote—he must have resided in his State for periods ranging from 6 months to a year; he must have resided in his county for periods from 30 days to 6 months; and, he must have resided in his precinct for periods from 10 to 30 days. In some jurisdictions, the minimum residence requirement is lower; in many, it is substantially higher.

In the quieter and less mobile era of our history when these residence requirements were imposed, the burden was not as huge as it is today. The Census Bureau estimates that every year, 20 million Americans, or 10 percent of the population, move their residence from one State to another. On the average, each family in the Nation moves its residence once every 4 years.

The plight of the disfranchised mobile voter in America is well known, and no extended discussion is needed here. As many experts have noted, the right of a citizen to travel freely from State to State is one of our fundamental rights protected by the Constitution, and the exercise of that right should never trigger the loss of an even more basic constitutional right, the right to vote.

Last year, as part of the statute lowering the voting age to 18, Congress took a significant step to alleviate the burden of so-called "durational" residence requirements by reducing such requirements to 30 days for voting in presidential elections.

Now the time is ripe for Congress to go further, and there is growing sentiment in the Senate to make the same 30-day requirement applicable to all Federal elections. Indeed, a bill to this effect is about to be introduced in the Senate by Senator JOHN TUNNEY of California, with strong bipartisan support, and similar legislation has already been introduced by Senator HAROLD HUGHES.

BACKGROUND OF EFFORTS TOWARD UNIVERSAL VOTER REGISTRATION

In recent years, discussions of various proposals to establish a system of universal voter registration for the United States have dwelled essentially exclusively on what may be called local action methods—that is, door-to-door canvassing at the local level—at the initiative of local jurisdictions. Each of two major studies of the decade of the sixties has recommended this approach, partly because it is the approach apparently responsible for the higher voter turnouts in foreign democracies, and partly because of philosophical and constitutional objections to methods relying on the initiative of the Federal Government.

The first study was made by the President's Commission on Registration and Voting Participation, established by President Kennedy in March of 1963, chaired by Richard Scammon, the Director of the Census Bureau at that time, and charged with the task of determining the reasons for low voter turnout in America, and recommending solutions. The Commission's report in November of 1963 was a major milestone in the analysis of the complex psychological and legal factors that lie at the heart of the problem.

The Commission made more than 20 major recommendations to end restrictive legal and administrative procedures inhibiting the right to vote. In the area of voter registration, the Commission urged the State to adopt procedures to make registration easily accessible to every citizen. As patterns to be followed, the Commission pointed to the example of Canada and noted a number of States and communities in America that had successfully used registration procedures involving door-to-door canvassing, deputy registrars, and mobile registration units.

The second major study was prepared by the Freedom to Vote Task Force, established by the Democratic National Committee in 1969 and chaired by Ramsey Clark, the former Attorney General of the United States. Notwithstanding its partisan sponsorship, the report of the task force, entitled "That All May Vote," is a persuasive nonpartisan document challenging the Nation to end the abuses we have endured for so long and to act to increase the strength of our democracy. As the report states:

People who vote believe in the system. They participate. They have a stake in government. But, to the nonparticipants their stake in government is not so apparent. Their alienation from the system is harmful not only in their own lives, but it threatens the survival of democracy itself.

Registration efforts must not be concerned with how people vote. The important consideration is that they vote. We can live with decisions made by a full electorate, but those who do not participate may be unwilling to live with decisions they had no voice in making. We must do everything within our power to encourage them to vote. Let the people choose.

The report of the task force made clear that voter registration is the real villain, the principal barrier that stands between the citizen and the ballot box. As in the case of the 1963 Commission study, the report pointed to the success of local action for voter registration in South Dakota, Idaho, and in parts of California and Washington, and urged a similar program for America. The proposal was introduced in legislative form in the 91st Congress by Senator INOUYE, a member of the task force, and it has been reintroduced as S. 1199 in the present Congress.

Because of doubts that have been raised about the feasibility of the local-action approach to voter registration, progress has been slow in efforts to implement such proposals. More and more, attention has turned to the alternative of a Federal system of voter registration to achieve the universal system we need.

The Senate took a major step in this direction last June, when it approved by the vote of 47 to 31 an amendment to the draft bill, authorizing Selective Service offices to register 18-year-olds to vote at the time they register for the draft. And Senator HUMPHREY is offering a similar proposal to use the facilities of the Internal Revenue Service to promote voter registration.

In large measure, recent Supreme Court decisions have eliminated possible constitutional objections to a Federal system of universal voter registration. Now and for the foreseeable future, I believe that such a system is the only hope we have for pulling ourselves out of the present morass of registration requirements.

THE SOUTH CAROLINA EXPERIENCE

In the face of growing demands imposed on outdated voter registration procedures, a number of cities and counties throughout the Nation have begun to use computers to modernize their procedures. In 1967, South Carolina became the first and only State to centralize its voters registration procedure through a computer system on a statewide basis. Although registration in South Carolina continues to be initiated through the county registration boards in the State and citizens must still appear in person to register at the local boards, their applications are now forwarded to the State data processing office, where the information is stored and processed.

The familiar but cumbersome ledger books that used to form the registration record in South Carolina have now been replaced by magnetic tapes in a computer system. The records are continuously kept current through data provided to the State agency from various sources; for example, the bureau of vital statistics provides monthly reports on persons who have died, and the State and Federal courts provide data on persons convicted of crimes. Prior to the new system, the registration records were rarely cleaned for any reason.

On the basis of the data in the computer files, official lists of registered voters for each county and precinct are printed and made available to local officials 10 days before each State, county, municipal, or other election. Thus, it is no longer necessary to use the entire county ledger for a municipal election, or to copy manually from the county rolls the names of persons eligible to vote in elections held in smaller jurisdictions. Since the computer lists contain all the information provided by the voter when he registered, election officials are able to identify registrants easily at the polls. Under the previous system, only the voter's name and address were on the rolls.

As a result of the vastly increased efficiency of the new system, the county registration boards in South Carolina that used to be open only a few days a month are now open on a daily basis during normal courthouse hours. During the first year of the new system, 850,000 South Carolina voters were registered, the highest figure in the history of the State. The total cost of the computer portion of the system is approximately $170,000 a year, and the entire store of registration information is contained on five reels of computer tape.

A SYSTEM OF UNIVERSAL VOTER REGISTRATION FOR THE NATION

At a single stroke, the system of universal voter registration I favor would eliminate the arbitrary and unfair requirements of residence and registration that now operate to disfranchise so many of our citizens. Durational residence requirements would be abolished for Federal elections, and registration would involve a procedure no more complicated than filling out a post card form and placing it in the mail. Local control of the actual election process would remain unchanged, but virtually the entire financial cost and administrative burden of voter registration would be lifted from the States and transferred to the Federal Government.

The program would be administered by a new bipartisan agency to be established in the Census Bureau. Citizens would register to vote simply by filling out the post card form and mailing it to the new agency. Merely by specifying the address of his residence on the form, the citizen would determine his voting residence. There would be no requirement of residence for a specific period of time. The system would thus do away not only with burdensome registration requirements, but also with unfair residence requirements that operate to bar voters in almost every State.

With the assistance of computers, the information would be stored, divided according to election districts, and made available by the Census agency to appropriate State and local election officials, as the official list of eligible voters.

Use of the new voter registration list would be mandatory in Federal elections, and optional for State and local elections. I believe, however, that the simplicity, efficiency, and cost savings of the system would lead to its rapid acceptance for State and local elections as well, so that within a brief period of time, the Nation would have a truly universal voter registration system for all elections. Our system of democracy deserves no less.

In its details, the system would function as follows:

First, a new bipartisan agency—the Universal Voter Registration Administration—UVRA—will be established in the Bureau of the Census to organize and administer a program of universal voter registration for all Federal elections, and to assist States in their registration for State and local elections. The UVRA will be authorized to establish State and regional data processing centers to carry out its functions. The agency will be under the direction of an administrator and two associate administrators, no more than two of whom can be members of the same political party. The new agency is created in the Bureau of the Census because that agency has established a long-standing reputation of efficiency and confidentiality, and has already developed the computer programs and technology essential to the implementation of a successful universal voter registration system.

Second, individuals will register to vote through post card voter registration forms, to be mailed free of charge to UVRA. The post card forms will be of the type which allows visual scanning by computers to read the information. They will be widely available in post offices and other Federal agencies, and will also be available to private voter registration groups. Where appropriate, bilingual forms will also be available. In addition, any State or local jurisdiction will be authorized to send its current registration records to UVRA for assimilation into the new Federal system.

Third, the information on the post card forms will include only the name, address, ZIP code, and date of birth of the individual, together with a statement that the individual is not disqualified from voting under State or local law by reason of conviction of a crime or adjudication of mental incompetence. In addition, the individual may specify his party affiliation if he wishes to register for primary elections. UVRA registration will remain valid for 4 years, or for longer periods according to State law.

Fourth, the post card form will also include a line for the signature or mark of the individual, and a statement of the penalty for fraudulent registration. The penalty will be a fine of not more than $10,000, imprisonment for not more than 5 years, or both. The form will also include a statement that the signature or mark of the individual attests to the accuracy of the information he provides on the form.

Fifth, UVRA registration will close 30 days before primary, general, or other elections. UVRA will compile lists of registered voters by local precincts and forward the lists to the appropriate State or local election officials. Simply by having his name on the list, any person will thereby be authorized to vote in Federal elections. States will be able to supplement and update the lists in advance of the Federal election. However, in cases where a State removes a name from the list, notice of the removal must be given promptly to UVRA and to the individual, together with the reason for the removal.

Sixth, use of the UVRA list will be mandatory for all Federal elections and optional for State and local elections. If State and local officials decide to use the UVRA lists for State and local elections, they may not delete anyone from the list for failure to meet other qualifications.

Seventh, UVRA will be authorized to establish appropriate procedures for individuals to verify their registration. It will also inform each voter of the location of his polling place, so that on election day every citizen will know where he must vote.

Eighth, to protect the right of privacy, UVRA information and voting lists will not be available to any other Federal agency and will not be made available by UVRA to any private source. In addition, UVRA will not draw on information collected for other purposes by other Federal data centers, such as the Internal Revenue Service or the Social Security Administration. The UVRA system will be used for voter registration and no other purpose. However, to the extent that State or local law requires voting lists to be publicized, UVRA information may become public at that level, although the information still may not be used by any Federal agency.

CONSTITUTIONAL JUSTIFICATION

In light of a long line of Supreme Court decisions in the area of voting rights in the decade of the sixties, and especially the decision by the Court in Oregon v. Mitchell, 400 U.S. 112 (1970)—the 18-year-old voting case decided last December—there is solid constitutional support for the establishment of a nationwide system of universal voter registration in the United States. Indeed, although the issue may be somewhat less clear-cut, there would also be ample constitutional justification for the extension of the Federal registration system to State and local elections as well.

As in the issues surrounding the Voting Rights Act Amendments of 1970, which Congress passed last year, the issue in the current context concerns the power of Congress to legislate by statute in the area of State and local election requirements.

There can be no question, of course, that the Constitution grants to the States the primary authority to establish qualifications for voting. Article I, section 2 of the Constitution and the 17th amendment specifically provide that the voting qualifications established by a State for members of the most numerous branch of the State legislature shall also determine who may vote for U.S. Senators and Representatives. Although the Constitution contains no specific reference to qualifications for voting in presidential elections or State elections, it has traditionally been accepted that the States also have primary authority to set the qualifications in these areas as well.

At the same time, however, these constitutional provisions are only the beginning, not the end of the analysis. They must be read in the light of all the other specific provisions of the Constitution, including the great amendments that have been adopted at various periods throughout the Nation's history. Most recently, a month ago, the 26th amendment, lowering the voting age to 18, became part of the Constitution, and conferred power on the Congress to enforce the new amendment by appropriate legislation.

The constitutional issues must also be interpreted in the light of the basic Supreme Court decisions interpreting the provisions in question. Although a State may have primary authority under article I of the Constitution to set voting qualifications, it has long been clear that it has no power to condition the right to vote on qualifications prohibited by other provisions of the Constitution, including the various amendments to the Constitution. No one believes, for example, that a State could deny the right to vote to a person because of his race or his religion.

Thus, the Supreme Court has specifically held that the equal protection clause of the 14th amendment itself prohibits certain unreasonable State restrictions on the franchise:

In Carrington v. Rash, 380 U.S. 89 (1965) the Court held that a State could not withhold the franchise from residents merely because they were members of the Armed Forces. Obviously, the rationale of this decision is directly applicable to the present national controversy over the voting residence of students.

In Harper v. Virginia Board of Elections, 383 U.S. 663 (1966), the Court held that a State could not impose a poll tax as a condition of voting.

In Katzenbach v. Morgan, 384 U.S. 641 (1966), the court upheld the constitutionality of a statute passed by Congress overriding State literacy requirements in English and conferring the franchise on voters literate in Spanish.

But the key Supreme Court precedent supporting a universal voter registration system for Federal elections is Oregon v. Mitchell. In that important decision the court not only sustained the constitutionality of a Federal statute lowering the voting age to 18 for Federal elections, but also upheld the constitutionality of two other provisions in the 1970 statute, provisions that were applicable not only to Federal elections, but also to State and local elections.

A provision abolishing State literacy requirements altogether;

And, a provision reducing the residence requirements for voting in presidential elections to 30 days, and requiring the States to make available appropriate absentee registration and absentee voting procedures for such elections.

The Mitchell decision is especially significant because of the substantial majority by which the Supreme Court upheld the constitutionality of the literacy and residence provisions of the 1970 statute passed by Congress.

To be sure, the provision lowering the voting age to 18 in Federal elections was sustained by the narrow margin of 5 to 4, with Justice Black casting the deciding vote on the basis of the power of Congress under article I, section 4, of the Constitution to regulate the time, place, and manner of conducting Federal elections.

At the same time, however, in spite of the narrow vote on the 18-year-old issue, the Court upheld the validity of the literacy and residence provisions by overwhelming majorities—9 to 0 in the case of the literacy provision, and 8 to 1 in the case of the residence provision, with only Justice Harlan dissenting on the later issue.

The crucial link in the reasoning of the Justices leading to the strong majority in favor of the residence aspect of the case was their view that the provision was a valid exercise of the power of Congress under the necessary and proper clause of the Constitution to protect the constitutional right to change one's residence and to travel freely from State to State, a right that had been clearly reaffirmed by the Supreme Court as recently as 1966, in its decision in United States v. Guest, 383 U.S. 745 (1966).

Similarly, the crucial link in the reasoning of the Justices leading to the unanimous decision upholding the literacy provision in the statute was their view that the provision was a valid exercise of the power of Congress to enforce the 15th amendment of the Constitution, which bars racial discrimination in voting.

The present proposal for a system of universal voter registration for Federal elections, involving action by Congress in the areas of both residence and registration as qualifications for voting, is easily supported under the literacy and residence rationales of Oregon against Mitchell, since it would be action by Congress to promote the right to travel and to end racial discrimination in voting. No substantial distinction can be drawn on the basis that the residence provisions in the Mitchell case applied only to presidential elections, whereas the proposed universal registration system would apply to all Federal elections. As Justice Stewart stated in discussing the residence provision in the Mitchell case, in an opinion joined by Chief Justice Burger and Justice Blackmun:

I have concluded that, while S. 202 applies only to presidential elections, nothing in the Constitution prevents Congress from protecting those who have moved from one state to another from disenfranchisement in any Federal election, whether congressional or presidential. 400 U.S. 112, 287.

Further, as I have indicated, the constitutional rationales supporting the literacy and residence provisions in the Mitchell case might easily support the extension of the universal voter registration proposal to State and local elections as well. A fortiori, however, the proposal is clearly valid for Federal elections as an exercise by Congress of its power under article I of the Constitution to regulate such elections, and I urge the Senate to adopt it.

THE THREAT OF THE MILITARY-INDUSTRIAL COMPLEX OF THE SOVIET UNION

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, in a day when our so-called military-industrial complex is being debunked by liberal opinion makers, it is gratifying to note that some in our country still recognize the threat of the military-industrial complex of the Soviet Union.

An editorial entitled "The Crime of Unpreparedness" was published in the July 9 issue of the Greenville News of Greenville, S.C. The editorial states clearly what is at stake if we cut too deeply into our defense establishment.

I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Greenville (S.C.) News, July 9, 1971]

THE CRIME OF UNPREPAREDNESS

One of former President Eisenhower's most quoted public utterances is his farewell message warning against the "military-industrial complex" in America. It is a special favorite of the left and the peacenik element.

Less well known, because it is ignored by most major influence-makers, is another Eisenhower quote about the military establishment. It is this:

"Until war is eliminated from international relationships, unpreparedness for it is well nigh as criminal as war itself."

Given the current increasing emphasis on reducing military appropriations in favor of welfare state and other domestic items and the constant hammering away at the military-industrial complex, the country needs to examine the other side of the coin as presented in the second Ike quote.

Anybody who thinks for a minute that war has been eliminated from this earth is only deluding himself. He who argues that war is unthinkable is deluding others. Major warfare is a constant threat in the Middle East and along the Chinese-Siberian border. Events completely beyond the control of any American could lead to a conflagration which would engulf the entire world, including the United States.

Only the most naive could ignore the fact that this nation's potential enemies possess and constantly improve a vast military-industrial complex. The Soviet Union's expanding missile, air and naval power is undeniable.

Also undeniable is the Soviet Union's avowed aim to impose its system upon the entire world. That fact often is glossed over or ignored, even though Soviet leaders never miss an opportunity to emphasize their ultimate goal.

The surest way to involve the entire world in another war of unprecedented horror would be to allow the imperialist Soviets to believe they could win a military conflict with the non-Communist nations.

That, of course, would happen should the defense establishment—the military-industrial complex, if you please—of the United States be weakened sufficiently.

While there is need to reduce considerable waste in defense spending and to ride herd over defense contracts, the greatest danger this country and the world faces is the threat of cutting too deeply into America's defense program. Parts of it, the Navy for instance, is in dire need of modernization at considerable cost.

As President Eisenhower said, failure to guard against war by refusing to keep well prepared for war, would be a heinous crime.

THE PERILS OF COEXISTENCE WITH COMMUNISM

Mr. ALLEN. Mr. President, events of the past few weeks in the area of diplomatic relations with Communist nations suggest a dramatic reversal of this Nation's foreign policy as it relates to international communism.

I am very much concerned that we not become mesmerized by rhetoric in support of the goals of detente and rapprochement, as desirable as they may seem. I hope, too, that the unquestioned desire on the part of the American people for peace will not blind us to realities concerning the nature and objectives of our adversary. World peace is a highly commendable goal—but not peace purchased at any price or peace achieved by any means.

Mr. President, in view of the rapidity of reversals of foreign policies, and in view of the worldwide implications of these changes, it might be helpful to refresh our memories concerning certain basic Marxist-Leninist tenets which have not changed.

Mr. President, in this connection, the July 1971, issue of the American Bar Association Journal contains an article by Charles T. Baroch entitled "The Brezhnev Doctrine." In the process of analyzing this doctrine and its implications, Mr. Baroch calls attention to the meaning of "the law of peaceful coexistence" as conceived by Communist jurists who describe coexistence as—

A specific form of class struggle between socialism and capitalism in the international arena. . . . Peaceful coexistence between the two systems does not exclude revolutions in the form of armed uprisings and just national liberation wars against imperialist oppression, which occur within the capitalist system.

Mr. Baroch is eminently qualified to write on these subjects. He is a scholar in residence for the American Bar Association's Standing Committee on Education About Communism and its Contrast With Liberty Under Law. He received a J.D. degree from Charles University Law School, Prague, Czechoslovakia, and M.A. and Ph. D. degrees from Harvard where he served as Research Fellow, Russian Research Center for 5 years.

Mr. President, Mr. Baroch has rendered a timely and most useful service in reminding us of certain Marxist-Leninist tenets and a world view shaped by these tenets, which is:

A world engulfed in an irreconcilable confrontation between the two antagonistic socioeconomic systems—capitalism and socialism—which is bound to end with a revolutionary transformation of capitalist society according to Marxist-Leninist tenets.

To this supranational revolutionary end everything is subordinated, including interests of whole nations (their sovereignty, equality, independence, etc.) as well as the interests of individuals, irrespective of whether they are part of the capitalist or socialist system.

Mr. President, I commend Mr. Baroch's article as worthy of thoughtful consideration of Members of the Senate and ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE BREZHNEV DOCTRINE

(By Charles T. Baroch)

More than two years ago the non-Communist world was shocked by the ruthless intervention of Warsaw Pact armed forces in the Czechoslovak Socialist Republic. The alleged purpose of the intervention was "to defend the socialist character" of a member of the world socialist system and its "socialist achievements".

The Warsaw Pact countries, especially the U.S.S.R., were accused, even by some Communists, of having violated Czechoslovak sovereignty and right of self-determination. Non-Communist reaction was well summed up by the indignant editorial in The New York Times of September 28, 1968, in which the name "Brezhnev Doctrine" may have been coined:

The latest Kremlin attempt to justify the invasion of Czechoslovakia is further indication of Stalinism ascendant in Moscow.

The earlier attempt to claim a status of semi-legality on the basis of a supposed invitation to the invaders from high Czechoslovak Government and Communist party leaders has apparently been discarded. Instead, Pravda now enunciates what must be called the Brezhnev doctrine, though the same thinking was manifest in the brutal repression of Hungarian freedom in 1956. The core of this doctrine is the assertion that Communist-ruled states enjoy neither genuine sovereignty nor genuine rights of territorial integrity, that the Soviet Union may at any time it deems proper send troops into any such states in order to pressure Communist rule.

What permits the Soviet Union to issue and even to implement such doctrine is, of course, Soviet military power. This reliance on force and contempt for law must raise fears among others that some day Moscow will decide that the sovereignty and territorial integrity of non-Communist nations is also being interpreted too abstractly and without due attention to class principles.

Questions arise as to the origin and scope of this allegedly new doctrine. It seems that the editorialist who coined the term, which has become an international household word, had in mind an analogy with certain American policy pronouncements now, with the acquiescence of other states, part of customary international law. Analogy with the most famous of these, the Monroe Doctrine, is very tempting, but, as I hope to demonstrate, despite superficial similarity, the so-called Brezhnev Doctrine is precisely its opposite in every respect.

There are three fundamental problems regarding the Brezhnev Doctrine: (1) Can it be attributed to Brezhnev? (2) What is its relation to international law? and (3) What are its real content and implications?

PERSONAL DECISIONMAKING BY COMMUNIST LEADERS IS MINIMAL

Certain aspects revealing a conventional, narrow understanding of the Communist world outlook are usually stressed by authors considering the Brezhnev Doctrine. It is assumed that the Secretary General of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union (C.P.S.U.), with the approval of the Politburo, formulated a new doctrine of the limited sovereignty of a member of the socialist system of states. Yet, there is in Communist-controlled states very little personal decision making by individual leaders, however exalted their positions. The "fraternal assistance" to Czechoslovakia was a vital policy decision of the C.P.S.U. Politburo based on evaluation of the global situation and recommendations by several departments of the C.P.S.U. Central Committee apparatus, of which the present Secretary General is a product. He therefore hardly deserves to be honored as the doctrine's originator.

There is the widespread conviction, also, that this doctrine represents a new foreign policy formula or, at least, a revival of policy discarded after Stalin's death. It is enough, however, to consult earlier Communist documents to see the fallacy of this view.

THE 1957 DECLARATION REAFFIRMS BASIC MARXIST-LENINIST TENET

In 1957, for instance, following the suppression of Polish and East German unrest and the Hungarian uprising of the year before, the ruling Communist Parties of the twelve socialist countries met in Moscow to define the Communist co-ordinated policy for the later 1950s and 1960s. They sought to outline basic rules of conduct to avoid the pitfalls of mechanical copying of C.P.S.U. methods (the so-called dogmatism) and, what was considered even more dangerous, of revisionism of Marxist-Leninist tenets or right-wing opportunism. Their declaration stated:

In our epoch, world development is determined by the course and results of the confrontation [soreznovniye] between two diametrically opposed social systems [socialism versus capitalism]. [In that confrontation] the strengthening of the unity and fraternal cooperation of the socialist [Communist-controlled] states and of the Communist and Workers' Parties of all countries and closing the ranks of the international working class, national-liberation and democratic movements take on special importance.

While asserting that "the socialist countries base their relations on the principles of complete equality, respect for territorial integrity, state independence and sovereignty as well as non-interference", the declaration emphasizes that, however important, these principles "do not exhaust the essence of their relations". (Emphasis added.) Fraternal, mutual assistance is an integral part of these relations and "finds its expression in the principle of socialist internationalism," which has thus been elevated to a fundamental doctrine, superimposed on international law in socialist interstate relations.

In order to offset the dangers of revisionism, the twelve participating parties forcefully reaffirmed the correctness of the basic Marxist-Leninist tenet that "the processes of the socialist revolution and socialist construction are governed by a number of basic 'laws,' applicable in all countries embarking on the socialist path."¹ Their declaration then lists these generally valid principles and rules of conduct binding on all Communist Parties, ruling or nonruling alike:

1. Leadership of the toiling masses by the working class, whose vanguard is the Marxist-Leninist Party, in bringing about a proletarian revolution in one form or another [either by peaceful or violent (civil war) means] and in establishing some form of the dictatorship of the proletariat;
2. Alliance of the working class with the bulk of the peasantry and other strata of the toilers;
3. Abolition of capitalist ownership and establishment of public ownership of the basic means of production;
4. Gradual socialist reorganization [collectivization] of agriculture;
5. Planned development of the economy with the aim of building socialism and communism;
6. Completion of a socialist revolution in the sphere of ideology and culture and formation of numerous intelligentsia devoted to the working class, the toilers and the cause of the socialism;

Footnotes at end of article.

7. Elimination of national oppression and the establishment of equality and fraternal friendship among people;

8. Defense of the achievements of socialism (emphasis added) against encroachments of external and internal enemies; solidarity of the working class of a given country with the working class of other countries—proletarian internationalism.

Two observations should be made with regard to the 1957 declaration. The Soviet delegation to the 1957 conference was headed by the then First Secretary of the C.P.S.U. Nikita S. Khrushchev, who, for all his reputation as promoter of peaceful coexistence, in 1956, as will be remembered, had given fraternal military assistance to orthodox Hungarian Communists led by Janos Kadar in their effort to preserve socialist achievements in that country.

Also, the same basic rules for Communist conduct defined in the 1957 declaration are quoted, as we shall see, in Brezhnev's arguments to justify the 1968 Warsaw Pact occupation of Czechoslovakia. A constantly deteriorating situation (from a Communist viewpoint) had developed there, with the local Communist Party in disarray and losing its total control (dictatorship) over the state,² resembling the 1956 Hungarian crisis.

In the view of the Warsaw Pact governments this situation fully justified armed intervention, aimed at restoring the Communist Party power monopoly. The non-Communist world, however, branded it as "contrary to every elementary rule of international law, to say nothing of the UN Charter."³

It is of major interest, therefore, to look next into the Communist attitude toward these elementary rules of international law, which are essential for normal intercourse among states. Since legal norms are basically rules and guidelines of conduct, whether of individuals or states, the importance of understanding the Soviet legal system and its underlying philosophy cannot be overemphasized in our search for communist policy motivation. Secretary of State William P. Rogers summed it up very well when as Attorney General he wrote in this Journal:

"When we talk about competing with International Communism in the realm of ideas, we are talking in large measure about the ideas which are the basis of our legal system."⁴

The so-called Brezhnev Doctrine has often been qualified in the non-Communist world as a doctrine of limited sovereignty, applicable only to a socialist state. What, briefly, is the Communist concept of state sovereignty within the international law context?

STATE CONCEPT DIFFERS FROM TRADITIONAL NOTIONS

The state concept—and sovereignty is an important attribute of the state—as defined in the Marxist-Leninist theory of state and law differs substantially from traditional notions. The theory of the origin, nature and aims of the state was formulated by Lenin, a lawyer by education, who relied heavily on Frederick Engels's work, The Origin of the Family, Private Property and the State. As is well known, Engels tied the state's origin to the appearance on the historical scene of private ownership of the means of production and the resulting split of society into antagonistic classes. The state emerged, and continued to exist, as an organ of class rule (slave-owners over slaves, feudal lords over serfs).

At present, Marxist-Leninist theory distinguishes between two basic forms of class society; in one the classes are hostile and antagonistic towards each other and are engaged in bitter class conflict (bourgeoisie vs.

date certain for our total withdrawal, and contrast that with the alternatives that seem to be pursued by the administration.

With the President's dramatic announcement about his forthcoming trip to China, there has been much speculation about the future of our involvement in Indochina.

My conclusion is that it is now all the more imperative for Congress to legislate a date for our total military withdrawal. In my judgment, such an action, as advocated by these experts, would be a momentous step in preparing the climate for the President's journey of peace to the People's Republic of China.

I ask unanimous consent that this article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WHAT CHANCE IS "REASONABLE" IN VIETNAM?
(By Leslie H. Gelb and Morton H. Halperin)

With presidential adviser Henry A. Kissinger coming home from a "fact-finding" trip to Saigon and Paris, the Nixon administration is in the midst of yet another reappraisal of American Vietnam policy. The Pentagon papers indicate that such reevaluations are episodic. As in the past, the public can only be dimly aware of what options are being seriously debated. The President's choice involves as much what he decides to tell the American people as what he decides to do.

We believe that only an unambiguous public gesture can now end the divisions in our country. The Senate for the first time has gone on record in favor of a complete withdrawal within nine months. The publication of the Pentagon papers has intensified the debate about governmental credibility. And, in the midst of this, the Vietcong on July 1 put forward another in a long line of peace proposals.

This new seven-point proposal, like its predecessors, is a construct of Marxist rhetoric and Talmudic precision. The Vietnamese Communists use words very carefully to state their position in a way that raises hopes without giving anything away. They present a familiar list of moral imperatives that the United States "must" do in order to bring peace to Vietnam: ending "Vietnamization," dismantling all bases, withdrawing "all troops, military personnel, weapons, war materials," bring about a coalition government.

But in the following paragraph, which enunciates their conditions for action, as distinguished from the moral imperatives, they simply state: "If the U.S. sets a terminal date for the withdrawal from South Vietnam in 1971 of the totality of U.S. forces [and Allied forces], the parties will at the same time agree on" 1) safe withdrawal and 2) the release of American POWs, beginning and ending with the withdrawal of U.S. forces.

The message seems to be this: if we set a 1971 terminal date, there will be a cease-fire against American forces, a concurrent release of prisoners, and ostensibly no prohibitions on future American military and economic assistance to the Saigon regime. This interpretation is supported by North Vietnam's Le Duc Tho in his press interview of July 6.

We cannot be certain that this is really Hanoi's meaning. In the past, when we asked them what such and such a phrase meant, they only would say that we should look at the totality of their proposal. Thus we can only learn what they mean by putting forward a concrete proposal of our own which includes a terminal date for our presence and simultaneous release of prisoners.

Of course, if release of our POWs alone were our basic goal, the President would have every reason to accept the Hanoi position. But the real issue is, as it has always been, how important a non-Communist Vietnam is to American security. In this regard, everything that the President has said indicates that his Vietnam policy is not much different from that of each of his post-World War II predecessors. His stated goal is, as their goal was, a non-Communist South Vietnam. For President Truman, that meant beginning a program of military assistance to enable the French to fight the Vietminh. For President Eisenhower, it meant massive aid totaling 80 percent of the French effort in 1954 and, after the Geneva Conference, the introduction of an American military mission. For President Kennedy, it meant sending 15,000 American advisers to Vietnam and meddling in South Vietnamese domestic politics. For President Johnson, it meant Americanization of the war. For President Nixon, it is Vietnamization with phased withdrawal of American troops, along with invasions of Laos and Cambodia. The American policy in Vietnam is now described by President Nixon as assuring a "reasonable chance" for survival of the Saigon government. The difficulty is not with the phrase but with what meaning it is given. In fact, "reasonable chance" reasonably defined could provide a basis for uniting the American people.

So far, however, "reasonable chance" seems to add up to an ambiguous holding action: it has meant withdrawing most of the American forces in order to cut American casualties and costs, thereby, the President hopes, maintaining domestic support for the war. It has meant withdrawing slowly enough with hawkish enough rhetoric to reduce the chances of what the President has called "a nightmare of recrimination"—the right-wing reaction.

It seems to portend keeping two American residual forces in the battle as long as necessary: one on the ground in Vietnam providing assistance to the South Vietnamese and defending itself, and the other in Thailand and offshore on carriers conducting bombing raids throughout Indochina. It surely will mean continuing large-scale military and economic assistance to the South Vietnamese government.

While these actions can be interpreted in various ways, they are consistent with the notion that the President is doing everything that our domestic politics will permit to support the current Saigon government for the indefinite future.

Many would argue that we have long since given the Saigon government a "reasonable chance." We have fought their war for them for six years, killing many of the best enemy troops. At least for the past three years, we have given top priority to the equipping and training of South Vietnamese forces. The Saigon government has an army larger than its opponents, and it can draw ample recruits from the population under its control. These facts do not mean that the Saigon government would survive a complete American withdrawal. The simple truth is that we do not understand much more about South Vietnam today than we did in 1946, and we just do not know whether the Saigon government can survive or not.

President Nixon is really asking for continued American support for the war—for what everyone, including the President himself, seems to concede is only a marginal improvement of an uncertain chance that the current Saigon government will indeed be able to survive.

What the President hopes to gain is surely more than overbalanced by what he risks in continuing the war.

First, whatever Hanoi's current terms are, they are almost certain to increase as the size of our force diminishes. When 50,000 or fewer American troops are left in South Vietnam, Hanoi might demand that the United States also cease aid to Saigon and perhaps even change that government in return for the release of the prisoners.

A second risk is that if Hanoi does step up military pressure against this shrunken American force, the President might feel that he had no alternative than to respond by what he has called "decisive escalation" against North Vietnam. Most observers would say that the President simply cannot afford the domestic political repercussions of escalation now. But most of them were saying that before Laos and Cambodia. Indeed, most U.S. escalations of the war were preceded by predictions that they would not occur.

Beyond these two risks lies a third: namely, the risk of breaking the fragile link of trust between the President and the people. Presidents always want to keep open their options and retain their flexibility. But when the issue is Vietnam today, the President's desire for ambiguity must give way to the public's right to clarity.

President Nixon seems prepared to run these risks for two reasons. He still believes what most Southeast Asian specialists, including those within the government, have long since ceased to believe: that prospects for a "generation of peace" depends on the outcome in Vietnam.

The president also fears the growth of radicalism at home. Such domestic reaction is indeed something to worry about. The political left has started calling for war crimes trials. Their goal seems to be to establish wide-ranging individual, if not national, guilt. The Calley trial sparked the political right. Their goal will be to find out who is to blame for America's not winning this war. This emerging "scapegoatism" is frightening. President Nixon is on the mark here.

It is now the President's obligation to unite the country by stating an unambiguous policy. The new NLF proposal opens the way for doing so by apparently allowing the President to define "reasonable chance" as an American withdrawal with the Saigon government free to receive American military and economic aid. If President Nixon were to define "reasonable chance" in these terms, few here would quarrel with that decision, and it would almost certainly open the way at last to an end to our military involvement in Indochina.

It may well be the only way to give ourselves—these United States—a reasonable chance.

CAMPAIGN REFORM

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, several days ago, the distinguished Republican leader (Mr. SCOTT) placed in the RECORD an itemized account of all outstanding debts and negotiated settlements associated with the last few election campaigns. This list set out in detail "who owes how much to whom and for how long."

If campaign reform is to mean anything at all, it certainly should mean that no candidate is entitled to a special advantage over his opponent. As the ranking Republican member of the Committee on Rules and Administration, I supported Senator SCOTT's amendment prohibiting the extension of unsecured credit to candidates by certain businesses because I felt that the amendment put everyone on notice that no one is entitled to a free ride.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD several news accounts pertaining to Senator SCOTT's investigation and his amendment.

There being no objection, the items were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Baltimore Sun, July 24, 1971]
WHEN THE CANDIDATES FLY NOW, NOBODY BOthers TO PAY LATER

WASHINGTON.—Airlines are stuck with over $2.1 million in unpaid debts run up by political candidates and their campaign organizations. Telephone companies have nearly $400,000 in similar unpaid bills.

In addition to the Democratic and Republican National Committees, debtors listed include President Nixon, the late Robert F. Kennedy, Senator Hubert H. Humphrey (D., Minn.) and former Senator Eugene J. McCarthy (D., Minn.).

The Senate GOP leader, Hugh Scott, put the figures in the Congressional Record yesterday in urging adoption of an election-reform bill amendment to curb political deadbeats.

"This business of trying to run political campaigns on the cuff is distinctly unfair and places a burden which not only should not be on the companies but is actually forcing them into making involuntary and illegal contributions," the Pennsylvanian told the Senate.

In talking with newsmen he jibed at Mr. McCarthy, who he said apparently is going to run for President again, as one "who doesn't run a shirt-sleeve campaign but one on the cuff."

Examination of the documents Mr. Scott put on record showed that American Airlines alone reported that as of last April 30 it had outstanding debts of $1,337,834 incurred by candidates for federal office from 1962 on.

LISTING OF DEBTS

Here is the list it gave of candidates or political organizations and the amount owed by each:

Republican National Finance Committee, $151,871; Richard M. Nixon, $69,376; National Democratic Committee, $426,833; Robert F. Kennedy, $415,120; Hubert H. Humphrey, $138,762, and McCarthy for President, $135,872.

R. M. Bressler, vice president and treasurer of the airline, said in a letter to the Civil Aeronautics Board that because of "the sub-standard credit relations" it has experienced with candidates, it now is asking for personal guarantees in all cases.

WRITE-OFFS, SETTLEMENTS

Trans-World Airlines, in a June 2 report to the Civil Aeronautics Board, said its outstanding accounts showed $221,519 owed by United Democrats for Humphrey, $25,091 for a Humphrey charter, and $13,196 by the GOP National Committee.

Trans World also reported that on February 24, 1969, it had written off $6,867 by McCarthy for President, and on November 14, 1968, had settled for $9,485 a debt of $16,352 owed by McCarthy for President.

Other airlines also reported unpaid campaign debts, as did A.T.&T., Western Union and General Telephone and Electronics. An itemization of unpaid telephone bills covered page after page.

An unpaid Kennedy for President account totaling $30,690 was reported as settled in July 1969 for $15,395.

"LARGE DEBTS . . . NO MONEY"

Johnson Flying Service, Inc., of Missoula, Mont., reported that still unpaid is a $2,910 bill incurred on September 20, 1968, by Mr. Humphrey and charged to the Democratic National Committee.

The company said it had tried to collect but "they state that they cannot pay as they have a large quantity of debts and no money."

Mr. Scott's amendment to the election reform bill would prohibit extension of unsecured credit to candidates for federal office by airlines, telephone companies and other industries regulated by the government.

He previously had requested the General Accounting Office to compile a report on all outstanding debts of candidates to such companies, along with any negotiated settlements.

NEARLY COMPLETE

Mr. Scott said the report is nearly complete and reveals "totally unacceptable campaign practices by both political parties not to mention the federal common carriers themselves."

Corporate contributions to political campaigns are forbidden by law, but Mr. Scott said that if a candidate fails to pay his bills, he has in effect received an involuntary contribution.

[From the Washington Post, July 24, 1971]

SCOTT ASKS CAMPAIGN CREDIT BAN

Senate Republican Leader Hugh Scott yesterday proposed forbidding political candidates to put telephone, telegram, travel and similar campaign expenses on the cuff.

Scott conceded his move, proposed as an amendment to a pending bill to limit campaign advertising expenses, was aimed at Democratic presidential contenders.

"Isn't that the name of the game?" he asked newsmen with a grin.

Scott's amendment would bar certain federally regulated industries such as airlines, telephone companies and the like, from extending "unsecured credit" to political candidates—in other words, no unlimited charge accounts.

He said both parties and their candidates still have enormous bills outstanding from previous campaigns, such as $208,000 owed by the Democrats and $112,000 by the Republicans to Eastern Airlines alone.

Scott said the worst offender is former Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy (D-Minn.), an unsuccessful contender for the 1968 Democratic presidential nomination who it is said will enter next year's primaries in another bid for the White House.

Scott said McCarthy still owes $475,000 to just one telephone company from his 1968 effort.

"He favors everything except paying his bills," Scott said. "McCarthy doesn't run a shirt-sleeve campaign; everything is on the cuff."

He said there are also thousands of dollars in bills still unpaid from the 1968 campaign of the late Sen. Robert F. Kennedy (D-N.Y.) for the presidential nomination, including one of $414,000 to American Airlines.

Scott put a lengthy list into the Congressional Record of what he said were documented unpaid campaign debts for both parties and their candidates.

The documents, in the form of replies from officials of affected companies to requests of the Civil Aeronautics Board and the Federal Communications Commission, showed that even President Nixon had whopped unpaid bills from his 1968 campaign.

American Airlines reported its balance due from Richard M. Nixon as of April 30 this year of $69,376—$2,666 left over from the election year and $66,710 incurred in 1969. United Airlines reported the Nixon-Agnew campaign still owes them $71,180.

American also reported an unpaid balance for Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey (D-Minn.), Nixon's 1968 opponent, of $138,762; United said the Humphrey-Muskie ticket is indebted to them for $79,083.

Several officials said they have written off some of the campaign debts as uncollectable. R. M. Bressler, vice president and treasurer of American, said "We now ask for personal guarantees in all cases involving individual candidates and can report we have declined the applications of at least two well-known candidates in the last year where guarantees have not been forthcoming."

SCOTT HITS 1968 AIR TRAVEL, PHONE DEBTS

(By James Doyle)

Senate Minority Leader Hugh Scott, R-Pa., disclosed today that inquiries to government regulatory commissions had revealed that Democratic and Republican political candidates owe more than $2.1 million in outstanding airline bills and nearly $400,000 in outstanding telephone bills.

Scott submitted an amendment to the proposed Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971 to forbid the granting of unsecured credit by the transportation and communications industries.

Scott said his amendment would permit the candidates to use credit cards, as they do now, but would prohibit the companies from issuing cards if the candidates' ability to pay was dubious.

Scott introduced information from a number of companies indicating that they were unable to require huge deposits from candidates because they could not pinpoint the volume of business the candidate would generate and were prohibited by non-discriminatory clauses in federal regulations from setting a high deposit figure.

Scott said that most of the outstanding debts belong to Democratic candidates and the Democratic National Committee.

His figures showed that as of April 30, 1971, the Democratic National Committee had an outstanding debt with American Airlines of $426,833, most of it left over from the 1968 campaign.

The Robert F. Kennedy political organization owed American Airlines $415,120; the Hubert Humphrey campaign owed $138,762, and the Eugene McCarthy campaign owed $135,872.

The Richard M. Nixon campaign owed American Airlines $69,376, and the Republican National Finance Committee owed American $151,871.

Almost all of these debts dated back to the 1968 presidential campaign.

Trans-World Airlines listed debts of $246,000 for the Humphrey campaign and $13,000 for the Republican National Committee.

A debt of $16,352.36, incurred by the McCarthy campaign in 1968 was settled for a payment of $9,485, TWA reported, and another McCarthy debt of $6,867.36, incurred in 1968, was written off Feb. 24, 1969.

TWA said political debts "are handled in the same manner as any other account" but did not explain the criteria for negotiating a lesser payment or completely writing off a debt.

United Air Lines listed an outstanding debt of $79,000 for the Humphrey-Muskie campaign and $75,000 for the Nixon-Agnew campaign. The Nixon campaign used United charters throughout 1968 and 1970.

An outstanding debt of $12,000 was listed by United for the Democratic National Committee with the notation "Incurred by R. F. Kennedy."

Eastern Airlines listed a Humphrey-Muskie debt of $208,000 and a Republican National Committee debt of $112,000.

Western Airlines said it had no outstanding campaign debts, but had written off a "ticket by mail" invoice for $376.00 incurred in May, 1968, by "Senator Ted Kennedy and a Mr. Burke," and written off in September 1969.

The American Telephone & Telegraph Co. submitted a breakdown for its various regional companies, and said it wrote off some debts "after significant collection effort has been made" without success.

The breakdown did not segregate Democratic and Republican candidates but it showed written-off debts of $2,200 in Pennsylvania, $6,000 for Pacific Bell Telephone, $7,700 for New England Telephone Co., $1,200 for Michigan Bell and $48,000 for Indiana all of it from the McCarthy for President campaign.

The McCarthy campaign had another $5,600 debt written off by Northwestern Bell.

The General Telephone Companies submitted similar figures showing a total indebtedness from political campaigns of $68,386.14.

Scott said the total outstanding debt to A.T. & T. was about $76,000 for the Democrats.

ECONOMIC RAMIFICATIONS OF VIETNAM WAR

Mr. HATFIELD. Mr. President, Mr. Harold Willens has been at the forefront of those who have reawakened the American business community to the serious economic ramifications of the war in Vietnam and our swollen military budget. Mr. Willens is convinced that the wide spectrum of American business cannot prosper in an economic climate that is soured by the war and distorted by inflated military expenditures. Recently he wrote a letter to President Nixon which outlines much of the thinking behind Mr. Willens' efforts. I ask unanimous consent that the letter and an Associated Press article about Mr. Willens be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the items were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

APRIL 28, 1971.

President RICHARD M. NIXON,
The White House,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I happened to be visiting South Vietnam when the world heard the welcome news that our ping pong players would be visiting China.

That same day an American soldier gave me a copy of The Serviceman's Daily Prayer, a leaflet which he said was widely distributed to our military personnel in Vietnam. The leaflet, bearing the address: Service Prayer, 2936 Bremen Street, Columbus, Ohio 43224, contains these words:

"Bestow your blessing on my country and on all who fight against the evils of Communism."

Yesterday Secretary of State Rogers, in speaking about Chinese-American relations, stressed political diversity as a fact of life we cannot change and should accept. Secretary Rogers is right and realistic. By initiating a thaw in Chinese-American relations you were right and realistic, Mr. President.

But your action and your Secretary of State's words are being undermined by the exposure of young American minds to the inflammatory words of the prayer leaflet and similarly irrational military propaganda revealed by the recent CBS documentary: "The Selling of the Pentagon."

Business has trained me to operate pragmatically. A pragmatic evaluation indicates that our foreign policy in recent years has been counterproductive. Our international behavior has operated against our self-interest. In fact we have inflicted severe damage upon ourselves through a foreign policy which has not kept abreast of changing realities.

One of these realities is the changing nature of communism which has itself fragmented into a number of political divergencies. Changes in communism have been matched by changes in capitalism. My first employer, were he to return from the dead, would be astonished by the "social benefits" we have adopted over the past 35 years.

It seems logical to assume and project a succession of further changes "in our direction" within communist countries if international tensions can gradually be eased. Public statements on various occasions reveal your awareness that such easing of tensions would greatly benefit our country.

The dangers and burdens of an endless arms race and misadventures like Vietnam dramatize the advantage of accepting prudent calculated risks for peace. We will be more likely to take such calculated risks if we begin to look upon peace as an incremental process rather than something which appears suddenly and full-blown. And above all we must recognize that the small specific steps in such an incremental process depend upon limited, tentative trust in the other side. That kind of trust can never be developed if our people look upon ideological competitors as mortal theological foes.

Successful businessmen are always conscious of competitors. But I have seen healthy companies destroyed by competitor-obsession. Perhaps there is a lesson to be learned from this, Mr. President. If we become obsessed by our ideological competitors we cannot do justice to improving and winning willing adherents for our own great "product"—free enterprise democracy.

I very much hope, Mr. President, that you will take steps to put an end to the distribution of this prayer leaflet and everything else which furthers the intermingling of theology with foreign policy. Because I realize how complex and massive a job that is, and because I feel the Congress should be willing to help you in this, I am sending copies of this letter to each Senator and Congressman.

Sincerely,

HAROLD WILLENS.

BUSINESSMAN'S PEACE ACTIONS GOT HATE MAIL

(By John Cunniff)

NEW YORK.—Four years ago Harold Willens, a Los Angeles executive and real estate developer, and Henry Niles, then chairman of Baltimore Life Insurance Co., formed Business Executives Move for Vietnam Peace (BEM).

"At that time," said Willens, "anybody who spoke out against the war was considered the enemy or a nut."

The hate mail flooded in Willens said, considerably faster than the membership applications. Willens and Niles felt, however, that the war was a mistake of historical magnitude, a military blunder, a political scandal.

BEM advocated that the businessman-citizen speak out on the issue. But its founders soon realized few establishment figures either cared or perhaps dared to. They disliked tangling with stockholders; they didn't want to rock the boat.

BEM drew memberships steadily, however. And then, since BEM was a one-issue organization, Willens in 1969 founded BEF, or Businessmen's Educational Fund, to fight on a broader scale what he felt was the militarization of America.

Willens, its chairman, devoted what his wife said was 101 per cent of his time to speeches, membership work, lobbying and, most recently, to a Vietnam trip. Results? Willens thinks he has succeeded to some extent.

In recent months the attitudes of some businessmen appear to have changed. Within the past year the heads of Bank of America, International Business Machines and E. I. du Pont have spoken against the war and blamed it for domestic problems.

Willens, a 57-year-old millionaire grandfather and former Marine was asked if he felt a major change really has occurred in the business attitude.

"I think the line of the pragmatist and the idealist are meeting," he replied. "Damn few businessmen think we are unpatriotic now. All of them relate inaction to the war, for example."

Do you really think you can end wars?

"Yes. Maybe there'll be little ones. But my feeling is that since we've always had wars it is no reason to extrapolate into the future. We changed the name of the game when technology developed the ultimate weapon."

Isn't that being overly idealistic?

"We have to get away from the fuzzy thinking that says wars are inevitable and that peace is a utopian concept. Either man or war is obsolete. We have to decide."

But why should businessmen try to take a leadership role?

"The businessman's role is critical because he thinks pragmatically. He knows how to build. Peace must be constructed. It is an incremental thing, like constructing a building by putting in the foundation, then the first story and so on. It is a step-by-step operation."

Won't demilitarization weaken the nation's security?

"The present direction is counterproductive to the best interests of the country. Escalation has brought us into disastrous wars, bled our resources and kept us from solving critical domestic problems that erode our strength."

"The other approach, to seek peace, is a calculated risk, such as you take in business. There may not be immediate success. The armaments race grew step by step. De-escalation can proceed in the same way."

It was suggested to Willens that many people feel business executives can only hurt their own particular cause by speaking out on this subject. This lit the Willens fuse.

"Self-interest tells the corporate executive he's got to get in there. The businessman must redefine the corporate and individual responsibility. He must redefine it because his company is dependent upon the nation's policies."

"In order to be responsible to the stockholders, the executive has to act in accordance with the new realities. He must realize that in fact he is doing a deep disservice to stockholders, because business can only thrive in a healthy economy."

"He can't hide in a paneled office. He cannot hide behind the corporate curtain and protect the interest of stockholders, his country and himself."

"I don't think the businessman's alibi is any better than others—than the clergyman who fears what his parishioners will say or the physician who fears his patients."

PAKISTAN: THE THING SPEAKS FOR ITSELF

Mr. SAXBE. Mr. President, in law there is a doctrine entitled Res Ipsa Loquitur, meaning "the thing speaks for itself." The pictures in both Time and Newsweek today graphically illustrate a tragedy of immense proportions. It is too bad that the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD cannot reprint these pictures.

For several weeks now I have called to the attention of my colleagues, through the RECORD, the dreadful fate of millions of refugees in East Pakistan. Senator CHURCH and I have introduced an amendment with 32 cosponsors to the Foreign Assistance Act which would suspend America's aiding and abetting this terrible crime. I plead with my colleagues to look at the photographs in these two magazines. Nothing more need be said; nothing more can be said.

I ask unanimous consent that some articles regarding Pakistan be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

BENGAL: THE MURDER OF A PEOPLE

It seemed a routine enough request. Assembling the young men of the village of Hалуughat in East Pakistan, a Pakistani Army major informed them that his wounded soldiers urgently needed blood. Would they be

At the request of Mr. HUGHES, the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON), the Senator from Utah (Mr. MOSS), and the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCHWEIKER) were added as cosponsors of S. 2217, a bill to provide a comprehensive Federal program for the prevention and treatment of drug abuse and drug dependence.

S. 2258

At the request of Mr. GRIFFIN, the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUE) was added as a cosponsor of S. 2258, the Motor Vehicle Air Pollution Control Acceleration Act.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 62

At the request of Mr. GRIFFIN, the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. INOUE) was added as a cosponsor of S. J. Res. 62, authorizing the display of the flags of the 50 States at the base of the Washington Monument.

ADDITIONAL COSPONSOR OF A RESOLUTION

S. RES. 158

Mr. BROOKE, Mr. President, through an unfortunate oversight the name of my distinguished colleague and good friend, the junior senator from Minnesota, was omitted as a cosponsor of the resolution which I submitted Tuesday regarding the Geneva Protocol.

Senator HUMPHREY has been a valuable and respected ally in the effort to reach an agreement on the form in which this treaty can be ratified by the United States.

I commend his efforts and look forward to his continuing cooperation; and I ask unanimous consent that Senator HUMPHREY's name be added as cosponsor of S. Res. 158.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. GRAVEL). Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENT NO. 342

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. SCOTT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to Amendment No. 308, proposed by Mr. PASTORE (for himself and others) to the bill (S. 382) to promote fair practices in the conduct of election campaigns for Federal political offices, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT NO. 344

UNIVERSAL VOTER REGISTRATION

Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. President, on behalf of Senator BAYH, Senator EAGLETON, Senator HARTKE, Senator MONDALE, Senator PELL, Senator PROXMIER, Senator WILLIAMS, and myself, I submit an amendment S. 382, the "Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971," and I ask that it lie on the table and be printed.

The details of the proposed amendment are described in my remarks on Monday, July 26, 1971, which appear beginning at page S27117 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for that day.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the amendment may be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the amendment was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 344

At the end of the bill add the following new title:

TITLE V—VOTER REGISTRATION

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 501. This title may be cited as the "Universal Voter Registration Act of 1971."

DECLARATION AND FINDINGS

SEC. 502. (a) The Congress hereby finds and declares that the administration of voter registration procedures by the various States as a precondition to voting in Federal elections:

(1) denies or abridges the constitutional right of citizens to vote in Federal elections;

(2) denies or abridges the constitutional right of citizens to enjoy free movement across States lines;

(3) denies or abridges the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, deprives them of due process of law, and denies them the equal protection of the laws, in violation of the fourteenth amendment;

(4) denies or abridges the right to vote on account of race or color in violation of the fifteenth amendment;

(5) denies or abridges the right to vote on account of sex in violation of the nineteenth amendment;

(6) denies or abridges the right to vote on account of age in violation of the twenty-sixth amendment;

(7) in some instances has the impermissible effect of denying citizens the right to vote because of the way they may vote; and

(8) does not bear a reasonable relationship to any compelling State interest in the conduct of Federal elections.

(b) Upon the basis of these findings, Congress hereby exercises its authority under section 4 and section 8 of article I of the Constitution, and the fourteenth, fifteenth, nineteenth, and twenty-sixth amendments thereto, and enacts this title.

ESTABLISHMENT OF OFFICE

SEC. 503. (a) There is hereby established in the Bureau of the Census a Universal Voter Registration Administration (hereafter referred to in this title "Administration"). The Administration shall be composed of an Administrator and two Associate Administrators, who may be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. No more than two members of the Administration shall be of the same political party.

(b) The Administration shall establish and administer a program of voter registration for voting in all Federal elections and shall, upon request, assist States in conducting registration for voting in State and local elections.

(c) Section 5316 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(131) Administrator and Associate Administrators, Universal Voter Registration Administration."

USE OF DATA PROCESSING

SEC. 504. The Administration shall establish one or more data processing centers in order to carry out its functions. Voter lists shall be compiled and maintained through the use of electronic data processing equipment in such a manner that a list of persons registered under this title in each of the units in which persons are registered to vote under State and local laws shall be readily available. The lists shall contain the name, address, zip code, party affiliation (if supplied), date of birth, and voting unit of each individual registered to vote under this title and such additional information as the Administration determines to be essential to the efficient operation of this title.

REGISTRATION

SEC. 505. (a) The Administration shall prepare and distribute registration forms for use by individuals who wish to register to vote under the provisions of this title, or who wish to change a previous registration. Such forms shall be of a type which permits visual scanning by electronic data processing equipment, shall contain appropriate places for the designation of the registrant's name, address, zip code, date of birth, and party affiliation, and may be in language other than English in such cases as the Administration deems appropriate.

(b) Such forms shall contain a statement that such individual is not disqualified from voting under State law by reason of conviction of a crime or mental incompetence, and such other information as the Administration determines to be essential to the efficient operation of this title. Such forms shall also require the signature of the individual seeking to register through the use of such forms and a statement of the penalty for fraudulent use of such forms. The signature of an individual on his form shall attest to the accuracy of the information contained thereon.

(c) The Administration shall enter into arrangements with the Postmaster General so that supplies of such forms shall be reasonably available free of charge in each post office, and shall make such other arrangements as it deems appropriate for the distribution of such forms, including their availability to groups engaged in voter registration. Such forms shall be mailed free of all postage including airmail to the Administration upon completion, and the Administration shall reimburse the Postal Service for the cost of such mail.

(d) Any individual who is a citizen, who is eighteen years of age or older (or who will attain such age on or before the date of the next Federal election held in the congressional district of State in which he registers), who is not disqualified from voting under State law by reason of conviction of a crime or mental incompetence, and who is registered under this title shall be eligible to vote in Federal elections held in the congressional district or State in which he is registered under this title. No other requirement or qualification shall be imposed by any State or political subdivision thereof on the right of such individual to vote in such election.

(e) The Administration is authorized to receive registration lists and other information with respect to eligible voters from State or local jurisdictions for inclusion in the registration lists prepared by the Administration under this title.

(f) Unless the Administration or a State or local jurisdiction removes a person's name from the list of registered voters because of his death or his disqualification from voting under State law by reason of conviction of a crime or mental incompetence, registration under this title in any State shall remain in effect for a period of time not less than four years, or such longer period as registration under State law in such State remains in effect.

(g) The Administration shall remove from its list of registered voters the name of any person who is found to be fraudulently or otherwise improperly registered or who, after registration, becomes disqualified to vote in the State or congressional district in which he is registered. If the Administration removes the name of any person from such list, it shall notify such person of such action by certified mail within one week of such action and the reason thereof.

(h) Any State or local jurisdiction which removes the name of any person from such list shall notify such person and the Administration of such action by certified mail within one week of such action. Such notice shall include the name and address of such person, and a statement of the reason for such action. The Attorney General is authorized and directed to institute in the name of the United States such actions against States or political subdivisions, including actions for injunctive relief, as he may determine to be necessary to implement the purposes of this subsection, and it shall be the duty of a judge designated to hear any such case to assign the case for hearing and determination thereof, and to cause the case to be in every way expedited.

REGISTRATION DATE

Sec. 506. An individual may register to vote in a Federal election under this title at any time until 30 days before the date of such election, or at such later date before such election as the Administration may determine.

NOTICE TO ELECTION OFFICIALS

Sec. 507. (a) Not later than 30 days prior to the date of any Federal election, the Administration shall furnish to the appropriate election officials of the State or local jurisdiction in which an election is to be held, a list of individuals, by precinct or other similar voting unit, registered under this title to vote in such election within the congressional district or State in which the election is to be held. No person whose name appears on such list shall be denied the right to vote in such election, unless such name is removed from such list in accordance with the provisions of this title. The Administration is authorized to establish appropriate procedures to supplement the lists made available to States and local jurisdictions under this subsection.

(b) The Administration is authorized to establish appropriate procedures for individuals to verify their registration under this title.

(c) Prior to the date of any such election, the Administration shall inform individuals registered with it of the precinct or other voting unit in which they are registered to vote.

STATE REGISTRATION

Sec. 508. (a) Nothing in this title shall interfere with any voter registration procedure conducted by any State with respect to voting in State or local elections.

(b) Any individual registered to vote under any State voter registration procedure, who is a citizen of the United States, who is eighteen years of age or older (or who will attain such age on or before the date of the next Federal election to be held in the congressional district or State in which he registers), and who is not disqualified from voting under State law by reason of conviction of a crime or mental incompetence, shall also be eligible to vote in any Federal election held in such district or State, whether registered under this title or not.

(c) Any State which determines by law that it wishes to use voting registration lists compiled under this title as evidence of registration to vote in State or local elections shall be furnished such lists no later than 30 days prior to any such election. Any State which so determines may not remove the name of any individual from such lists with respect to any such election nor deny to any individual whose name appears on such lists the right to vote in any such election, except in accordance with the provisions of this title.

REPORTS FROM STATES

Sec. 509. The Administration is authorized to request from each State periodic reports of the names and addresses of individual 18 years of age or older who have died in such State. The Administration is also authorized to request from appropriate State or Federal agencies periodic reports of the names and addresses of persons disqualified from voting under State law by reason of conviction of a crime or mental incompetence.

REGISTRATION INFORMATION

Sec. 510. The Administration shall undertake, through the use of broadcast and non-broadcast communications media and such other means as the Administration deems appropriate, to inform potential voters of their eligibility to register to vote in Federal elections under the provisions of this title.

PENALTIES

Sec. 511. (a) Whoever knowingly or willfully gives false information as to his name, address, residence, age or other information for the purpose of establishing his eligibility to register or vote under this title, or conspires with another individual for the purpose of encouraging his false registration to vote or illegal voting, or pays or offers to pay or accepts payment either for registration to vote or for voting shall be fined not more than $10,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(b) Any person who deprives, or attempts to deprive, any other person of any right under this title shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

(c) The provisions of section 1001 of title 18, United States Code, are made applicable to the registration form promulgated under section 505.

Sec. 512. (a) No information provided by or in connection with any person under this title shall be made available by the Administration to any other Federal agency or for any commercial activity. No such information shall be made available by the Administration to any agency of any State or local jurisdiction except for the purpose of carrying out functions directly related to the provisions of this title.

(b) The Administration is authorized to adopt regulations for the enforcement of this section.

(c) Any person who violates this section or regulations adopted thereunder shall be fined not more than $5,000, or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

OTHER FEDERAL VOTER REGISTRATION

Sec. 513. This title shall not affect the provisions of the Federal Voting Assistance Act of 1955. Persons eligible to use the form and procedures provided under such Act may register under this title.

DEFINITIONS

Sec. 514. As used in this title the term—

(a) "Federal election" means any primary, general or special election held for the election of a Federal officer, including an election held for the selection of delegates to a national nominating convention or to a caucus for such selection, and a primary election held for the expression of a preference for the nomination of persons for election to the office of President; containing views similar to those you expressed. Although we have not had an opportunity to fully evaluate all of the comments, it appears that the proposed airport certification rule, as proposed, will be modified in certain areas. I assure you that all comments relative to implementing the Airport and Airway Development Act will be seriously considered prior to issuing a final rule.

Sincerely,

Administrator.

I believe that this bill will meet the problems posed by the new certification requirements. It will help the airports of Nebraska meet the requirements, and, therefore, I am pleased to cosponsor it.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971—AMENDMENTS

AMENDMENTS NOS. 348 THROUGH 350

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and Senator BAKER I send three amendments to amendment 308 to S. 382 to the desk and ask that they be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, all of us should be aware of the fact that the American people are sick and tired of weak and ineffective laws regulating Federal elections. I am confident that this Congress will restore the confidence of the American people in our Government by enacting the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971.

Senator BAKER and I worked long and hard with many of our colleagues on the Senate Commerce Committee to strengthen S. 382 as originally introduced. Together with our colleagues on that committee we made substantial progress toward drafting an effective and meaningful piece of legislation. In all candor we were not completely successful in our efforts to develop a strong bill because some of our colleagues on the Commerce Committee favored tabling all amendments suggested to the bill not relating to title I.

As the ranking Republican member of the Committee on Rules and Administration, I continued the fight to see that the legislation was considered in its entirety. Other members on the Rules Committee agreed with me and we succeeded in developing a strong and sound approach to the whole subject of political campaigns for elections to Federal offices. The bill reported by the Senate Rules Committee completely overhauls the laws regulating campaigns for Federal office. It is a strong, no-nonsense bill that will restore the faith of the American public in the elections process.

It is a tough bill imposing penalties on political candidates who do not strictly adhere to its requirements.

It closes every single loophole in existing law.

The unregulated District of Columbia Political Committee is dead.

The myth that a candidate is not responsible for other committees which happen to support him is ended.

Mr. President, enactment of S. 382 will completely change political campaigns in America. The people will know all the facts about campaign financing. Moreover, candidates will be strictly limited on the amount of money they can spend on the communications media.

I am disappointed that apparently partisan political considerations have led to the introduction of amendment 308 as a complete substitute for the excellent piece of legislation reported by the Senate Rules Committee.

Passage of amendment 308 as it is now structured would again substitute a weak bill for a strong bill.

It would substitute an incumbents bill for a fair bill.

It would encourage the creation of unpaid debts.

It would make it more difficult for the American people to know where political committees get their money from and how they spend it.

It would perpetuate the lack of confidence of the American people in our election process by refusing to give the enforcement authority to an Independent Federal Elections Commission.

The amendments being introduced by Senator BAKER and me to amendment 308 represent an attempt to restore some of the provisions contained in the bill reported by the Senate Rules Committee.

First, we believe that the Rules Committee was correct in exempting all Federal candidates from the equal time requirements in section 315(a) of the Federal Communications Act. Witness after witness testified that the equal time requirements of section 315(a) are in effect "no time offered requirements", because broadcasters are inhibited from giving free time to any candidate.

Amendment 308 by exempting presidential and vice presidential campaigns from equal time requirements recognizes the fact that section 315 has not worked in the interest of having an informed democracy. However, by not including all candidates for Federal office under the exemption, amendment 308 merely represents an effort to provide special protection for every incumbent Senator and Congressman. The American public deserves to expect more from this Congress than legislation designed to protect incumbents.

Our second amendment to amendment 308 would restore the interchangeability feature contained in the Rules Committee bill with respect to spending limitations. Again all the evidence warns against an arbitrary overstructuring of political campaigns by Congress unless Congress wants to deliberately increase the percentage of incumbents reelected to office. Is it not enough that since 1940 93 percent of all incumbents for Federal office have been reelected?

We have given ourselves the franking privilege.

We have name recognition in our States or congressional districts.

We have the ability to make news headlines by our stand on the issues and the way we vote.

Now amendment 308 attempts to give us a further advantage by placing separate but identical limitation on broadcast and nonbroadcast communications media. It in effect is implying that a campaign in New Hampshire, Maine or Wyoming is the same as a campaign in New York City, New Jersey, or California. Since campaigns in fact have very different requirements in different parts of the country, the Rules Committee correctly permitted the individual candidate to spend money on either broadcast or nonbroadcast communications media as long as he stayed within his overall limitations.

Our final amendment, Mr. President, restores the fair labeling provision contained in a Rules Committee bill.

Mr. President, disclosure of political contributions and expenditures is meaningless unless the American people are given the opportunity to easily obtain the facts. My amendment which was overwhelmingly adopted by the Rules Committee simply required political committees to place a notice on the material they used for soliciting contributions. That notice did two things.

First, it certified to the potential contributor that the political committee had complied with the Federal Disclosure Act. Second, it informed the potential contributor that he could purchase a copy of the report of contributions and expenditures from the Government Printing Office.

Mr. President, the American citizen should be entitled to this information. We should make certain the American citizen who wants to contribute to committees be given the opportunity to obtain the information about how the particular committee spends its money. I might point out, Mr. President, that long ago we protected stockholders in our Nation's businesses by requiring corporations to issue stockholders' reports. It is about time we afforded the same opportunity to those dedicated Americans who contribute money to political committees in the hopes that our democracy will more effectively work.

I support a number of other amendments to amendment 308 and I sincerely hope that when we get to consideration of this important bill we can amend amendment 308 so that it will reflect the same strength as the bill reported by the Rules Committee.

As a matter of fact, Mr. President, I am in hopes that we can further improve the Rules Committee bill by adopting an Independent Federal Elections Commission to make certain that the Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971 becomes a piece of legislation which is enforced with fairness, impartiality, and effectiveness.

There being no objection, the amendments were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EMERGENCY LOAN GUARANTEE ACT--AMENDMENT

AMENDMENT NO. 351

(Ordered to be printed to lie on the table.)

Mr. TAFT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 2308) to authorize emergency loan guarantees to major business enterprises.

PUBLIC WORKS APPROPRIATIONS, 1972--AMENDMENT

AMENDMENT NO. 352

Mr. INOUE. Mr. President, the Senate will consider on Saturday the bill containing appropriations for the Atomic Energy Commission. Contained in this measure are funds for a 5-megaton underground nuclear test, called Cannikin, to be detonated on Amchitka in the Aleutian Islands some time this fall. I am offering this amendment to postpone the use of these funds for the Cannikin test until May 31, 1972, because I do not believe that this test can be conducted with adequate assurances of safety not only for the environment but more importantly for the residents of the Pacific Basin.

In October of 1969, the Atomic Energy Commission detonated a 1-megaton nuclear test on Amchitka. Prior to that time, I became increasingly concerned that this test activity could trigger an earthquake which could cause a disastrous tidal wave or tsunami. In an attempt to evaluate all the available data on the possibility of triggering earthquakes as a result of a multimegaton explosion and the possible resulting destructive tsunamis, I have gathered and studied available information on this subject.

In the course of my investigation I learned that a panel of experts was appointed in 1968 by the President's Office of Science and Technology to evaluate the effects of multimegaton underground nuclear tests. One of their conclusions was that the need for a test of this nature should be compelling in light of the possible risks which could occur from its detonation. I believe that certain portions of the report bear repeating at length. This panel's report states:

The Panel is seriously concerned with the problem of earthquakes resulting from large-yield nuclear tests. Although the possibility that underground nuclear tests might initiate one or more earthquakes has been suggested in the past, new and significant evidence demonstrates that small earthquakes do actually occur both immediately after a large yield test explosion and in the following weeks. The largest of the observed associated aftershocks have been between one and two magnitudes less than the explosion itself. However, there does not now appear to be a basis for eliminating the possibility that a large test explosion might induce, either immediately or after a period of time, a severe earthquake of sufficiently large magnitude to cause serious damage well beyond the limits of the test site.

In fact the AEC's environmental impact statement acknowledges that the understanding of earthquake mechanisms is still developing and is not subject to exact calculations." In addition the AEC environmental impact statement also adds that "the possibility of Cannikin causing the premature release of a large quake cannot be ruled out."

It is acknowledged that the Alaska-Aleutian area is one of the most seismically active areas in the world. This area is prone to earthquakes and in the past 71 years, eight earthquakes of the magnitude of eight or more on the Richter scale have occurred. Further in 1970, 68 quakes alone have registered on the Richter scale and on Sunday, July 25, a quake registering 6.5 on the Richter scale took place in the Aleutians. I emphasize that the 68 earthquakes recorded in Alaska last year were only those earthquakes recorded on instruments. In addition, many earthquakes of lesser magnitude occur in unpopulated areas and are never recorded.

Let me emphasize that the Cannikin test is expected to be a multimegaton blast, equivalent to the force of nearly 5 million tons of TNT—that is approximately 250 times more powerful than the bomb dropped on Hiroshima. The AEC's experience with underground nuclear tests is with their Nevada test sites, an area much less active seismically than the Aleutians. In the face of the Atomic Energy Commission's own admission that the available knowledge of predicting seismic activity is still developing and other scientists' views that such nuclear tests could possibly trigger such seismic activity, it is clear that there are risks involved in the detonation of Cannikin.

As I have stated, a number of scientists believe that such an underground nuclear test can trigger earthquakes. As you are probably aware, tidal waves or tsunamis are principally caused by underground earthquakes with vertical ground movement. The Atomic Energy Commission's environmental impact statement characterizes the likelihood of Cannikin creating the risk of tsunamis as "negligible" and "highly unlikely." Frankly, this admission does little to allay the fears to the people living in the Pacific Rim. Hawaii has been devastated in the past by tidal waves. A 1946 earthquake in the Aleutians produced a tidal wave which took the lives of 159 men, women, in American policy make East Pakistan independence likely in two years or five years rather than 10 years? There was no definitive answer. But whether Bangla Desh comes to pass in two, five, or 10 years, its citizens are likely to have long—and not very fond—memories of America's role in their revolutionary war.

UNIVERSAL VOTER REGISTRATION FOR FEDERAL ELECTIONS—THE CONSTITUTIONAL BASIS

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, last Monday, in discussing my amendment—numbered 344—to S. 382, the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, I emphasized my view that there is ample constitutional justification for action by Congress to establish a program, to be carried out by the Census Bureau, for universal voter registration in Federal elections. See pages 27120–27121 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for Monday, July 26, 1971. The linch-pin of the constitutional basis for such action is Oregon v. Mitchell, 400 U.S. 112 (1970), in which the Supreme Court sustained the literacy, residency, and voting age provisions of the Voting Rights Amendments of 1970.

Recently, I have received a detailed legal memorandum supporting the power of Congress to regulate voter registration in Federal elections. The memorandum was prepared by Prof. Kenneth Guido of the University of Kentucky Law School, an expert in the constitutional law of voting rights and voting procedures. Professor Guido is a consultant to the voting-rights project of Common Cause, for whom the memorandum was prepared, and the memorandum was provided to me by Common Cause.

Mr. President, I believe the memorandum will be of interest to every Senator concerned with improving the voting participation of the American people, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the memorandum was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

POWER OF CONGRESS TO REGULATE VOTER REGISTRATION FOR FEDERAL ELECTIONS

(Written by Professor Kenneth Guido, University of Kentucky Law School; Consultant, Voting Rights Project, Common Cause; provided by Common Cause 2100 M Street, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20037)

The framers of the Constitution provided in Article I, Section 2 that members of the House of Representatives shall be elected by the people and that the voters shall have the "Qualifications requisite for Electors of the most numerous Branch of the State Legislature." The Seventeenth Amendment extended this to the election of Senators by the people who are to have the same qualifications as voters for members of the House of Representatives. Similarly, Article II, section 1 places the qualifications of Presidential electors under state authority. These provisions have been consistently interpreted to mean that now, as before enactment of the Civil War Amendments, the States have the authority to establish the qualifications for voters, to regulate the registration of voters, and to supervise elections. Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 162, 170 (1874); U.S. v. Reese, 92 U.S. 214, 217 (1876); McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U.S. 1, 39 (1892); Pope v. Williams, 192 U.S. 621, 632 (1902); Guinn v. U.S., 238 U.S.

347 (1914); Lassiter v. Northampton County Bd. of Elections, 360 U.S. 45, 50 (1959); Carlington v. Rash, 380 U.S. 89, 91 (1965); South Carolina v. Katzenbach, 383 U.S. 301, 325 (1966); Oregon v. Mitchell, 400 U.S. 112, 119 (1970).

But, this is only true in that states may enact legislation on the subject—as provided by section 2 of Article 1, the Seventeenth Amendment, and section 1 of Article II—that does not conflict with legislation enacted by Congress in exercise of its power to regulate federal elections under section 4 of Article 1 and its more general power under Article 1, section 8 "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers." See Ex parte Siebold, 100 U.S. 371 (1880) Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U.S. 651, 663, 664 (1884); Swafford v. Templeton, 185 U.S. 487 (1902); Wiley v. Sinkler, 179 U.S. 58, 64 (1900); U.S. v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299, 315 (1941) "It is not true, therefore, that electors for members of congress (or president) owe their right to vote to the state law, in any sense which makes the exercise of the right depend exclusively on the law of the state." Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U.S. 651, 663–64 (1884); accord, Baker v. Carr, 369 U.S. 186, 242–43 (1962).

THE HISTORY OF CONGRESSIONAL LEGISLATION

Historically, Congress has extensively regulated the conduct of federal elections under its constitutional authority. Almost immediately after the Constitution was ratified, legislation was passed by Congress. In 1792 Congress established the time for appointment, the number of presidential and vice presidential electors to which each state was entitled, and the manner in which they were to cast their ballots. Act of March 1, 1792; 1 Stat. 239; 3 U.S.C. § 1, 2, 10, 11, 14, and 15. And in 1804, Congress modified the manner of voting. Act of March 26, 1804, 2 Stat. 295; 3 U.S.C. § 8 and 9. Less than forty years later, in 1842, Congress enacted legislation which provided that candidates for the House of Representatives were to be selected from contiguous and compact districts, overturning a common state practice of electing representatives at large. See Act of June 25, 1842, c. 47, § 2; 5 Stat. 491; 2 U.S.C. § 3, expired by own limitation in 1929, Wood v. Broom, 287 U.S. 1. Congress in 1845 established procedures for the filling of vacancies to the electoral college and reappointment of electors if they fail to reach a decision on the day specified by earlier legislation. Act of 1845, c. 1; 5 Stat. 721; 3 U.S.C. § 3 and 4.

Congress, in 1851, enacted legislation regulating the time and manner for contesting an election of any member of the House of Representatives, including the time and manner of taking depositions and penalties for failure to testify. Act of Feb. 19, 1851, c. 11; 9 Stat. 568; 2 U.S.C. § 201 et seq.; superseded by P. L. 138; 83 Stat. 284; 2 U.S.C. § 381 et seq. And in 1865 Congress prohibited interference with the right to vote by any Army or Navy officer. Act of Feb. 25, 1865, c. 52, § 1, 13 Stat. 437; 42 U.S.C. 1972.

The first comprehensive package of legislation regulating federal elections was passed by Congress as part of the Reconstruction legislation right after the Civil War. This legislation, embodied in §§ 19–22 of the Act of May 31, 1870, 16 Stat. 254, and in the Act of June 19, 1872, 17 Stat. 347–349, made it unlawful to register falsely, to bribe a voter, to vote without a legal right, to make false returns, to interfere in any manner with officers of elections, and for any officer of an election to neglect any duty required of him by state or federal law. In addition, Congress authorized federal officers to register voters, and certify the results of elections, establishing complete federal control over federal elections. See U. S. v. Gradwell, 243 U.S. 476, 482 (1916).

Furthermore, Congress provided for the number and manner of apportionment of the House of Representatives, and required that all votes for representatives be by written or printed ballot. Act of Feb. 2, 1872, c. 11; 17 Stat. 28; 2 U.S.C. —; Act of June, 18, 1929, c. 28 § 22, 46 Stat. 26, §§ 2, 6, 7, 8, and 9. Section 2 was superseded by 2 U.S.C. § 2a. Smiley v. Holm, 285 U.S. 355 (1932).

Congress repealed most of the sections passed as a part of the Reconstruction legislation in 1894 (Act of Feb. 8, 1894, 28 Stat. 36), with the hope expressed in the Committee Report which accompanied the repeal that the enactment of state laws to "protect the voter and purify the ballot" would be extended to "every state in the union." H.R. Rep. No. 18, 53d Cong., 1st Sess., p. 7.

After the turn of the century, however, Congress again found it necessary to enact legislation to protect the right to vote in Federal elections. Congress, in 1909, made it a crime: (1) for any officer or member of the armed forces to station Army or Navy troops at the polls or attempt to set the qualifications for voters to cast their ballot, and (2) for anyone in the service of the United States to solicit, be solicited for, or to make any political campaign contribution. Act of March 4, 1909, ch. 321, 35 Stat. 1902, 1903, 38 U.S.C. §§ 241 et seq. Congress in 1911 provided for the manner of nomination and election of members of the House of Representatives between the date of the census and the date of reapportionment. Act of Aug. 8, 1911, c. 5, 37 Stat. 15, 2 U.S.C. §§ 4 and 5. And in 1914 Congress established the time for the election of Senators.

Congress in 1925 and 1939 broadened federal control over the federal electoral process by enacting a set of statutes, supplementing those passed in 1909, that imposed criminal penalties upon certain financial transactions designed to influence candidates or voters. An offer to make an expenditure of money, or the receipt thereof, and a promise of appointment by a candidate to influence a persons' vote were explicitly declared to be unlawful, as were solicitations of political contributions of those employed by the United States or paid in part with federal funds, and political contributions by national banks, corporations or labor organizations. Act of June 25, 1948, c. 645, 62 Stat. 721, 18 U.S.C. §§ 597, 599, 609, and 610. The legislation of 1939 made it a crime: (1) for any person to intimidate voters; (2) for federal employees, or those paid in part by federal funds, to use their official authority over funds for public works projects, work relief, or employment in order to influence voters; or (3) for any person to solicit funds in a federal building or from persons on welfare. Act of Aug. 2, 1939, c. 410, 53 Stat. 1148, 18 U.S.C. §§ 594–95, 598, 600–601, 604–605.

In the decade of the forties, more additions were made regarding the manner in which federal elections were to be held. Legislation was enacted in 1940, which: (1) prohibited state or local employees paid in part or in whole with federal funds from using their position to intimidate, coerce or influence voters from taking an active part in partisan political campaigns and (2) prohibited firms or individuals contracting with the United States from making a political contribution of any kind. Act of July 19, 1940, c. 64, 54 Stat. 767, 772, 5 U.S.C. §§ 1501 et seq; 18 U.S.C. § 611. In addition, legislation was enacted during this period prohibiting anyone from polling a member of the armed forces on the way he intended to vote or had voted, and requiring political mailings to include the name of the person or group responsible for the distribution. Act of Sept. 15, 1942, c. 561, as added April 1, 1944, c. 150, 58 Stat. 146, 18 U.S.C. § 596; Act of Dec. 23, 1944, C. 706, 58 Stat. 914, 915, 18 U.S.C. § 612.

In the late fifties and early sixties additional legislation was passed under Congress' constitutional authority to regulate federal elections. In 1957, Congress amended 42 U.S.C. 1971, adding thereto a section prohibiting any person acting under color of law from interfering with any other person's right to vote in federal elections. P.L. 85-315, 42 U.S.C. 1971 (b). In 1960 Congress required retention and preservation for a period of time of all records and papers relating to registration, or any other act requisite to voting in federal elections, by the officer of the election or such other custodian as provided by state law. P.L. 86-449, 42 U.S.C. 1974. Moreover, to further protect the integrity of federal elections, Congress, in 1960, made it a crime for any person acting under color of law to willfully interfere with a person's right to vote in federal elections by force or threat of force. P.L. 90-284, 82 Stat. 73, 18 U.S.C. 245.

As this summary points out, Congressional regulation of the "time, place and manner" of federal elections, has fluctuated over time, depending upon what Congress perceived the need to be. To assume from this, however, that Congress has only narrowly drawn authority to preserve the integrity of elections is unwarranted.

THE SUPREME COURT PRECEDENTS

The Supreme Court has repeatedly upheld legislation enacted to protect the integrity of federal elections under Art. 1 § 4 and under Article 1, § 8, "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper." Legislation that protected the right of qualified voters to have their votes counted, United States v. Mosley, 238 U.S. 383 (1915); Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U.S. 651 (1884), and legislation that protected the franchise against less outright denials, such as alteration of ballots, United States v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299 (1941) or dilution by stuffing of the ballot box, United States v. Saylor, 322 U.S. 385, have been upheld as constitutional exercises of the power of Congress.

The extent of Congressional authority has stretched beyond overt fraud to encompass many other matters, including insidious devices which Congress believed had the propensity to undermine the legitimacy of the federal electoral process. Legislation setting the date for meeting of Presidential electors (3 U.S.C. § 5) has been held to preempt state law setting a conflicting date. McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U.S. 1 (1892). Legislation defining the basis of apportionment of Congress (2 U.S.C. § 2a) has been upheld as a constitutional exercise of Congress' power to regulate federal elections, with a federal circuit court stating that "whenever a member of Congress is to be elected, Congress seeks by statute to protect the elections of its members against any possible unfairness by compelling every one concerned in holding the election to observe strict and scrupulous regard of every duty connected therewith, under the powers and penalties pronounced by that statute" (emphasis added). U.S. v. Jackson, 25 F. 548 (C.C. Tenn. 1885). Legislation regulating the time and manner of conducting election contests has been upheld as necessary and proper under the power of the House of Representatives to judge election contests conferred by section 5 of Article 1. (2 U.S.C. 201 et seq.) In re Voorhis, 271 F. 673 (D.C. N.Y. 1923); In re Loney, 134 U.S. 372 (1890). And legislation requiring ballots to be preserved and produced upon request (2 U.S.C. 219; 42 U.S.C. 1974) has been upheld on a number of occasions. In re Howell, 119 F. 465, 467 (D.C. Pa. 1902); Kennedy v. Lewis, 325 F. 2d 210 (C.A. Miss. 1963), cert. denied, 377 U.S. 932, rehearing denied, 377 U.S. 935; Sallion v. Rogers, 187 F. Supp. 848 (D.C. Ala. 1960), aff'd 285 F. 2d 430, cert. denied, 366 U.S. 913; U.S. v. Assoc. of Citizens Council of La., 187 F. Supp. 846 (D.C. La. 1960); U.S. v. State of Miss., 229 F. Supp. 925 rev'd on other grounds, 380 U.S. 128, on remand, 256 F. Supp. 344.

The Supreme Court has been particularly wary of the temptations to corrupt federal elections, viewing such behavior as a constant source of danger. Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U.S. 651, 666-67 (1884) quoted with approval in Burroughs v. U.S., 290 U.S. 534, 546-47 (1934). Consequently, it is not surprising to find federal courts upholding legislation that prohibited: (1) the making of expenditures to influence voting (18 U.S.C. 597), U.S. v. Blanton, 77 F. Supp. 812 (D.C. Mo. 1948); U.S. v. Foote, 42 F. Supp. 717 (D.C. Del. 1942); In re Cohen, 62 F. Supp. 2d 349 (C.C.A. N.Y. 1932); (2) The solicitation of political contributions upon federal property (18 U.S.C. 603), U.S. v. Thayer, 209 U.S. 39 (1908); and (3) the prohibition of political contributions by certain corporations and labor unions in an election at which federal officers are to be elected (18 U.S.C. 610), U.S. v. Brewers' Ass'n, 239 F. 183 (D.C. Pa. 1915); U.S. v. CIO, 77 F. Supp. 355 (D.C. 1948); U.S. v. UAW-CIO, 352 567 (1957), rehearing denied 353 U.S. 943.

Finally, proscription of the distribution of statements which might be erroneously attributed to one or another candidate by the electorate (18 U.S.C. 612) without disclosing the name of the person responsible for their distribution has been held to be within the power of Congress to preserve the integrity of federal elections. U.S. v. Scott, 195 F. Supp. 440 (D.C. N.D. 1961).

The right of the people to choose their federal officials, whatever may be the constitutional allocation of authority of the states and the federal government to regulate the election of state officials "is a right established and guaranteed by the constitution and hence is one secured by it to those citizens and inhabitants of the state entitled to exercise the right" U.S. v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299 (1941); See also, Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U.S. 651 (1884); U.S. v. Mosley, 238 U.S. 383 (1915). Obviously, included within this right to choose is the right of all qualified citizens to have their vote counted, U.S. v. Classic, supra; Swafford v. Templeton, supra; United States v. Mosley, supra; Ex parte Siebold, supra; In re Coy, 127 U.S. 731; Hagan v. U.S., 144 U.S. 263. It seems incongruous that such a simple proposition could ever be doubted when the nature and theory of a representative democracy, the principles upon which it is supposed to rest, and the history of the constitution are carefully considered. Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U.S. 356, 369 (1885). "If a government, the essential character of which is republican and its President and Congress are elected directly by the people, is to be anything more than a mere aggregation of delegated powers from the various states, it must have the authority to protect the integrity of its elections. Otherwise it is left vulnerable to open violence and insidious corruption." Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U.S. at 657-58; Burroughs v. United States, 290 U.S. 534, 546-47 (1934), "and its best powers, its highest purposes, the hope which it inspires, and the love which enshrines it, are at the mercy of the combination of those who respect no right but brute force on the one hand, and unprincipled corruption on the other." Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U.S. at 666-67; Burroughs v. U.S. 290 U.S. 534, 547 (1934). Therefore, it follows that the Congress is obligated to see that Federal elections are free from corruption and open to all citizens who are qualified. "This duty does not arise solely from the interest of the party concerned, but from the necessity of the government itself . . . and that the votes by which its members of Congress and its President are elected shall be the free votes of the electors, and the officers thus chosen the free and uncorrupted choice of those who have the right to take part in that choice." Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U.S. 651, 362 (1884).

As recently as 1970, the Burger Court reaffirmed this principle. Justice Black found in the constitutional history authority for Congress to establish the voting age for federal elections, stating that "Congress has ultimate supervisory power over congressional elections . . ." Oregon v. Mitchell, 400 U.S. 112, 124 (1970). Justice Douglas, although he ruled upon the privileges and immunities clause of the Fourteenth Amendment in upholding the durational residency provision of the 1970 Voting Rights Act, stated that the "right to vote for national officers is a privilege and immunity of national citizenship," id. at 149, and that the choice of means to protect such a privilege presents a question primarily addressed to the judgment of Congress. Id. at 150. Justices Brennan, Marshall and White did not state explicitly what their position was on Congress' authority to regulate federal elections but cited Justice Douglas' views in a footnote, and went on to base their affirmation of the durational residency provision of the 1970 Voting Rights Act on the right to travel. Id. at 237, particularly footnote 16. Moreover, although Justices Stewart and Blackmun and Chief Justice Burger did not believe Congress' authority extended to include the reduction of the voting age requirement, in an opinion written by Justice Stewart they were careful to point out that Congress has the authority under Article I, section 4 and section 5 to pass such laws as are necessary to assure fair elections and to protect and facilitate the exercise of privileges of United States citizenship," citing both United States v. Classic, supra, and Burroughs v. United States, supra. Id., at 281ff.

THE SCOPE OF CONGRESS' AUTHORITY TO REGULATE ELECTIONS

Of particular importance in the area of voting rights is whether the right to choose Federal officials embraces the registration of voters.

It is fair to assume that the framers of the Constitution, in adopting Article I, section 4, did not have in mind modern registration statutes, "any more than they contemplated the application of the commerce clause to interstate telephone, telegraph and wireless communication, which are conceded within it. But in determining whether a provision applies to a subject matter," whether or not it was then in existence does not matter. U.S. v. Classic, 313 U.S. 299 316 (1941). In setting up an enduring framework of government, the framers intended the Constitution to last for an indefinite length of time, providing a set of fundamental principles which the Constitution itself defines to be applied to all the vicissitudes of the changing affairs of men. Oregon v. Mitchell, 400 U.S. 112 (1970). Consequently, the Constitution is not to be read as legislative enactments which are subject to continuous legislative revision with the changing course of history, but in light of its plainly elicited purposes. U.S. v. Classic, supra; Davidson v. New Orleans, 96 U.S. 97; Brown v. Walker, 161 U.S. 591, 195; Robertson v. Baldwin, 165 U.S. 275, 281-82; U.S. v. Reese, 92 U.S. 214, 217.

Article I, section 4, authorizes Congress to regulate the time, place and manner of holding federal elections, and Article I section 8 authorizes Congress "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution" the powers of Congress. This leaves Congress free to select the means by which its constitutional powers are to be carried into execution, subject only to the limitation promulgated by Chief Justice Marshall in McCulloch v. Maryland:

Let the end be legitimate, let it be within the scope of the Constitution, and all means which are appropriate, which are plainly adopted to that end, which are not prohibited, but consistent with the letter and spirit of the Constitution are constitutional." 4 Wheat. 316, 421 (1819).

Thus whenever the Congressional decision is consistent with the "letter" and spirit of the Constitution, as a long line of cases has held from McCulloch v. Maryland, supra, to Oregon v. Mitchell, 400 U.S. 112 (1970), it will be upheld as a constitutional exercise of Congressional authority. See Ex parte Virginia, 100 U.S. at 345-346 (1880); South Carolina v. Katzenbach, 383 U.S. 301, 376-77 (1965); Katzenbach v. Morgan, 384 U.S. 649, 650 (1965) and the opinions of the Justices of the present Court in Oregon v. Mitchell, supra, in which all of the Justices affirmed their adherence to the principle of McCulloch v. Maryland.

The right to participate in the selection of federal officials includes the right to cast a ballot and to have it counted at the general election, whether for the successful candidate or not. Where the state law has made registration an integral part of the procedure of choice, or where in fact registration controls the right to make that choice, the right of the citizen to be free from arbitrary application of qualification regulations is likewise included in the right protected by Article 1, section 2. Cf. U.S. v. Classic, supra, at 319.

There is no merit to the argument that Article I, section 4, and the Fourteenth Amendment deal only with the denial of the right to vote, not with the registration of voters, and therefore give Congress no power over registration. Cf. U.S. v. Manning, 215 F. Supp. 272 (1962). The Supreme Court set the record straight in striking down the "grandfather clause," one of the first schemes to deny registration to voters. Gunn v. United States, 238 U.S. 347 (1915). The Court pointed out in that case that the Fifteenth Amendment did not take away the State's power to fix qualifications, but it requires the tests for suffrage to be non-discriminatory. As the District Court stated in U.S. v. Manning:

Discrimination in the registration office is the worst kind of oppression of qualified voters, because it is oppression under color of law. Discrimination by a registrar is especially harmful because it is the most effective method for denying the right to vote: it denies the right to vote before an individual has the chance to exercise it, and it bars not only the individual concerned from all elections but inhibits other qualified voters from running the gauntlet of discriminatory and humiliating practices by a registrar and his deputies. It is unthinkable that Congress should not have the power to deal with the right to vote at the most vulnerable point in the electoral process.

As the Supreme Court said, in an analogous context, in Ex Parte Yarbrough, 110 U.S. 651, 661-62 (1884):

It is only because of the Congress of the United States, through long habit and long years of forbearance, has, in deference and respect to the states, refrained from the exercise of these powers, that they are now questioned.

When the states, by sophisticated registration requirements coupled with discriminatory practices by registrars, deny suffrage to qualified voters, they cannot complain if Congress exercises its authority under Article I, section 4, to regulate the electoral process in federal elections and its Fourteenth-Fifteenth Amendment authority to prohibit discriminatory denial of the right to vote in federal and state elections" (emphasis added). 215 F. Supp. 272, 278-88 (1962).

The Supreme Court on a number of occasions has addressed itself to the question of the extent of the function contemplated by Article I, section 4, and the other sections of the Constitution regarding suffrage. The response directly applicable to registration was made in Smiley v. Holm, in which the Supreme Court stated:

"It cannot be doubted that these comprehensive words 'time, place and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives' embrace authority to provide a complete code for congressional elections, not only as to times and places, but in relation to notices, registration, supervision of voting, protection of voters, prevention of fraud and corrupt practices, count of votes, duties of inspectors and canvassers, and making and publication of election returns; in short, to enact the numerous requirements as to procedure and safeguards which enforce the fundamental rights involved." (Emphasis added.) 285 U.S. 366-67 (1932).

The history of the Constitution, the legislation which has been enacted thereunder and the decisions upholding its constitutionality all lead to one inescapable conclusion. When it comes to federal elections, Congress may adopt as its own or supplement state regulations, and even substitute its own voter registration laws. Simply stated, Congress "has a general supervisory power over the whole subject." Ex parte Stebold, 100 U.S. 371, 387; Ex parte Yarbrough, 110 U.S. 651, 661; Ex parte Clarke, 100 U.S. 399; United States v. Mosley, 238 U.S. 383, 386; Newberry v. United States, 256 U.S. 232, 255; Smiley v. Holm, supra.

SUPPORT FOR FARM CREDIT ACT OF 1971

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I should like to record my support for the Farm Credit Act of 1971, S. 1483.

Over 15,000 Arkansas farmers and 65 Arkansas farmer cooperatives now have nearly $300 million in loans outstanding from the banks and associations of the cooperative farm credit system. These farmer-owned institutions have served the farmers of Arkansas well. But, as in so many things, there is a time when change is necessary.

In Arkansas, as in many other rural States, we are very much concerned about rural development. As I read the Farm Credit Act of 1971, I see in it some things that would aid our rural communities. The Farm Credit System need make no apology for its present role in building our rural areas. The mere fact that it operates only in rural America, making loans of all kinds to both farmers and their cooperatives, aids the rural economy. But more needs to be done and this legislation will provide the means by which more can be done.

I have received a great deal of mail from my State unanimously supporting this legislation, and I would like to comment on the provisions in it which I believe are especially significant.

Rural housing: There is no question that adequate funds are needed to finance nonfarm rural homes. Substandard housing is the rule rather than the exception in rural America. The lack of available financing is one of the prime reasons people do not build new homes in the country. This results, of course, in an exodus from the country to our already overcrowded cities. The provision in the Farm Credit Act of 1971 to allow the Federal land banks to make these kinds of loans will not solve all the housing problems in rural America, but it is certainly a step in the right direction. The availability of money for nonfarm rural homes will do more than provide places for people to live. It will provide jobs, stimulate business and broaden the tax base in these communities. The companion provision which would allow the production credit associations to make loans for the repair and maintenance of these rural homes is equally important. I think it a tribute to the farmer-owners of the farm credit system that they recognize the needs of their rural neighbors and are asking the permission of the Congress to help them.

Farm-related business loans: Many farmers today are plagued by the fact that they need large and expensive equipment and machinery to operate efficiently. Though they need such equipment, frequently they cannot justify its use when its cost is considered. The answer for many farmers is to turn to custom operators; businessmen who provide on-the-farm services which the farmer, under ordinary circumstances, would provide for himself. However, these farm-related businessmen have difficulty obtaining sufficient financing. Again, the Farm Credit Act of 1971 offers assistance by allowing its institutions to make loans to those who provide these services.

Loans to farmers' cooperatives: The Banks for Cooperatives are now providing an estimated 60 percent of all funds borrowed by farmers' cooperatives. More than half of all the cooperatives in existence are owners of these Banks. Many of those which are not borrower-owners simply cannot meet the rigid eligibility requirements. In order for a cooperative to be eligible for a loan, 40 percent of its voting control must be held by farmers. Now many of these cooperatives do sell supplies or provide petroleum products to nonfarmers, but the nature of cooperatives is such that these nonfarmers do hold stock in them. It is also true that many farmers keep their investments in cooperatives after they retire. This, of course, affects the voting control requirement. The Farm Credit Act of 1971 offers a solution. It would establish the eligibility of a borrowing cooperative as one in which farmers hold 66 2/3 percent of voting control. So again, the rural economy is stimulated by the business a cooperative brings into rural areas and by the jobs it provides.

The cooperative Farm Credit System was initially established with funds provided by the U.S. Government. The farmers and their cooperatives who borrow from this system have demonstrated their ability to successfully operate it. They have repaid the Government with interest. They now completely own the banks and associations and have invested more than $1 billion in them. In effect, all they are asking is for us to allow them to modernize their system so it can better serve them and their rural neighbors. We should not only grant that permission by enacting this legislation, but we should grant it with our thanks.

MRS. IRIS POWERS, THE ARMY'S CONSULTANT TO THE FAMILIES OF PRISONERS AND MISSING

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, in my activities on behalf of American servicemen who are missing in action or held as prisoners of war in Southeast Asia I have come to know a number of wives, mothers, fathers, and children of these men. Many have been members of the national League of Families of Prisoners and Missing in Southeast Asia, and all have been unique in their determination to do everything and anything they feel will possibly benefit the men who are captive or missing in North Vietnam, South Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia.

NOTICE OF HEARINGS BY THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON ALCOHOLISM AND NARCOTICS

Mr. HUGHES, Mr. President, on Monday, Wednesday, and Thursday, August 2, 4, and 5, the Subcommittee on Alcoholism and Narcotics, which I chair, will hold hearings on several pieces of legislation relating to drug abuse. We will be considering S. 2217, which I introduced on June 30 along with Senators JAVES, MUSKIE, and WILLIAMS, Senator HUMPHREY's bills, S. 2146 and S. 2155, and we will take testimony on two bills which will shortly be referred to the Labor and Public Welfare Committee from the Government Operations Committee, S. 2097, the administration's drug-abuse proposal, and Senator MUSKIE's S. 1945. Although these last two measures have not yet been referred to us, they relate directly to S. 2217 and we will hear statements discussing the relative merits of these three differing proposals.

On Monday, we will hear testimony from the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, the National Institute of Mental Health, Mayor Alioto, of San Francisco, and California State Senator Moscone. On Wednesday, the President's special consultant on drug abuse, Dr. Jaffee, will be our lead witness. Following him will be the Governor of my own State of Iowa, Governor Ray, Mr. Graham Finney, New York City's narcotics commissioner, and NARCO, a Detroit-based drug abuse treatment organization. On Thursday, we will have questions for the Office of Education, the Food and Drug Administration, and the distinguished junior Senator from Minnesota Senator HUMPHREY.

The purpose of these hearings is to prepare for passage of legislation designed to give coordination, direction, and purpose to the Federal Government's efforts to deal with drug abuse. These are elements which have too long been missing from the Federal effort. I feel strongly that they are needed, if our efforts are to succeed.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

RETIREMENT OF AMBASSADOR DAVID K. E. BRUCE

Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. President, a government like ours, that is dependent on talented citizens making a commitment to governmental service, is fortunate in having people of the caliber of David K. E. Bruce serving it. Ambassador Bruce retires this week from his post in Paris, where he has been the chief U.S. negotiator at the Vietnam peace talks. I am sure that he, like so many Americans, is disappointed that his difficult task could not end on a more complete note. But his untiring dedication to the service of this country is an example every American should take to heart.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article published in the Los Angeles Times and an editorial appearing in the Baltimore Sun of July 30, 1971, be printed in the RECORD.

The being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DAVID BRUCE: A TOP DIPLOMAT, GOURMET
(By Don Cook)

PARIS.—When David K. E. Bruce arrived in Paris on his first official mission for the United States in August, 1944, he had the unhappy duty of ordering the interment of the proprietor of a famous three-star Paris restaurant who had shown excessive zeal in serving the Germans in more ways than one during the Nazi occupation.

Bruce at that time was the head of the French section of the wartime Office of Strategic Services in Europe, the forerunner of today's Central Intelligence Agency. Operating first in London, he then moved to France and entered Paris in the wake of the liberating Allied armies.

For a man who has always managed to combine serving his country with a gourmet's appreciation of food and wine, it was painful to have to look up one of France's leading restaurateurs.

FAITH RESTORED

But Bruce's faith in French cuisine as well as French resistance was more than restored by the fact that the proprietor of a superb two-star restaurant in the heart of Paris had sheltered an Allied radio operator and his radio in his wine-cellar throughout the occupation, while Nazi officers were eating upstairs.

Bruce has never been back to the three-star restaurant, but the two-star place remains one of his favorites and the vigorous owner an old friend.

Ambassador Bruce is now leaving his fifth and least productive, official assignment in Paris for his country—chief U.S. negotiator at the Vietnam peace talks. After his wartime and postwar days as OSS chief in France, he came back to serve as Marshall plan administrator for France in 1948-49; ambassador to France with ambassadorial rank during the organization and launching of the European Coal and Steel Community in 1953 and 1954.

LONG PUBLIC SERVICE

Not only that, but in a remarkable diplomatic career under six presidents, Bruce is the only man in United States public service to have served as ambassador to Germany and Great Britain as well as France. Moreover, his eight-year tenure as ambassador in London from 1961 to 1969 was the longest in that post since the legendary Walter Hines Page during the first World War.

Although Bruce ostensibly leaves the Vietnam peace talks at the age of 73 for reasons of health, there is nothing that has yet impaired either his gourmet appetite and consumption of fine food and judiciously chosen wines, or his conversational wit and analytical powers. He has a circulatory problem which needs watching, but the Vietnam peace talks have scarcely risen much above the level of boredom.

Even the pleasures of life in Paris have been restricted for Bruce in the past year—for the simple reason that he has to be accompanied round-the-clock by French security officers who follow his official car wherever it goes, wait outside restaurants while he dines, walk with him across the street from the Crillon Hotel, where he has been living, to the American Embassy, and stay up all night outside his hotel suite while he sleeps.

Going for a walk in the Bois or driving out to the country or dropping into a theater or casual calls on friends have to be turned into security production jobs under such circumstances. The tedium of weekly meetings in the non-negotiation at the Hotel Majestic has not been much relieved by easy social life, and Bruce has frequently escaped to London for long weekends at the small suite which he has kept at the Albany on Piccadilly since he retired as ambassador in 1969.

Now a full and active official life is finally over for this courtly, soft-spoken, witty, gay, wise and prudent Maryland gentleman. He could write a wonderful book but he won't for the simple reason that he enjoys talking and conversation a great deal more than the discipline of writing.

INTERESTING WOMAN

But he can switch easily from recalling his days as a young Foreign Service officer in Rome in 1926 to the personality of Harold Wilson and why Mrs. Nguyen Thi Binh of Twenty-ninth. When the person filing the disclosure statement is a subfranchisor, the statement shall include the same information concerning the subfranchisor as is required from the franchisor pursuant to this schedule.

The disclosures which may be required under my proposal are extensive and will go a long way toward eliminating many of the abuses that now exist in the franchising field. In addition, the bill would authorize private action for treble damages, including attorney's fees and reasonable court costs, for those who are injured as a result of a failure to comply with the rules and regulations promulgated by the Commission.

Mr. President, I believe that my proposal provides a timely and thoughtful solution to many of the problems which now exist in the franchising field. I urge the Congress to give it expeditious consideration. The time for action is now, if franchising, an unparalleled marketing tool and opportunity for small businessmen throughout our country, is to be preserved.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF HEARINGS ON POPULATION STABILIZATION

Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. President, for the information of my colleagues, I wish to announce that the Special Subcommittee on Human Resources of the Labor and Public Welfare Committee has scheduled an open hearing on Thursday, August 5, 1971, in room 4232 of the New Senate Office Building, at 9:30 a.m. on Senate Joint Resolution 108, a joint resolution to declare a U.S. policy of achieving population stabilization by voluntary means.

Among those testifying will be former Senator Joseph Tydings; Congressman JOHN CONYERS of Michigan; David Brower, president, Friends of the Earth;

Rufus Miles, president of the Population Reference Bureau of Washington, D.C.; and Cynthia Epstein, sociologist, of Columbia University.

Senate Joint Resolution 108, which I introduced on June 2, 1971, has the bipartisan cosponsorship of 33 Members of the Senate. Because I feel we should proceed promptly with this vitally important issue, I have called this hearing before the recess. Subsequent hearings will be scheduled in the fall.

EXECUTIVE SESSION OF CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS SUBCOMMITTEE TO CONSIDER EQUAL RIGHTS AMENDMENT THURSDAY, AUGUST 5, 1971

Mr. BAYH, Mr. President, I want to take this opportunity to inform my colleagues once again that on Thursday of this week we will be making another try to obtain a quorum of the Constitutional Amendments Subcommittee, to consider the equal rights amendment. Every member of the subcommittee knows how extraordinarily difficult getting a quorum can be. In the past only two or three members have appeared. Last week five members—out of the necessary six—showed up.

As I announced at that meeting, I intend to try once more. Last Thursday I checked with each member's office and was told that there would be no conflicts on Thursday, August 5, 1971, at 10 a.m. Therefore, as I informed each member's office last Thursday, I have scheduled a meeting for that date and time in room 457 of the Old Senate Office Building. I do hope to see every subcommittee member there so that at long last we can consider—and hopefully report out—this most important proposal.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

REVITALIZATION OF SMALL TOWNS

Mr. TALMADGE, Mr. President, it is an unfortunate fact that small towns around the Nation are dying. In all too many small towns there is a loss of economic activity, an absence of hope for the future. This is unfortunate for America, not only because the people who leave these small towns are being pushed into the urban congestion of our metropolitan areas; it is unfortunate because the loss of the Nation's small towns means a loss of balance with nature. A prosperous small town is in ecological balance with nature. It has such ecological balance because in small towns there is still an element of serenity, of neighborliness, and of closeness to the earth. In a small town one is able to enjoy the benefits of open spaces and the advantage of air and water that is relatively free of pollution.

In the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which I am chairman, we are attempting to find ways to revitalize the Nation's small towns. The Rural Development Subcommittee is attempting to give Americans a choice—a real choice between living in urban congestion or in

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I have received today a telegram from the chairman of the Board of Foreign Scholarships, James R. Roach, sending congratulations on the 25th anniversary of the signing of this legislation on August 1, 1946. I ask unanimous consent that the telegram may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D.C.,
July 31, 1971.

Senator J. WILLIAM FULBRIGHT,
Senate Office Building
Washington, D.C.:

Members of the Board of Foreign Scholarships join me in sending you congratulations and best wishes in recognition of the 25th anniversary of the Fulbright Act on August 1.

This act which launched a world wide program of education exchanges under U.S. Government sponsorship has provided opportunities for over 100,000 Americans and foreign nationals to participate in purposeful academic exchanges which have made an essential contribution to the peaceful pursuits of mankind here and abroad.

As the Board responsible for the supervision of such exchanges we express our appreciation for your imaginative authorship of the initial legislation and your continuing interest and support of these exchanges over the years.

We look forward to meeting with you personally in September.

JAMES R. ROACH,
Chairman, Board of Foreign Scholarships.

SETTLEMENT OF STEEL AND RAIL DISPUTES

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am sure the Senate will be pleased to know, as possibly many Senators do, that what had appeared to be a most difficult labor-management dispute, the railroad management and union dispute, has been settled, and that the trains will be in full operation tonight at 12:01.

This settlement is significant in that the unions have abided by the law, that they won the right to strike selectively, and they have brought free collective bargaining to the rail industry.

I wish to compliment both steel and railroad management for exercising restraint and flexibility in these negotiations. I compliment them for placing their faith and confidence in the collective bargaining process. It has worked well for management, labor, and the public.

I compliment the leadership of the United Transportation Union, President Charles Luna, for his sincerity and dedication to the highest principles of labor-management relations. His leadership has shown that unions and management can bargain in good faith and that if negotiators will be honest with each other, then settlements that reflect the best interest of the Nation can result.

I am particularly pleased that employee protections and satisfactory work rules could be the keystone of that settlement. Union men have made a valid case for these two items and I am gratified that the final contract contains both of these.

Mr. President, the rail industry settlement is not the only important labor-management dispute resolved today. The United Steel Workers and steel management also signed an agreement for a new 3-year contract. Thus, two singularly important achievements in the field of collective bargaining have resulted.

Mr. President, the steel agreement is another testimony to the leadership of I. W. Abel of the United Steel Workers. It is testimony to his resourcefulness as a negotiator—the kind of leader who understands that steel management and labor can use the processes of free collective bargaining to demonstrate results satisfactory to both management and labor.

Mr. President, this Nation owes a debt of gratitude to I. W. Abel. This union leader, who in 1967 successfully negotiated a steel contract that served the national interest and brought substantial benefits to his union membership, is without a doubt one of the most gifted and talented, and dedicated leaders of organized labor. He represents the best in trade unionism, but above all, he is a great citizen who has always put his country ahead of all other considerations.

It is indeed a tribute to Mr. Abel's sense of public responsibility that the steel industry came to a contract agreement. He has shown the flexibility and the resolve necessary to take on tasks that sometimes seem superhuman. Yet, I. W. Abel has again proved that he is capable, that he is a leader, and that he has the qualities that make him a respected labor negotiator.

Both the steel settlement and the rail industry agreement represent the best in collective bargaining. Collective bargaining is always subject to a number of criticisms because it includes within it the possibility of lockouts or strikes. But, the leadership of these two unions have proven that there is no substitute for free, open, collective bargaining in a democracy.

The settlements at which these negotiators have arrived are fair. They represent a serious effort by the leadership of the unions to deal with increases in the cost of living brought about by economic policies of the Federal Government over which President Abel and President Luna have little control.

The settlements are in the public interest.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 382) to promote fair practices in the conduct of election campaigns for Federal political offices, and for other purposes.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I yield myself whatever time is necessary.

Mr. President, today the Senate begins deliberation on S. 382, the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. I have offered an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

Title I of the amendment, which deals with the use of communications media by candidates for Federal elective office, had its genesis in S. 3637. That bill, which would have limited campaign expenditures for the broadcast media, passed the 91st Congress but was vetoed by the President because, among other things, he felt it discriminated against broadcasting by limiting campaign spending only in that media. He said:

If there is merit in limiting campaign expenditures, the problem should be dealt with in its entirety.

Subsequently, in a letter to the minority leader of the Senate, the President said the administration would work closely with the Congress in an effort to arrive at a bill which would deal with all problems of political campaigns.

This amendment to S. 382 is comprehensive and will place spending limitations on use of the broadcast and non-broadcast communications media by candidates, and requires strict disclosure and reporting requirements by candidates, political committees, and individuals.

The Subcommittee on Communications of the Commerce Committee began hearings on campaign reform legislation on March 2. At that time I said:

The desirability of controls over expenditures for the use of various media must be considered by the Committee as part of any effective legislation to halt the spiraling cost of campaigning for elective office.

Those hearings were held as scheduled, and in order to be sure that everyone who wished had an opportunity to testify, the committee was in open session from March 2 until March 5.

Nineteen witnesses appeared and testified on the legislation during those 4 days. After the last witness who had requested an opportunity to testify had finished, I said in the public hearing, "Is there anyone else in this room who wants to testify?" Hearing no one, I said that the committee would recess, and the record would be open for 1 week for anyone who desired to submit a statement.

On March 11, Mr. President, the Subcommittee on Communications met in executive session and agreed that the full committee would consider S. 382 in executive session on March 16. The full committee met on that date and began marking up the bill, but adjourned until a later date before finishing.

Then, on March 19, I received a letter signed by five minority members of the committee requesting that the hearings be reopened to hear additional witnesses. Shortly thereafter, on March 22, the chairman of the full committee received a letter from the Deputy Attorney General of the United States, Richard G. Kleindienst, requesting an opportunity to present oral testimony on the legislation.

In view of these requests, the full committee met on March 25, and decided to reopen the hearings on March 31 and April 1.

Hearings were held on those 2 days, and 10 witnesses, including the Deputy Attorney General, appeared. Again, at the conclusion of the hearings, I ordered the record to remain open for 1 week to receive any additional material.

Mr. President, the full committee again considered the bill in executive sessions on April 22 and 23, and unanimously reported it on that latter day.

Since the Commerce Committee's primary jurisdiction ran to title I of the bill, it was that section on which the committee focused its deliberations. Title I of the amendment which I am offering today is for all purposes identical to title I as reported by the Commerce Committee.

The purpose of title I is twofold. It attempts to give candidates for public office greater access to the media so that they may better explain their stand on the issues, and thereby more fully and completely inform the voters.

Second, it attempts to halt the spiraling cost of campaigning for public office—a problem which by all accounts is rapidly increasing.

To accomplish these purposes, title I, as amended, would do the following:

First. Make the equal opportunities requirement of section 315(a) of the Communications Act, as amended, inapplicable to the use of broadcast facilities by legally qualified candidates for President and Vice President in primary and general election campaigns.

Second. Require that broadcast licensees charge legally qualified candidates for any public office no more than their lowest unit rate during the 45 days before a primary election, and 60 days preceding a general election.

Third. Establish reasonable and adequate limitation on the amount of money that may be spent for use of the broadcast media and nonbroadcast media by or on behalf of all legally qualified candidates for Federal elective office in primary, runoff, general, and special elections.

Fourth. Require that 45 days before a primary election and 60 days before a general election any person who charges a legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office for space in the non-broadcast communications media do so at the lowest unit rate charged other for the same amount of space.

Fifth. Enable the States by law to adopt spending limitations in the broadcast media for candidates for State and local office.

I will not take the Senate's time explaining the provisions in title I, because the Commerce Committee's report accompanying S. 382 does this clearly and in great detail. At the conclusion of my remarks, of course, I shall be happy to answer questions any Senator might have.

Nor will I occupy the Senate's time talking about the spiraling costs of campaigning for elective office, the threat these costs pose to the integrity of our democratic system, and the consequent need for limitations on campaign expenditures to help remedy the situation. The President of the United States, his Deputy Attorney General, the candidates, a great majority of the witnesses who testified on S. 382, and S. 3637 in the 91st Congress, public opinion polls, and the scores of communications received by Members of the Congress, have expressed strong concern over this most serious problem.

Most recently the problem has been underscored by the Citizens Research Foundation in a report on political spending in 1968. Compared to 1964, total costs were up 50 percent, from $200 to $300 million; the cost of electing a President and Vice President rose 67 percent, from $60 million to $100 million.

It has been said by some, however, that limitations on campaign expenditures are unrealistic and unnecessary. The only way to achieve the objectives of legislation such as S. 382, according to them, is through periodic public disclosure and publication of all campaign contributions and expenditures both before and after an election.

I agree that strict reporting, disclosure, and publication requirements are necessary for any comprehensive effective campaign reform legislation. And the amendment I am offering to S. 382 is the spending limitation on candidates.

Many of those who supported the repeal of the equal time requirement of section 315 of the Communications Act for candidates for President and Vice President as provided in the legislation were nevertheless critical of the scope of the repeal. They felt it should extend at least to candidates for all Federal elective offices.

Mr. President, I am not out of sympathy with their position. I have sponsored similar legislation in the past. But it is precisely because of my past experiences in this regard that I urged the repeal be confined at this time to the two highest offices in the land. For a variety of reasons, proposals for a wider repeal have never been successful in the Congress, and I felt that if we were to have a campaign reform bill this Congress—a difficult undertaking at best—it should not be encumbered with provisions which have proven so controversial in the past.

I want to say parenthetically here, let no one misunderstand what the intention was in relieving the licensees from the responsibilities of section 315(a) insofar as the offices of President and Vice President are concerned.

The precise reason was to be helpful. I have had many private conversations with the presidents of the various networks. I found them to be very cooperative. They said that if we would leave with them the responsibility of the effects of the equal opportunity law, of section 315(a) with reference to the Presidency and the Vice-Presidency, that they would make time available free to a candidate on a format of the choosing of that candidate.

So the real reason for this is that because of the astronomical cost for a nationwide broadcast which, of course, does not apply to Senators or Representatives, but applies only to the offices of President and Vice President, and is not restricted to a single broadcasting station, but must emanate as a network program, the purpose of the provision is to allow the network to contribute time free, so that the costs of the candidates campaigning for the offices of Presidency and Vice-Presidency can be cut down. I do not want anyone to misunderstand: This is not prejudicial to the offices of President and Vice President; it is beneficial, and that is the reason why it was done.

I give as the best example what happened in 1960. We did exactly this same thing, and it worked out pretty well. In my judgment, it only proves that it is wise to build slowly and steadily on the foundation of past experience.

We have had a limited but highly successful experience with suspension of section 315 for presidential and vice presidential candidates in 1960. It is only prudent, in my judgment, to build slowly and steadily on that foundation.

Mr. President, it has also been said that the spending limitations in S. 382 are unrealistically low, and should be raised to reflect the actual experience of the 1970 elections. In support of this contention a report was filed showing that statewide candidates in 23 States spent more money on radio and television last fall than the proposed limits in the pending bill. I will have something to say about the accuracy and relevancy of that report in a moment.

But, Mr. President, the issue is simple—either we are going to have spending limitations that will halt the astronomical rise of campaign costs, or we are going to rationalize, temporize, and compromise until any limitations that are adopted would be absolutely meaningless in terms of accomplishing their purpose.

Their report purporting to show that the limitations in S. 382 are unrealistically low when compared to the amount actually spent on the broadcasting media by candidates for statewide office in the 1970 elections is, in a word, misleading. Mr. President, an article appearing in the May 8 edition of the New York Times explains in detail why this is so. At this point I ask unanimous consent that that article be printed in the RECORD.

I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a table showing the actual expenditures of senatorial candidates in 1970.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HIGHER CAMPAIGN FUND CEILING ASKED

(By Warren Weaver, Jr.)

WASHINGTON, May 7.—Republican Senators contended today that spending ceilings imposed by a campaign finance bill now heading for floor debate should be raised to reflect "the actual experience" of the 1970 elections.

In support of this thesis, five members of the Commerce Committee filed a report showing that statewide candidates in 23 states spent more money on radio and television last fall than the proposed limit of five cents for each eligible voter would have permitted.

TWENTY-THREE SELECTED STATES

In 11 of the 23 states, however, the spending listed by the Republicans was by candidates for Governor, who would not be subjected to any limits under the measure approved by the Commerce Committee two weeks ago.

In addition, the spending figures, obtained from the Federal Communications Commission, indicated that the big spenders of 1970 were Republican candidates, who far exceeded both the proposed ceilings and the figures of their Democratic opponents.

The table filed by the Republican Senators listed a 1970 spending figure for each of 23 selected states, without identifying the candidate who spent it or his party. The figures from the communications commission, to which all radio and television stations report, had not previously been made public.

Information obtained elsewhere identified the candidates involved and provided spending figures for their opponents.

In New York, the report showed, Governor Rockefeller spent $1.2-million on radio and television in his third successful re-election campaign, or about $565,000 more than the $635,000 ceiling that the campaign spending legislation would establish in New York State for 1972.

Arthur J. Goldberg, the Democratic governorship candidate, spent $364,000 on radio and television, little more than half the limit the Senate is contemplating.

All three Senate candidates in New York were near or under the ceiling. The F.C.C. figures showed Richard L. Ottinger, a Democrat, spending $684,000; Charles E. Goodell, a Republican, spending $570,000, and James L. Buckley, a Conservative, who won, $522,000.

ANOTHER ROCKEFELLER

Next to Governor Rockefeller of New York, in 1970 candidate who overspent the ceiling now proposed for his state most decisively was former Gov. Winthrop Rockefeller of Arkansas. His radio-television cost figure was $302,000; the Arkansas limit under the bill would be $66,000.

The Democrat who defeated Winthrop Rockefeller, Dale Bumpers, also spent well over the ceiling—$117,000—but less than half the comparable Republican investment.

Calculations by the communications commission showed that Nelson Rockefeller spent 20 cents on radio and television for every vote he won and that his brother Winthrop spent 49 cents per vote.

New Jersey was another example chosen by the Republican Senators to illustrate that the ceilings should be raised. There Nelson G. Gross, the Republican Senate candidate, spent $391,000. Senator Harrison A. Williams Jr., a Democrat, who won re-election, spent well under the limit—$179,000.

Summing up the figures, the Republican Senators declared:

"Since we are dealing with an issue which is fundamental to having fair and effective democratic processes in our nation, the spending limitation should be increased so that it more closely relates to the actual experience."

The Senators are Winston L. Prouty of Vermont, Robert P. Griffin of Michigan, Howard H. Baker Jr. of Tennessee, Marlow W. Cook of Kentucky and Ted Stevens of Alaska. Senator Norris Cotton of New Hampshire filed a separate statement questioning "the sham of creating artificial and arbitrary spending ceilings."

The Commerce Committee bill is expected to reach the Senate floor next month.

Mr. PASTORE. As this table shows, the limitations for the broadcasting media are realistic. If this is so, I fail to see how anyone can contend that the limitations on the nonbroadcast media are unrealistically low because, as we all know, the major expenditures in national and statewide elections are made for the broadcast media.

Some of the witnesses who testified before the committee urged there be one total limitation on all media spending with discretion left to the candidate to determine what amount to spend on broadcast and nonbroadcast advertising. Mr. President, there is merit to this contention, especially since campaigns differ according to the personal style of a candidate and the area of the country in which the election is being held.

On the balance, however, the committee voted against such an approach. Television is unquestionably the most used medium in political campaigns, and it has been the most significant contributor to the spiraling cost of these campaigns.

I might add, as an example, that if all of this money were spent for broadcasting alone rather than a split of 5 cents for broadcast media and 5 cents for nonbroadcast media, it would end up that if a candidate for the Presidency chose to do so, he would be spending much more money, in the campaign for the coming election, on the cost of those media than he spent last year, and one reason for this bill is because of the tremendous amount of money that had to be spent last year for broadcasting.

If candidates were given complete discretion to spend on the use of this medium, the committee was fearful that in the closing months of a campaign the airwaves might become inundated with political broadcast to the exclusion of entertainment and other public interest programs.

Again let me state an example. The recent report of the Citizens Research Foundation supports the committee's judgment. In 1968, $58.9 million was spent on radio-TV, as against only about $20 million for newspapers. If money from the nonbroadcast fund were freely transferable to the broadcast fund, it would have the effect of nearly doubling what candidates could and in most cases would spend on radio and television.

I say very frankly that if we got to the point where we had to combine the two and leave it to the choosing of the candidates themselves, I think we would have to reduce the figure of 10 cents; otherwise we would have utter chaos.

Mr. President, these spending limitations are not only realistic in terms of what has been spent in the past, but each is sufficient in and of itself to allow candidates fully and fairly to present their candidacies through the respective media.

The table I have just placed in the Record shows this; the candidates who ran in 1970 and testified before my committee said it was so; and, I submit that 65 percent of the American public, who when polled said they wanted restrictions on political television advertising, would also agree.

When looking at these limitations, I think it is also important to keep in mind that production costs for the use of the media are not included; and that 45 days before primary elections and 60 days before special and general elections candidates will be able to avail themselves of the lowest unit rate in each of the media. In the broadcast media, this can amount to a 35- to 50-percent discount.

While on the subject of the lowest unit rate, I would like to say a word about the constitutionality of this requirement.

The Supreme Court has never explicitly ruled on this point. It was asked to, however, in Chronicle & Gazette Publishing Co., Inc. v. Attorney General, 94 N.H. 148, 48 A. 2d 478—New Hampshire Supreme Court 1946—but dismissed the appeal, 329 U.S. 690, and denied a petition for rehearing, 329 U.S. 385.

The point I am making here is that the State court held a provision of this kind constitutional; and when it was appealed to the Supreme Court, the Supreme Court refused to entertain it on two occasions, which left the decision of the Supreme Court in the State intact.

In that case, the Supreme Court of New Hampshire held that the New Hampshire statute establishing the commercial advertising rate as the maximum rate for political advertising in newspapers or by radio stations does not abridge freedom of the press.

It should be noted that nine States have similar statutes.

I might also add that section 315 of the Communications Act now requires that charges made for the use of any broadcast station for any of the purposes set forth in that section may not exceed the charges made for comparable use of the station for other purposes.

The valuable franchises given broadcasters to operate on airwaves belonging to the people is conditioned on serving the needs and interests of the community of license. In this context, requiring broadcasters to offer candidates for public office the same rates given their most favored commercial time buyers is nothing more than a particularization of the broad public interest obligation incumbent upon them.

Finally, Mr. President, a good deal has been said and written about the constitutionality of placing a limitation on expenditures for the media, and I would like to reiterate what was said on this question in the committee's report.

Essentially, the objection raised was that such limitations would abridge the constitutionally protected right of free speech of candidates and those who wish to buy air time or media space on their behalf. While the Supreme Court has never ruled on this precise point, the committee believes that what the Court has said on the first amendment generally and in an analogous situation—the Federal Corrupt Practices Act—fully supports the constitutionality of the limitations in title I of the amendment.

The right to communicate information and opinion freely is a basic right protected by the first amendment. Schneider v. State, 308 U.S. 147 (1939). It includes not only freedom from previous censorship, but any Government action which prevents free discussion of public affairs. In striking down a discriminatory State tax on newspapers in Grosjean v. American Press Co., 297 U.S. 233, 247 (1936), the Supreme Court has said of the earlier struggle for a free press in England that—

In ultimate, an informed and enlightened public opinion was the thing at stake; . . . For, the evils to be prevented were not the censorship of the press merely, but any action of the government by means of which it might prevent such free and general discussion of public matters as seems absolutely essential to prepare the people for an intelligent exercise of their rights as citizens. Grosjean, supra, 297 U.S., at 249-250.

The Supreme Court has pertinently stated Thornhill v. Alabama, 310 U.S. 88, 101-102 (1940):

The Freedom of speech and of the press guaranteed by the Constitution embraces at least the liberty to discuss publicly and truthfully all matters of public concern without previous restraint or fear of subsequent punishment. The exigencies of the colonial period and the effort to secure freedom from oppressive administration developed a broadened conception of these liberties as adequate to supply the public need for information and education with respect to the significant issues of the times.

First amendment rights of the press and of speech, however, do not create an absolute immunity from all governmental action which may touch upon them. Thus:

When particular conduct is regulated in the interest of public order, and the regulation results in an indirect, conditional, partial abridgment of speech, the duty of the courts is to determine which of these two conflicting interests demands the greater protection under the particular circumstances presented." Communications Assn. v. Douds, 339 U.S. 382, 399 (1953).

For that reason, the use of sound trucks may be prohibited in public places under proper standards, Kovacs v. Cooper, 336 U.S. 77 (1949); Saia v. New York, 334 U.S. 558 (1948); a municipality may limit commercial door-to-door canvassing, even of solicitors for periodicals, Beard v. Alexandria, 341 U.S. 622 (1951), and the requirements of absolute fairness in conducting a trial may warrant exclusion of television cameras from the courtroom, Estes v. Texas, 381 U.S. 532 (1965).

These cases indicate that where the regulation of conduct has the "side effect" of touching upon first amendment rights, the governing criteria are the presence of an evil which may validly be prevented, a reasonable relationship of the regulation to the evil, and the relative degree of effect upon the right to speak. There is a balancing of the limited effect upon free speech as against the substantiality of an evil to the prevention of which a regulatory statute is reasonably addressed. Konigsberg v. State Bar, 366 U.S. 36, 50-51 (1961).

More in point, however, are cases in which the Court has upheld the power of Congress to legislate to protect the integrity of the Federal election process.

In characterizing section 4 of article I of the Constitution which gives the Congress power to regulate elections for the office of Senator or Representative,¹ Chief Justice Hughes, speaking for a unanimous court said it provided:

Authority to provide a complete code for congressional elections, not only as to time and places, but in relation to notices, registration, supervision of voting, protection of voters, prevention of fraud and corrupt practices, counting of votes, duties of inspectors and canvassers, and making and publication of election returns; in short, to enact the numerous requirements to procure and safeguards which experience shows are necessary in order to enforce the fundamental right involved. Smiley v. Holm, 285 U.S. 355 (1932).

And, in Burroughs and Cannon, in upholding the constitutionality of the disclosure provisions of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, the Court said at page 545:

To say that Congress is without power to pass appropriate legislation to safeguard such an election from the improper use of money to influence the result is to deny to the nation in a vital particular the power of self protection. Congress, undoubtedly, possesses that power, as it possesses every other power essential to preserve the departments and institutions of the general government from impairment or destruction, whether threatened by force or by corruption.

Thus, the Court has recognized that if a substantial threat to the Federal election process exists Congress may legislate to remove the threat. In doing so, however, there must be a relevant correlation between the power Congress exercises and the manner in which it is being exercised. Bates v. Little Rock, 361 U.S. 516.

In Burroughs and Cannon against United States, the Court was quite explicit on this point at pages 547-8:

¹Subsequently the Supreme Court held that Congress has the power to act to preserve the purity of presidential elections. Burroughs and Cannon v. U.S. 534 (1934).

If it can be seen that the means adopted are really calculated to attain the end, the degree of their necessity, the extent to which they conduce to the end, the closeness of the relationship between the means adopted and the end to be attained, are matters for congressional determination alone. Stephenson v. Bingord, 287 U.S. 251, 272. Congress reached the conclusion that public disclosure of political contributions, together with the names of contributors and other details, would tend to prevent the corrupt use of money to affect elections. The verity of this conclusion reasonably cannot be denied.

The overwhelming preponderance of the testimony before the committee indicates the rapidly escalating cost of campaigning for public offices poses a real and imminent threat to the integrity of the electoral process.

According to Voters' Time, the report of the Twentieth Century Fund Commission on Campaign costs in the electronic era, after 1952, when television emerged as a dominant form of communications in Presidential campaigns, the estimated cost per vote took a sharp upward turn. From 19 cents in 1952, the cost per vote rose to 29 cents in 1960, and to 35 cents in 1964. In 1968 it jumped to 60 cents.

For the same periods the estimated direct spending of national-level party and campaign committees rose progressively from $11.6 million in 1952; to $12.9 million in 1956; to $19.9 million in 1960; and to $24.8 million in 1964. In 1968 it reached $44.2 million.

And according to another source, in three recent Presidential campaign years, the amount of money spent on newspaper ads was $4.3 million in 1956, $7.7 million in 1964, and $11.6 million in 1968.

Simply stated people are becoming cynical because of these high costs.

A Gallup poll in November of last year showed that eight in 10 Americans favor a law that would limit the total amount of money that can be spent for or by candidate in his campaign for public office.

One American interviewed by the poll was quoted as saying—

If you do not have a million bucks, you might as well forget about running for political office these days.

That may sound funny, but it is more truthful than it is funny.

An opinion poll done for the advertising agency Foote, Cone, and Belding, released in January 1971, indicated that 65 percent of the adult American public wants restrictions on political television advertising, and an additional 9 percent would like to see TV campaigns limited in duration.

And most recently, of course, is the report of the Citizens Research Foundation on political spending in 1968.

Title I of the amendment to S. 382 embodies one means necessary to remove this threat. It places a limitation on the amount of money candidates or their supporters may spend on the media. No direct prohibition is placed on free speech. Except for radio, television, and certain specified nonbroadcast media, candidates and their opponents may speak at will. Moreover, even with respect to the restricted media, candidates or their supporters may use all the free time and space available to them.

And where the limitation does apply, it is not total. An ample ceiling exists so that candidates may fully and fairly present their candidacies through these media.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD a rundown of a schedule prepared by the staff which shows how much money can be spent by a candidate, State by State. It appears on page 75 of the report, and I cite that for the convenience of the Reporter of Debates.

There being no objection, the schedule was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. PASTORE. Insofar as supporters of the candidates are concerned, it would be defeating the purpose of the legislation, and in effect denying Congress the very power to protect the integrity of elections recognized in Burroughs and Cannon, if they were allowed to do what the candidates may not.

To contend that limitations would be constitutionally sound with respect to candidates, but to maintain otherwise where their supporters are concerned, would construe the power of Congress to protect the election process far too narrowly. Such a construction would permit boundless evasion of the purpose of the legislation and in effect render it nugatory.

The only feasible regulatory scheme for regulating campaign spending is to make the candidate personally responsible for, and accountable for, all money spent by and for him on the media, and to place a reasonable limitation on such expenditures.

Moreover, with respect to the broadcast media, no person now has an unrestricted right of access. As the Supreme Court said in National Broadcasting Co. v. United States, 319 U.S. 190, at p. 226—

Freedom of utterance is abridged to many who wish to use the limited facilities of radio. Unlike other modes of expression, radio inherently is not available to all.

Conversely, the Government may vest in certain individuals a right of access to these facilities. Red Lion Broadcasting v. Federal Communications Commission, 359 U.S. 367 (1969); 47 U.S.C. 315(a). The touchstone for such actions is the public interest, convenience, and necessity.

But limitations that are adequate and realistic are not enough; they must also be workable and enforceable. Under the proposed legislation, the obligations of the candidates and those who sell air time and media space are clear and easily discharged. Significantly, when I asked the Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission if the broadcast provisions of the proposed legislation were enforceable by the Commission, he answered in the affirmative.

Mr. President, the limitations on media spending are aimed at a specific evil which Congress has a constitutional right to remedy; and the remedy it has chosen is necessary and reasonably related to the harm it seeks to prevent. These considerations in the committee's judgment outweigh any indirect limitation on the right of candidates or their supporters to use the media.

The amendment to S. 382 is a comprehensive approach to the problem of political campaign reform and excessively high campaign costs. Its provisions not only deal with the communications media, but with disclosure and reporting requirements as well.

This measure represents a major effort at reform in an area vital to our democratic society.

The necessity for campaign reform is now beyond question, and transcends special or partisan interests.

Mr. President, at this point, I wish to yield to the distinguished Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) who is on his way to the Chamber, whose diligent and painstaking efforts as chairman of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, are responsible for the reporting and disclosure provisions in the amendment. He will explain the provisions that have to do with disclosure.

Mr. President, in this connection, let me say that we have striven to give to the people of the country and also to candidates for Federal office, whoever they may be—whether incumbents or opponents of incumbents—a guideline which is reasonable in measuring the costs and arriving at a ceiling in order to bring about a sensible program of election campaign for the welfare of the American people.

The reforms adopted are liberal and yet not too liberal. I believe that they will do effectively what needs to be done in order to bring the spiraling costs of campaigning under some sort of sensible control.

For that reason, I would hope that the Senate would pass the pending bill, that the House will accept it, and that it will be acceptable to the President of the United States.

The Deputy Attorney General, Richard C. Kleindienst, appeared before our committee. I said to him that if we were to sit down together, in 24 hours we could compromise on a sensible and effective bill.

I want to say about Mr. Kleindienst that I found him to be fair and reasonable. I asked him whether he represented the administration and he said that he did. He wrote me a letter to that effect.

I would hope that if there are any improvements to be made, they will be made. I have an open mind. If anyone has any suggestions that are more effective and wiser than some of the suggestions we have proposed in the pending bill, I hope they will come up with them. There is no partisanship in the pending bill so far as I am concerned.

Mr. President, I have been in Congress now for 21 years and I have had experience in running for public office. In my State, it is not so expensive as in other States, but I feel that the time has come when in all the States, large and small, something needs to be done.

When one can pick up a newspaper, in these times of inflation, in these times of unemployment, and read that some Senators have to spend almost half a million dollars on television and radio, that, in itself, is scandalous. I believe that much of the money is wasted. The expenditure situation becomes competitive and candidates vie with one another. If one candidate has a billboard on one side of the street, his opponent thinks that he must have another billboard on the other side of the street.

There is not a candidate for public office who has not kicked himself when he realized it cost him twice as much as he had planned.

In the pending bill we are trying to avoid that, by bringing this whole matter into a context that makes sense, and I think that the bill does that.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum in order that the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) may be allowed time to come into the Chamber.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BUCKLEY). The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time consumed for the last quorum call not be taken out of either side.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the consideration of the pending bill, Mr. Joel Abramson and Mr. Terry Barnett, members of the committee staff, be permitted the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I am glad to yield to the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) now, to address himself to the provisions on disclosure, and at other times it may be necessary.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island for yielding to me.

Mr. President, the "Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971," S. 382, is the latest of a long series of election reform proposals considered by the Senate. S. 2436 was passed by the Senate in 1960; S. 2426 was approved by the Senate in 1961; and S. 1880 was adopted by the Senate in 1967 by an 87 to 0 vote. Other proposals have been reported to the Senate but not acted upon. Unfortunately, none of the Senate-passed bills was approved by the House of Representatives.

Therefore, Mr. President, there has not been any real change in the law governing campaign contributions and expenditures since the Corrupt Practices Act of 1925 became law 46 years ago. That Act undoubtedly was considered to be a very significant step in 1925, but through the years has become so meaningless that it has absolutely no validity.

We are now beginning debate on a bill which has been given greater study and broader consideration than any previous legislative proposal in the field of election reform. The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 was referred to three committees for separate consideration of provisions within the specific jurisdiction of the appropriate committees. The Commerce Committee and the Committee on Rules and Administration each held public hearings to obtain widest possible opinion from a variety of expert witnesses. Executive mark-up sessions resulted in separate reports to the Senate from those committees, although no action was taken by the Finance Committee.

On May 6, Commerce reported its version of the bill—S. 382—and on June 21 Rules and Administration reported the bill, together with the amendments adopted by that committee. I am a cosponsor, along with Senators MANSFIELD and TALMADGE, of the amendment in the nature of a substitute proposed by the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Communications, Senator PASTORE. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Privileges and Elections, I have worked long and hard to bring about a substantial and enforceable improvement in the laws applicable to campaign financing. In my opinion, the Pastore substitute amendment to S. 382, Amendment No. 308, is a solid, meaningful bill, setting limits upon broadcast and nonbroadcast media expenditures and requiring prompt, complete public disclosure of all contributions and expenditures by candidates for nomination or election to Federal elective office and by all political committees seeking to influence those elections.

Mr. President, the Pastore substitute amendment is comprised of three major titles: first, amendments to the Communications Act of 1934, and limitations on broadcast and nonbroadcast media expenditures; second, criminal code amendments; and third, disclosure of Federal campaign funds. Senator PASTORE has given his strong and articulate statement in explanation and support of title I, and as a member of the Commerce Committee, I wish to identify and align myself with him in defense of title I.

However, I would like to address myself to two areas of title I which were modified by the Rules Committee, but which have now been returned to the form in which they were originally reported from the Commerce Committee.

First, the Commerce Committee exempted only candidates for President and Vice President from the equal time provisions of section 315 of the Communications Act. That decision was based upon experience and knowledge of the communications field, as well as upon the advice of expert witnesses, including many from the television industry. Subsequently, the Committee on Rules and Administration amended the provision so as to exempt all candidates for Federal office from section 315. In spite of arguments to the effect that only a few candidates will be running in each State, it is my judgment, based upon personal experience as a Senator and also a chairman of the Subcommittee on Elections which has jurisdiction over the election of Senators, that there will be so many candidates running for nomination and election that broadcasters will be forced to pick selected individuals to the disadvantage of others. Surely, broadcasters would not give free time to all candidates for Congress in larger States, but may give to a few. This would be unfair, even though legal since the candidates so favored could be from different congressional districts covered by the same broadcast media. That amendment has no real congressional support. It is unnecessary, and for those reasons I favor the version in the Pastore substitute which exempts only presidential and vice-presidential candidates.

Second, the Commerce Committee's reported version of S. 382 provided for distinct, separate limits upon expenditures for broadcast and nonbroadcast media. Those limits were set after studying reports of expenditures by candidates and committees in previous elections as well as estimates of amounts of money to obtain adequate exposure in future elections. Further, to give every assurance to candidates that the formula limitations would not become obsolete, there was adopted a provision calling for broadcasting stations and nonbroadcast media to provide time or space at the lowest unit cost or lowest unit rate. And, further, to maintain the formula on an up-to-date basis, there was provided a cost-of-living increase to be calculated annually by the Secretary of Labor. All of these factors were for the sole purpose of insuring fair and adequate access to broadcast and nonbroadcast media.

However, the Rules and Administration Committee amended those provisions by adopting an interchangeability factor to permit candidates to spend all or as much as they deemed advisable of the amounts allowed for both broadcast and nonbroadcast media for television time alone or for newspapers or billboards. What was a reasonable 5-cent limit times the estimate of resident population of voting age has now become doubled. Twice as much as was judged to be fair and reasonable by the members of the Commerce Committee, which has jurisdiction and experience in this area, may not be spent by every candidate. To me, this was totally wrong, and I strongly urge the full support of the separate limits, as carried in the Pastore substitute.

Title II, the criminal code amendments, defines the terms election, candidate, Federal office, political committee, contribution, expenditure, person, and State, so as to include within the scope of the bill every kind of election, whether a primary, a runoff primary, a presidential preference primary, or a special or general election—runoff primary was accepted as an amendment to make it clear that a runoff is a separate and distinct election in its own rights and should stand on a par with every other kind of election. Even the election of delegates to a constitutional convention is covered by the definitions.

Every candidate for Federal elective office from the President down must comply with the provisions of the bill, and for the first time in history every single political committee, whether National or State or local, would be within the coverage of this bill if the individual committee accepts contributions or makes expenditures in an amount exceeding $1,000 during a calendar year.

Other terms are as broad as possible, and, in fact, are so all-inclusive that a special exception had to be written into the definitions of the criminal code amendments in order to permit National and State banks to make loans of money. A bank loan made in accordance with banking laws and regulations, that is, with adequate collateral and a note promising payment on a day certain with interest, has always been legal and proper. But recent interpretation of such loans as political contributions has resulted in indictment proceedings against certain banks. This action is an infringement of the rights of banks to conduct business, and the language of the definition of contribution and expenditure in the criminal code amendments only, is intended to correct the flaw in the construction of the law.

On June 30, 1971, in the case of U.S. versus The First National Bank of Cincinnati, the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of Ohio, Eastern Division, granted a motion to dismiss the indictment on the grounds that the application of section 610 of title 18, United States Code, in this case resulted in a denial of first amendment rights. In its opinion and order, the court states that—

The evil in section 610 is not that it prohibits the political expression of a National bank, but that it directly affects the political expression of individuals who may wish to utilize their assets to secure credit on behalf of a particular candidate.

Several other similar cases have been dismissed on the same or similar grounds. It is clear that while a bank may not use its depositors' funds to make political contributions on its own, the fact that a bank does make bona fide loans to individuals who may use the moneys so received for political purposes, does not constitute a bank contribution, nor may such bona fide loans be barred.

The Pastore substitute strikes from the bill an amendment adopted by the Rules and Administration Committee which would have prohibited a political committee from soliciting or receiving a contribution from any officer or employee of the United States except an elected officer.

The Constitution gives every citizen the right to express himself, including expression of preference for political parties and candidates in the form of a political gift or contribution. In order to express himself fully, a citizen should have access to all information on candidates and parties, and ought to be privileged to receive letters of solicitation from political parties through their committees.

Almost unanimous testimony received by the Committee on Rules and Administration rejected specific limitations on individual contributions. Deputy Attorney General Kleindienst, among others, expressed the opinion that such limitations are unrealistic, unenforceable, and probably unconstitutional.

Senator HOLLINGS, chairman of the Democratic senatorial campaign committee, and Prof. Ralph Winter of the Yale Law School, were of the opinion that the first amendment prohibits the setting of limitations upon political activities of individuals, including the expenditure of money.

I was impressed by the testimony of those witnesses and others. I think they presented a good case. So, too, did the members of the Rules Committee.

Furthermore, stress in recent years has shifted from contributions or expenditures limitations to complete public disclosure of all political finances. Therefore, the Committee—Rules and Administration—agreed, without objection, to delete that provision from the bill, and to recommend repeal of section 608 from title 18 of the United States Code.

Also, there was unanimous agreement to recommend repeal of section 609 of title 18 because the 3 million dollar limit on contributions to or expenditures by national committees has never been observed. Other committees were created to receive or expend additional funds.

Section 600 of title 18 as shown in section 202 of the Pastore substitute sets forth in greater detail the prohibitions against special promises or awards in return for political support.

Section 611 of title 18 as shown in section 205 of the Pastore substitute clarifies the period during which Government contractors are forbidden to make any contributions to political parties, committees, or candidates.

Eliminated from the Pastore substitute is former section 206 of the bill. That former section would have prohibited any business regulated by CAB, FCC, or ICC from extending any credit to candidates or persons acting on their behalf for services or goods furnished, unless any debt so created was secured in full by property, bond, or other security.

Businesses regulated by those agencies have the right to exercise sound judgment in conducting their affairs. That is only commonsense. Certainly no business would jeopardize its economic stability by extending unlimited credit to persons without reasonable belief that debts would be repaid. The amendment restricted the freedom of operation of those businesses and imposed an arbitrary, unfair, and harsh burden upon candidates of modest means.

In the report of the Rules Committee three of the minority members said, in discussing the bank loans problem, that:

No one wants a Federal election law which, in effect, says that only the very wealthy can run for elective office.

That quote could very aptly be applied to the amendment which would prohibit the extension of credit. Without credit, candidates of limited means simply could not run for office, whereas the wealthy would have, in effect, a vested right to seek office.

Figures are not readily available to show what percentage of a corporation's budget is allowed for credit, but I understand that it is not a significant percentage as compared with the gross or overall income.

This amendment has been called the "Fat Cat" or "Rich Man's amendment" for obvious reasons. Even a credit card would be of no use to a candidate if he had to post full security every time he used it.

Finally, the avenues of greatest expense—television and radio—require at the time of purchasing program time the payment of all or most of the cost for time or space, so the amendment would not have been necessary for broadcast media. The amendment was eliminated from the Pastore substitute and I hope it will not be adopted if offered again.

Title III of S. 382, covering disclosure of Federal campaign funds, has evolved from a long history of committee and Senate activity in the field of election law reform. Gradually there has developed an awareness of the need for complete and public disclosure, not simply for general elections or from candidates and national committees, but from every possible source and covering every political activity. Existing law does not apply to primary elections or to conventions. It does not apply to State and local political committees, but only to those which are interstate or national in character.

Information presently submitted to the Senate and the House is sketchy at best, is not published, and provides no real accounting for money received or spent by candidates or committees. S. 382, however, encompasses the whole spectrum of political action and will furnish to the public huge amounts of data broken down into separate categories. Those categories will show where money comes from, how it is spent, by whom, for whom, the amounts received or spent, for each step in the nominating process, as well as the general elections, and the identities of individuals, candidates, and committees that are involved in all of the election processes.

All political committees which anticipate receiving or spending in excess of $1,000 per year substantially to influence the election of candidates for Federal office must be organized and registered with the Comptroller General of the United States. Even committees representing States or political subdivisions in arranging for political conventions must account to the Comptroller General.

And every candidate for nomination or election to Federal elective office must file detailed reports of receipts and expenditures with the Comptroller General.

Each individual or candidate or political committee or other organization required to file statement must account for its receipts and expenditures on the 10th day of March, June, and September in each year, and on the 15th and 5th days preceding the date of any election, and also by the 31st day of January. All reports must be complete 5 days before the date of filing, or less if the Comptroller General so directs.

To insure broadest possible dissemination and availability of statements, copies of everything required to be filed with the Comptroller General must also be filed with the clerk of the U.S. District Court for the district where the candidate resides or where the principal office of the political committee is located. All statements must be received and made available for study and copying by the public within a reasonable time. All reports must be preserved for 5 to 10 years.

Substantial agreement on the provisions of title III was reached in the Committee on Rules and Administration, and I believe that all of the members of that committee gave their approval to the technical, organizational, and reporting requirements of candidates, political committees, and others.

However, there was sentiment in favor of the creation of a Federal Elections Commission to serve in lieu of the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House of Representatives. Some Members of the Senate, including myself, have been of the opinion that the Senate and the House should oversee and control the campaign financing reports by candidates for the Senate and the House and their committees.

The Constitution says in article I that:

Each House shall be the judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its own Members.

That provision has been held to give each House of the Congress the sole and exclusive power over its Members. Accordingly, I have supported the proposals to enact a new law which would do everything that S. 382 does, except that the Secretary and the Clerk would act in lieu of a Federal Elections Commission or anyone else. However, in recognition of the division of opinion among the members of our Committee on Rules and Administration, a compromise was reached.

The Office of the Comptroller General was approved as the depository for financial statements. The Comptroller General oversees the expenditure of Federal funds and has a large staff of competent and experienced accountants.

If a Federal Elections Commission were created, its members, who would serve only part time, would be appointed by the President, and its staff, at least during election years, would have to be drawn from other sources, like the General Accounting Office.

To my mind, the compromise is a good one. The Comptroller General is as independent as any other body is likely to be; he is already located and well established in the District of Columbia, has ample trained and permanent personnel, and would prove to be a very efficient and able administrator of this act. I sincerely urge the Senate to approve of the Comptroller General to carry out the provisions of the bill.

I regret that the Finance Committee took no action on the bill with respect to former title IV, which was deleted from the Pastore substitute. Title IV offered a modest tax credit of one-half of the amount of a political contribution, but not to exceed a total credit of $20 per taxpayer per calendar year.

Alternatively, there was proposed a tax deduction for political contributions, but not to exceed $100 per taxpayer per calendar year.

We have long sought a means for broadening the base for political contributions. We know that greater numbers of citizens should be encouraged to support candidates and political parties of their choice.

A small tax incentive would serve as an inducement to the taxpayer to give some contribution. A portion of the cost would have been borne by the contributor and some of it would have been carried by the Government. As in the case of other deductions and credits which are allowed in the Internal Revenue Code, I believe these tax incentives for political purposes would serve the best interests of the public, and I will continue my efforts to bring about the adoption of some such provision.

However, I do not want to lessen the chances for passage of this important and necessary legislation, and so I have agreed to the deletion of title IV from the Pastore substitute.

Mr. President, the Federal Corrupt Practices Act is old, obsolete, and is of no use at all today. It is time for the enactment of a new, comprehensive law which will restore confidence in the integrity of the elective process.

The Pastore substitute is the end product of the thinking and hard work of many Senators, and it is my sincerest wish that it will be given the approval of the entire membership of this body:

PRIVILEGE OF THE FLOOR

Mr. JAVITS. I ask unanimous consent that Charles Warren be permitted to be present on the Senate floor to assist me throughout the debate on the campaign expenditures bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, today we resume consideration of the bill, S. 382—the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. More specifically, we undertake consideration of the pending amendment No. 308—Star Print—introduced by the senior Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) and others, in the nature of a substitute to the bill, S. 382, as reported by the Committee on Rules and Administration, which under the unanimous-consent agreement has been accepted as original text.

Mr. President, as the ranking Republican on the Subcommittee on Communications of the Senate Committee on Commerce, I have labored long and hard with the distinguished chairman of that subcommittee, the senior Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) in trying to shape an effective piece of legislation. Let there be no mistake, the legislation which we are considering today will have a far-reaching effect and a profound impact upon the campaign election process not only in the short term but in the years ahead. It, therefore, is deserving of the most serious consideration and deliberation by all Members of the Senate. Mr. President, I cannot emphasize this point too strongly and urge all of my colleagues to be attentive in the consideration which we now commence on this measure.

Mr. President, I support the bill, S. 382, as reported by our Committee on Rules and Administration. I do so based upon the following principal shortcomings which I perceive in the pending amendment No. 308—Star Print:

First. Inadequacy of amendment No. 308's—Star Print—partial exemption to the "equal time requirements" of section 315 of the Federal Communications Act;

Second. The unduly restrictive separate spending limitations lacking interchangeability;

Third. The failure to prohibit unsecured debts by political candidates for services rendered by certain regulated industries;

Fourth. The failure to go the full measure and provide for an independent Federal Elections Commission; and Fifth. The failure to provide a fair labeling disclosure advising the general public of the availability of detailed copies of reports filed by political committees.

Mr. President, the above enumerated five points are my areas of principal concern with the pending amendment No. 308—Star Print. I am equally concerned about other areas of the pending amendment and at the appropriate time will address myself to those points. However, for the moment I would like to elaborate upon my concern over the five major points of disagreement which I have with the pending amendment.

First. Inadequacy of amendment No. 308's—Star Print—partial exemption to the "equal time requirements" of section 315 of the Federal Communications Act.

Amendment No. 308—Star Print—reinstates the provision amending the equal time requirement of section 315 of the Federal Communications Act which was reported by the Committee on Commerce. It would create an exception to the equal time provisions of section 315 for presidential and vice presidential candidates.

During the deliberations of the Commerce Committee on S. 382, I offered an amendment to exclude from the equal time provisions of section 315 all Federal elective offices. This amendment was defeated by a margin of but one vote.

The Committee on Rules and Administration, before which I appeared and testified, very wisely, I thought, adopted an amendment similar to mine so as to exclude Federal elective offices. That committee also provided in the same amendment that Federal candidates would be given maximum flexibility in the choice of program format. This I believe improved upon my amendment by removing any doubt whatsoever concerning the possible control of television stations or networks over the program format of a political candidate. Testimony before the Committee on Commerce during the appearance of the presidents of the three networks—the American Broadcasting Co., the Columbia Broadcasting System, and the National Broadcasting Co—created some ambiguity on this point.

As the distinguished chairman of our Communications Subcommittee (Mr. PASTORE) indicated during those hearings, and I quote:

"I said this on the floor of the Senate when I pushed for this the last time the bill was passed. I said the networks would not prescribe the format." (Commerce Committee Hearings, Serial No. 92-6, at 386.)

However, in a colloquy with Dr. Frank Stanton, president of the Columbia Broadcasting System, the senior Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) noted:

Now you are saying today that we would like to sit down and talk with them about the format.

To which Dr. Stanton replied as follows:

"Dr. STANTON. I do not believe that I have changed my position on that point. If we have the responsibility of doing the best job we can to inform the American people, I think we have some role in the situation. I do not say we should be the only ones to be consulted. I think it should be a two-way street." (Commerce Committee Hearings, Serial No. 92-6, at 384.)

Dr. Stanton did seek to clarify his position on this matter by letter to the distinguished chairman of our Communications Subcommittee (Mr. PASTORE), but in that letter he stated, in part, the following:

"Format would be determined in consultation with the candidates, and with their agreement." (Commerce Committee Hearings, Serial No. 92-6, at 388.)

There, therefore, remains, in my mind at least, some question concerning network control of format. If, on the other hand, what Dr. Stanton said means that there would not be control of format, then I see no harm in putting this in the bill so that it is clearly spelled out.

Accordingly, Mr. President, I believe the language added by the Committee on Rules is an improvement and removes any ambiguity over the possibility of control over a candidate's format.

Now, as to the extent of the exemption from the equal-time requirement of section 315 of the Federal Communications Act, I joined with several of my colleagues on the Committee on Commerce in filing supplemental views to that committee's report, which includes an expression of my opinion on this issue. These views are to be found starting on page 81 of the Commerce Committee's report on S. 382—Senate report 92-96.

As indicated in those views, the justification for excepting Presidential and Vice Presidential candidates from the operation of the equal-time requirement of section 315 of the Federal Communications Act as now provided for in the pending amendment No. 308—Star Print—is that, contrary to its purpose, section 315 has inhibited broadcasters from offering free time and coverage to candidates. I agree that section 315 has had such an inhibiting effect. However, the proponents of amendment No. 308—Star Print—violate the principle of any sound logician by endeavoring to limit it to the particular offices of the President and Vice President, thereby inferring that the same inhibitions do not exist with respect to candidates for other Federal elective office. It is my view—and one in which several of my colleagues, including the Rules Committee, concur—that "what is good for the goose is good for the gander." In other words, if section 315 has produced the wrong result, then its inhibiting effect is not limited solely to Presidential campaigns. Therefore, in the interest of increasing the electorate's accessibility to candidates and issues, section 315 should not apply to any candidates for Federal office.

In hearings held before the Committee on Commerce this view that section 315 should not apply to any candidates for Federal office was shared by a number of witnesses. During those hearings the Deputy Attorney General, the Honorable Richard G. Kliendienst, stated, in part:

"We recommend total repeal, which would benefit candidates for other Federal offices as well as those for president and vice president." (Commerce Committee Hearings, Serial No. 92-6, at 516.)

Similarly, Dr. Frank Stanton, president of Columbia Broadcasting System, noted, in part, the following:

Central to any measures calculated to strengthen the electoral process must be the improvement of the quality and quantity of information provided to the public about the candidates and the issues. The repeal of section 315 is an important avenue to this end, since it would provide opportunities for greater contribution of free time by broadcasters and deeper treatment of the issues. (Commerce Committee Hearings, Serial No. 92-6, at 380.)

On this same point, Vincent T. Wasilewski, president of the National Association of Broadcasters, noted, in part, the following:

We believe the capricious operation of section 315, however, makes it impossible for broadcasters to perform this public service (providing time in political campaigns) responsibility.

Even the distinguished chairman of our Communications Subcommittee (Mr. PASTORE) conceded merit to the provision of extending the exemption from section 315 to all Federal elective offices. During a colloquy with the Deputy Attorney General, Mr. Kleindienst, the distinguished senior Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) noted, in part, the following:

"Now your argument is that we should include the office of, let's say, a Senator or a Congressman. I personally have no objection to that. The only trouble is that there has been some stiff resistance to that on the grounds that this is more or less a parochial situation, and does not fit in the same category as the offices of President and Vice President that have to appeal for the national networks rather than the local broadcasting station.

"I want to say at this juncture that your suggestion in regard to extending the repeal of section 315 should be given serious consideration, and it is not too farfetched at all. It is very much in line with what we have been thinking." (Commerce Committee Hearings, Serial No. 92-6, at 520.)

Mr. President, on this issue I will rest my case until an appropriate time when an amendment will be offered to extend the exemption from the equal time provisions of section 315 to all Federal elective offices. To quote the distinguished and knowledgeable chairman of our Communications Subcommittee (Mr. PASTORE), "extending the repeal of section 315 should be given serious consideration." The same logic, Mr. President, which persuaded the proponents of amendment No. 308—Star Print—to repeal this section of the Communications Act with respect to the office of President and Vice President is equally, if not more, persuasive in justifying provision of the same exemption with respect to candidates for election to the House of Representatives and to the U.S. Senate.

Second. The unduly restrictive separate spending limitations lacking interchangeability.

Mr. President, the next point which I wish to make concerning amendment No. 308—Star Print—deals with the matter of interchangeability of media spending limitations. The proponents of amendment No. 308—Star Print—again have walked us back to the position set forth in the bill, S. 382, as reported by our Committee on Commerce. They would have us reject out of hand the meritorious amendment made by the Committee on Rules which would permit the candidate the flexibility of choosing to spend his allowable limit in either the broadcast or the nonbroadcast media. If you will, Mr. President, this simply denies a candidate "freedom of choice" in how best to conduct his own campaign.

Such a restricted and compartmentalized proposal as is being proposed by the proponents of amendment No. 308—Star Print—simply constitutes one closing his eyes to reality. In effect, what it says is that in prior election campaigns candidate X was able to conduct his campaign within the respective spending limitation which the proponents propose from the broadcast and nonbroadcast media respectively. It totally disregards the very cold factor of reality that in some sectors of our country it is neither practicable nor feasible for a candidate to campaign with one media or the other.

As the distinguished senior Republican on the Committee on Commerce (Mr. Corron) pointed out during our hearings:

"There are certain areas where television just isn't worth the investment to a candidate because it doesn't have the listeners a candidate is most interested in reaching." (Commerce Committee Hearings, Serial No. 92-6, at 397.)

The distinguished senior Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. Corron) also rightly observed the following:

"I think there are some qualifications about this concept that television is the greatest media for candidates. Quite frankly, its potential depends somewhat on where the candidates live. There are many small States in this country. My State of New Hampshire is a good example. When I run for office, as much as I would like to utilize television, I find that I seldom use it." (Commerce Committee Hearings, Serial No. 92-6, at 416.)

Moreover, Mr. President, none other than the most distinguished and highly respected majority leader of the U.S. Senate (Mr. Mansfield) seems to share a similar view as I do concerning the need for interchangeability. For example, on March 15, 1971, when writing to Mr. William A. Merrick, president and General Manager of KBMN, Bozeman, Mont., the distinguished majority leader (Mr. Mansfield) noted, in part, the following:

"I believe that there should as well be some discretion to the candidate that would permit transferring from one media allocation to the other depending upon the individual needs of each candidate. I am hopeful that this provision will ultimately be incorporated into the bill prior to final enactment." (Commerce Committee Hearings, Serial No. 92-6, at 669.)

Again, in a letter of March 15th to Mr. Joseph S. Sample, Montana Television Network, Billings, Mont., the senior Senator from Montana (Mr. Mansfield) noted, in part, the following:

"In addition, I am hopeful the final version of the bill will contain the type of leeway and discretion to each candidate to permit the transfer of amounts from one category to another, depending upon individual judgment and needs of that candidate. I do believe that the overall limitations provided in the bill are adequate, but it is true that a challenger to an incumbent may justly and validly need to expend more of his campaign funds on name identification which can probably more validly be achieved through the electronic media. I would not want any bill with which I [sic. am] associated to be considered a bill for the protection of incumbents." (Emphasis supplied.) (Commerce Committee Hearings, Serial No. 92-6, at 670.)

Mr. President, in view of the above quoted stated position of our distinguished majority leader (Mr. Mansfield) I know that I and my other colleagues would greatly appreciate his support to an amendment which I am sure will be offered to provide this necessary flexibility to a candidate with respect to interchangeability of spending on the broadcast and nonbroadcast media.

Mr. President, what the proponents of amendment No. 308—Star Print—fail to recognize is that their amendment lacking interchangeability between the spending limits established for the respective media is more likely to restrict the availability of information to the electorate than it is to reduce campaign costs.

Amendment No. 308—Star Print—simply fails to recognize the dissimilarity of campaigns in one area of the country as contrasted to other areas of the country. As pointed out by Mr. Philip Stern when testifying before the Committee on Commerce:

"While TV and radio are the most effective way of reaching the voters, the conditions vary widely from one campaign to another, and they can also be the most inefficient and costly way of reaching the voters.

"What's more, even where TV is suitable and available, not all candidates choose to place the same reliance on it." (Commerce Committee Hearings, Serial No. 92-6, at 446.)

Mr. President, I feel very strongly about this issue and the need to provide for this suggested interchangeability. If media spending limitations are to be realistic, then it is incumbent upon the Congress, either to permit interchangeability between the two media limitations, or to devise an overall limitation whereby any given candidate would retain enough flexibility to best reach the eligible voters of his State or his district. We should not and we must not overstructure the political process by artificial, arbitrary, or categorical limitations.

I would only conclude by pointing out, Mr. President, that even the distinguished chairman of our Communications Subcommittee (Mr. Pastore) seems to recognize the necessity for at least some degree of interchangeability. During the course of hearings before our Commerce Committee, in a colloquy with Mr. Wasilewski, president of the National Association of Broadcasters, the following exchange occurred:

"Senator Pastore. We thought of that. What you would do in that particular case, you would transfer to the other area.

"Mr. Wasilewski. I think this ought to be a matter that is in the broad discretion of the candidate himself.

"Senator Pastore. You are absolutely right, because we have said this time and again here, especially during the testimony of some of the networks. * * *

"He can better spend his money in another way; that is, either by mailing or by billboards or however he wants to do it.

"We have been thinking of the idea that no more than 7 cents per vote, if that is the figure, and any candidate who does not use up to 7 cents can take the slack and transfer it to the other areas. * * * (Commerce Committee Hearings, Serial No. 92-6, at 478, 479.)

Mr. President, all of the foregoing evidence simply begs the question, Why not face reality and provide the necessary interchangeability?

The distinguished majority leader of the Senate (Mr. Mansfield) recognizes the need for this; the distinguished senior Republican on the Committee on Commerce (Mr. Corron) recognizes it; and the distinguished chairman of our Communications Subcommittee (Mr. Pastore) recognizes and acknowledges that there is at least merit to some degree of interchangeability. Why then not provide for it now? Why wait until we are functioning under this proposed law and then find out that we have been remiss in facing up to the reality of the election campaign process? A fair election campaign bill, yes, Mr. President, a biased and blindly restrictive campaign bill, no.

Third. The failure to prohibit unsecured debts by political candidates for services rendered by certain regulated industries.

Mr. President, the third area to which I would like to address myself concerns the amendment proposed by the distinguished minority leader (Mr. Scott) during his testimony before the Committee on Rules and Administration and which was adopted in the bill as reported by that committee, but which has been omitted from the pending amendment No. 308—Star Print. This concerns the matter of the extension of unsecured credit by certain Federally regulated industries to candidates for Federal office.

It is my understanding that at an appropriate time the distinguished senior Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. Scott) will offer an amendment to pending amendment No. 308—Star Print—which would prohibit the extension of such unsecured credit. Mr. President, I fully intend to support that amendment when it is offered. I firmly believe that it is an area of demonstrated abuse and potential future abuse which must be corrected.

As the distinguished minority leader (Mr. Scott) pointed out in his remarks in the Senate Chamber on July 23, 1971—see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, July 23, 1971, pages 26935-26943—the information compiled at his request by the General Accounting Office speaks for itself—over $2.1 million in outstanding airline bills and nearly $400,000 in outstanding telephone bills.

Mr. President, I and my other colleagues on the Committee on Commerce have been increasingly concerned over the financial situation of the airlines as well as the railroads. In view of this election campaigning "on-the-cuff" I now can foresee one of the reasons why some of our airlines are facing the financial problems they have today. As Mr. Stuart G. Tipton, president of the Air Transport Association, pointed out in his letter to the distinguished minority leader (Mr. SCOTT):

"This problem of payment for campaign-related transportation services is a matter of concern to the airlines. Consequently, the industry would welcome and support an amendment which would require political parties or candidates to provide security for payment of charges for air transportation." (See Rules Committee Hearings on S. 382, at 123)

Mr. President, if we fail to correct this blatant abuse of extending unsecured credit we simply leave the door open for political candidates to receive an involuntary contribution from transportation and communication companies. I think that the issue presented here is as simple and as clear cut as that.

Granted there are some who would disparage the proposed amendment and no doubt will vote against it on the grounds that it is directed by those of us on this side of the aisle to the detriment of our colleagues on the other side of the aisle. That, Mr. President, is a characterization and a judgment which those individuals will have to make. For my part, I feel very strongly that unless we act to close this "loophole" we will simply be attempting to hoodwink the electorate of this Nation.

Not only will we be deceiving the electorate, Mr. President, but in view of the demonstrated significant writeoff this means for the industry involved, we in the Senate of the United States will be contributing, albeit in a small way, to future Penn Central's and future Lockheed's, but in this case in the airline industry itself I, for one, have no desire to be a party to any such possible deception, abuse, or adverse impact which could compound the economic ills of these industries. I would simply hope that all of my colleagues in the Senate will view the issue in the same fashion and will at the appropriate time vote in an appropriate fashion to once and for all put an end to on-the-cuff election campaign financing.

Fourth. The failure to go the full measure and provide for an independent Federal Elections Commission.

Mr. President, my fourth area of principal concern is the failure of both pending amendment No. 308—Star Print—and S. 382, as reported by our Committee on Rules and Administration, to go the full measure by vesting in an independent Federal Elections Commission the responsibility of monitoring election campaigns. Once again this is an area in which an amendment to establish an independent Federal Elections Commission was offered in the deliberations on S. 382 by our Committee on Commerce. It was offered by the distinguished senior Republican of that committee (Mr. COTTON) on behalf of the distinguished senior Senator from Kansas (Mr. PEARSON) and the distinguished minority leader (Mr. SCOTT). Unfortunately, it was defeated by a motion to table, thereby completely evading the merits of the proposal. And, it is a meritorious proposal.

As pointed out by Dr. Herbert E. Alexander, director, Citizens Research Foundation, in his testimony before the Committee on Rules and Administration:

A succession of policy statements and reports of commission and task forces has recommended a single joint repository in the Federal Government to which political fund reports would be made. This was the recommendation of:

The President's Commission on Campaign Costs, Financing President Campaigns (1962);

The Committee on Economic Development, Financing a Better Election System (1968).

The Twentieth Century Fund Task Force, Electing Congress (1970).

The Association of the Bar of the City of New York, Congress and the Public Trust (1970).

All these groups contained individuals bringing varied and extensive experience in political finance and its study, and all proposed the establishment of a single agency to replace the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate as the repository of political fund reports. In 1966, and again in 1967, the Subcommittee on Elections of the House Administration Committee proposed that a Federal Elections Commission be established for this purpose. * * * (See Rules Committee Hearings on S. 382, at 146.)

Thus, Mr. President, for almost a decade we in the Congress have failed to face up to the need in this area by going the full measure with the establishment of an independent Federal Elections Commission. On the contrary, we have a somewhat faint-hearted proposal to go halfway and vest this responsibility in the Comptroller General of the United States.

But, Mr. President, the Comptroller General of the United States simply does not want this responsibility and he does not want it for valid reasons. Yet for some inexplicable reason some members seem bent and determined to charge him with the statutory responsibility whether he likes it or not.

Mr. President, as the Comptroller General of the United States, the Honorable Elmer B. Staats, pointed out in his letter of June 9 to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations (Mr. ELLENDER):

"We are strongly opposed to placing the responsibility for the administration of Federal campaign financing requirements in the Comptroller General.

"Because our relationship to the Congress closely resembles that of principal and agent, we especially wish to avoid being placed in the anomalous situation of having to investigate and report on our principal.

"* * * An alternative which we believe should be given serious consideration, would be the establishment of an independent, nonpartisan election commission to oversee Federal campaign spending." (See Rules Committee Hearings on S. 382, at 202.)

Mr. President, I cannot see how, if we act in a responsible manner, we in the Senate can turn our back on the position of the Comptroller General on this matter and blindly proceed ahead to vest him with a responsibility which he himself says he does not want and which he himself fears can only serve to undercut public confidence in his office. Quite frankly, I thought that one of the motivating forces behind the legislative proposal which we are now considering was to restore public credibility. Yet in total disregard of the learned opinion of the Comptroller General of the United States we are being asked to place in jeopardy the current confidence in his office.

Mr. President, we cannot and we must not do this. We have embarked upon a voyage to reform the election campaign process. Let us at least have the courage of our conviction, heed the counsel of the Comptroller General of the United States, and establish an independent Federal Elections Commission which, I understand, will be offered at an appropriate time as an amendment proposed by the distinguished Senator from Kansas (Mr. PEARSON).

Before leaving this particular issue, Mr. President, let me anticipate what I consider to be a specious constitutional argument against an independent Federal Elections Commission, which may be raised by some opponents. These opponents may say that under the Constitution the Congress is the sole judge of the elections and qualifications of office holders. Yet the establishment of the proposed independent Federal Elections Commission would not, in my opinion, derogate this authority. As a matter of fact, by letter dated April 8, 1971, to the chairman of the Committee on Commerce (Mr. MAGNUSON), Deputy Attorney General Kleindienst addressed this issue in the following manner:

"Finally, the Department is of the opinion that the establishment of an independent commission to administer the disclosure requirements would not constitute an unlawful delegation of legislative authority to the executive branch. Presently, reports and statements under the Federal Corrupt Practices Act (2 U.S.C. 244-246), and under the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act (2 U.S.C. 264) are filed with, and preserved by, the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate. The creation of an independent commission would not deprive either House of its constitutional authority under Article I, section 5, nor would it involve a delegation of such authority. Rather, it would merely permit each House better to exercise its authority by acting upon the most informed judgment." (Commerce Committee Hearings, Serial No. 92-6, at 556.)

Therefore, Mr. President, I respectfully urge all of my colleagues not to be misled by this "red herring," which may be raised during the course of the debate on the amendment to establish such an independent Federal Elections Commission.

Let me conclude on this point by quoting the following from an editorial appearing in the New York Times of April 27:

The GOP members are emphatically right in preferring an electoral commission with its own staff over the growing Democratic predisposition to leave enforcement to the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate.

We have come half way with proposals to vest this responsibility in the Comptroller General of the United States. Unfortunately, we have stopped short of attaining the ultimate goal. The creation of an independent Federal Elections Commission, responsible for full and comprehensive disclosure of campaign finances, is the best way to achieve our objective and to show the American public that we have the courage to be fair.

Fifth. The failure to provide a "fair labeling" disclosure, advising the general public of the availability of detailed copies of reports filed by political committees.

Mr. President, my fifth and final point concerns an amendment adopted by the Committee on Rules and Administration which has been omitted from pending amendment No. 308—Star Print. That amendment would provide that political committees soliciting funds shall notify the public in all ads that it is filing with the Comptroller General accounts which would be available from the Superintendent of Documents.

Mr. President, one of the principal thrusts of any campaign reform measure should be full and adequate public disclosure. Again I feel that we have accomplished this in part, but I also feel that there is room for improvement.

I see little reason for not putting the general public on notice as to how they can obtain a copy of reports required to be filed under the measure now under consideration. Unless such knowledge is disseminated, it seems to me that we are simply making a token gesture and developing a mass repository here in Washington, D.C., which may never become known to the general electorate.

As the distinguished Senator from Vermont (Mr. PROUTY) and his colleagues pointed out in supplemental views in the report of the Committee on Rules and Administration:

"We are convinced that such a notification will make absolutely certain that individuals living in remote areas of the country know the activities of political committees operating largely in Washington, D.C. Once such knowledge is readily available, we are confident that many existing committees will take full advantage of involving as many of their contributors as possible in the decision making process." (Senate Report 92-229, at 128.)

In summary, Mr. President, my principal areas of concern with pending amendment No. 308—Star Print—are as follows:

First. Inadequacy of amendment No. 308's—Star Print—partial exemption to the "equal time requirements" of section 315 of the Federal Communications Act;

Second. The unduly restrictive separate spending limitations lacking interchangeability;

Third. The failure to prohibit unsecured debts by political candidates for services rendered by certain regulated industries;

Fourth. The failure to go the full measure and provide for an independent Federal Elections Commission; and Fifth. The failure to provide a "fair labeling" disclosure advising the general public of the availability of detailed copies of reports filed by political committees.

In conclusion, Mr. President, the bill, S. 382—The Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971—has been substantially improved as a result of the deliberations of the Committee on Commerce and the Committee on Rules and Administration. All who contributed to this improvement are to be commended. Nevertheless, I personally feel that there remain areas which can be improved upon further.

Certainly, the very fact that we are here in the Chamber of the U.S. Senate, engaged in what I hope will be a constructive debate, is evidence of our serious intention to come forth with a meaningful piece of legislation. All I can ask is that we do not take the easy route, but rather that we face up to issues such as I have pointed out and take appropriate steps to remedy them.

The foregoing is by no means inclusive of all of my areas of concern. I shall have more to say on this matter at a subsequent appropriate time. I have labored too long and too hard, as has the distinguished chairman of our Subcommittee on Communications (Mr. PASSARONE) and those of our colleagues on Rules and Administration, to let this effort fall by the wayside. As the Latin poet, Horace, observed, "He has half the deed done, who has made a beginning." Mr. President, we have made a beginning. Now, let us finish the deed, so that when we finish we can justly and proudly point to our labors and say to the American electorate, "Here is the meaningful and responsible Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971."

SUSPENSION OF RULE RELATING TO CERTAIN NOMINATIONS

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that paragraph 6 of rule 38 of the standing rules of the Senate, relating to proceedings on nominations, be, and it is hereby suspended with respect to nominations unacted upon during the present session, and their status quo shall not be affected by the August 6 to September 8, 1971, recess of the first session of the 92d Congress.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN
ACT OF 1971

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 382) to promote fair practices in the conduct of election campaigns for Federal political offices, and for other purposes.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I yield myself 30 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, the bill we are considering today could well be one of the most important pieces of legislation this Congress will consider.

Modernization of our Federal election campaign laws is long overdue. Existing law is but a farce and the public knows it.

I have been trying ever since I came to the Senate in 1958 to encourage meaningful and workable laws to make certain that candidates for public office campaign in a manner consistent with the principles of our great democracy. All of us in Congress should realize that the public is fed up with campaign laws which in reality are nothing more than a farce.

The Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925 was the last major piece of legislation regulating campaigns for Federal office. It was not an effective law in 1925 and today even the effective parts of that act have become obsolete.

Last fall, I voted for S. 3637 which placed limitations on the amount of money candidates for Federal office could spend on radio and television. I voted for that bill because it represented a move by Congress in an area that had been neglected for too long; namely, the updating of laws relating to Federal elections. Following the 1970 campaign, all of us in Congress were faced with the question of whether we should override the President's veto of that bill. On November 23, I voted to sustain the President's veto of S. 3637. At that time, I stated that S. 3637 did not go far enough in accomplishing the job that needed to be done.

The veto of S. 3637 was in the best interest of the American public, because had S. 3637 been approved, I, for one, do not believe that the impetus for overall legislation would have been as great as it is today. History may record that the President's veto of S. 3637 marked the point in history when both the executive and legislative branches of the Federal Government decided that the time had come for complete and comprehensive reform of Federal campaign laws.

Mr. President, I hope and believe that everyone in this Chamber hopes that this year there will be enacted a comprehensive election reform act more sweeping in scope than any election law in this Nation's history. All of us have for years been attempting to put together the degree of interest and support necessary for passing an election reform act. I believe that we have now generated that support.

Mr. President, before I go into the details of the bill, let me at this point express the hope that the consideration of this measure does not become bogged down in partisan politics. All Americans have waited too long for effective and realistic reform of our election laws to have the consideration of that reform become nothing more than gainsmanship as to which political party can derive the greatest benefits or penalties from enactment of the law.

Let us from the beginning recognize that no political candidate nor political party should "do business as usual" following enactment of this law. The entire purpose of this legislation is to make the election process more effective for the American voter.

The whole purpose of this law is to restore public confidence in the election process.

The whole purpose of this legislation is to make certain that our democracy works.

Mr. President, we cannot afford to procrastinate. Democracy succeeds only where citizens have faith and trust in their government and its elected officials. The turbulent 1960's should have convinced us all that many of our fellow citizens have lost faith in our democratic process. Prompt enactment of S. 382 as amended can be the most effective method for restoring to the public the confidence necessary for democracy to work.

Now Mr. President, two Senate committees have thoroughly and carefully considered all aspects of S. 382. I am privileged to serve on both of those committees and I can assure you that our deliberations were long and thoughtful. I am certain that I speak for every member of both committees when I state that it is our intention to do everything that is humanly possible to see that during this session of this Congress there will be a Federal Elections Campaign Act of 1971.

While action on this important measure must be prompt, it is of such great importance that I sincerely hope Members will give all its provisions the same thoughtful and careful consideration on the Senate floor as was given by the two committees who have worked on the bill. I mention this fact, Mr. President, because you will recall that in 1967 this body passed S. 1880 which contained a modernization of disclosure provisions and tax incentives for political contributions. At that time, deliberations on the Senate floor lasted less than one day. The bill passed the Senate by unanimous vote, with few of us having a thorough understanding of what it contained. Consequently, it died a peaceful death because of inaction by the other body.

Mr. President, I worked long and hard with many of my colleagues on the Commerce Committee to strengthen S. 382 as originally introduced. In that committee we made substantial progress toward drafting an effective and meaningful piece of legislation. In all candor, we were not completely successful in our efforts to develop a strong bill because some of our colleagues on the Commerce Committee favored tabling all amendments to the bill not relating to title I.

As the ranking Republican member of the Committee on Rules and Administration, I continued the fight to see that the legislation was considered in its entirety. Other members on the Rules Committee agreed with me and we succeeded in developing a strong and sound approach to the whole subject of political campaigns for elections to Federal offices. The bill reported by the Rules Committee completely overhauls the laws regulating campaigns for Federal office. It is a strong, no nonsense bill that will restore the faith of the American public in the elections process.

It is a tough bill imposing penalties on political candidates who do not strictly adhere to its requirements.

It closes practically every single loophole in existing law.

The unregulated District of Columbia Political Committee is dead.

The myth that a candidate is not responsible for other committees which happen to support him is ended.

Mr. President, enactment of S. 382 will completely change political campaigns in America. The people will know all the facts about campaign financing. Moreover, candidates will be strictly limited on the amount of money they can spend on the communications media.

I am convinced, Mr. President, that this legislation is of such magnitude that all of us on the floor should understand its provisions before it is enacted. I intend to devote a considerable amount of time sharing with my colleagues all of the considerations that have gone into developing the bill we have before us.

BACKGROUND

Mr. President, at the present time there is simply no effective regulation of the election process for Federal officials. The only law that purports regulation of Federal elections is the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925 and the Hatch Act limiting the participation of Federal civil servants in politics. The basic law is the Federal Corrupt Practices Act some of which is codified in title 2 of the United States Code and the remainder is contained in title 18 of the United States Code which is the title containing criminal laws.

Mr. President, the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925 has probably been worse than having no law regulating Federal elections. It is full of loopholes and, in effect, provides neither the candidates nor the public with any guidance or information concerning the election process.

On the face it appears to require disclosure of campaign contributions and expenditures.

On its face it appears to limit individual contributions to $5,000.

On its face it appears to place an overall limit on the amount of money that candidates could spend in a campaign.

All of these, appearances of regulation, are an illusion. Campaign committees formed in the District of Columbia or any territory of the United States are not required to report contributions or expenditures made on the behalf of a candidate for Federal office. Individuals are not limited to $5,000 contributions because an individual can give $5,000 to many separate committees supporting the same candidate. There is no overall limitation on the amount that a candidate can spend in a campaign because committees working on the candidate's behalf are not affected by the overall limitation. In fact, the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925 is a sham. It is a dangerous sham because over the years it has created an illusion of regulation of the Federal elective process. As an illusion it has retarded meaningful reform in an area that particularly needs reform. It has provided an easy excuse for preserving the status quo.

During the 1960's Congress made some attempts to reform our election campaign laws. For the most part, those attempts resembled illusions more than reality because all the bills with the exception of S. 3637 in the last Congress were passed by only one body of the Congress.

In 1969, Congress did pass S. 3637 which would have limited campaign expenditures on radio and television. In vetoing that bill President Nixon stated, in part:

S. 3637 does not limit the overall cost of campaigning. It merely limits the amount that candidates can spend on radio and television. In doing so, it unfairly endangers freedom of discussion, discriminates against the broadcast media, favors the incumbent office holder over the office seeker and gives an unfair advantage to the famous.

The President called upon Congress to enact comprehensive and meaningful reform of our laws governing Federal elections.

Mr. President, had S. 3637 become law, there can be no question but that the pressure for meaningful overall effective reform would not have today existed.

Mr. President, S. 382 was considered in part by the Senate Commerce Committee and in its entirety by the Committee on Rules and Administration. I am convinced that history will judge the enactment of S. 382 as a most significant piece of legislation because it goes to the very heart of our democratic process. The importance of the bill compels me to discuss in detail the various titles of the bill, as reported by the Committee on Rules and Administration and in the Pastore amendment.

TITLE I—LIMITATIONS ON CAMPAIGN COSTS

Mr. President, all elected public officials are keenly aware of the fact that political campaigns cost more today than they did in the past. Some have argued that the communications media is the primary reason that campaign costs have increased. Quite frankly, there is no clear evidence to substantiate this fact. It should be noted that enactment of S. 382 as amended will provide us with detailed facts and figures concerning all campaign spending. Title III of the bill calls for complete and full disclosure of all expenditures.

Title I was extensively considered by the Senate Commerce Committee. However, numerous witnesses who appeared before the Rules and Administration Committee contributed valuable testimony relating to the provisions of title I. Recognizing the interrelationship between title I and the other titles of the bill, the committee carefully considered all of the provisions contained in title I.

In general, title I represents an effort to lower campaign expenditures. This is an admirable goal with which everyone can agree. Differences arise in determining which is the best method for lowering campaign costs without depriving the voter of the opportunity of making an intelligent choice. This latter consideration is particularly important if we are to insure against enacting legislation which favors incumbent officeholders who are generally better known and better able to "make news." We believe that title I, as amended, represents an effective and realistic way for lowering campaign costs. There are four distinct elements that are designed to lower the cost of political campaigns:

First. Repeal of the equal time requirements of section 315 of the Federal Communications Act in order to encourage broadcasters to provide additional free time to all Federal candidates.

Second. The requirement that the communications media charge political candidates at the "lowest unit rate."

Third. Limiting the reduced rate to 45 days preceding a primary election and 60 days preceding a general election, thereby encouraging shorter campaigns.

Fourth. Limiting candidates' expenditures on the communications media while preserving campaign flexibility.

SECTION 315 EXEMPTIONS

Mr. President, both committees heard considerable testimony from broadcasters to the effect that the equal time requirement of section 315 of the Federal Communications Act inhibits broadcasters from providing political candidates with free time. Under the "equal time requirement" if a broadcaster grants one candidate free time, he must by law provide all other candidates for the same office with precisely the same amount of time. In most elections there are only two or three serious candidates. The views of those serious candidates are seldom heard on free radio or television time because a number of fringe candidates or potential candidates are waiting in the wings to demand precisely the same amount of time given to serious candidates. The net result of the equal time requirement has been "no time offered."

The Senate Commerce Committee recognized the inhibiting effects of the equal-time requirement of section 315. The bill as reported from that committee repeals the equal time provision but only for presidential and vice presidential candidates. Testimony before both committees clearly show that the exemption should extend to all candidates for Federal office. In his testimony before the Rules Committee, Deputy Attorney General Richard Kleindienst urged the committee to extend the exemption. Let me quote from his testimony:

We agree that section 315 has produced the wrong results, but these are not limited to presidential and vice-presidential candidates. They are equally applicable to candidates for other Federal offices. Every argument supporting limited repeal supports total repeal. The fairness doctrine enforced by the Federal Communications Commission will afford all Federal candidates access to broadcasting facilities on an equitable basis. We urge total repeal of section 315.

The president of the Mutual Broadcasting System, Mr. Victor Diehm, supported the Deputy Attorney General's position when he testified as follows:

By its present language S. 382 would repeal the equal opportunity provision of section 315 of the Communications Act for presidential and vice-presidential candidates. Extension of this policy to all Federal office seekers would permit coverage of all serious candidates to a much greater extent than is now possible.

It should be pointed out that the public interest standard and all other applicable considerations bearing on a broadcast licensee's stewardship of the airways always remain in full force. Abuse, if it should occur, could be readily redressed.

Stations freed from the threat of great swarms of candidates appearing for a variety of reasons would be able to concentrate coverage on a bona fide candidate to the benefit of the public.

While I feel complete repeal of this ill-named equal opportunity section of the Communications Act would be appropriate, certainly it should be removed at least for those offices with which this legislation deals—the Federal offices.

Mr. President, the Committee on Rules and Administration also heard testimony from the president of the North Carolina Association of Broadcasters, Mr. Richard Barron, reemphasizing the need for repealing the equal time requirements for all Federal candidates:

First, we agree with the provisions of the bill that would call for the repeal of section 315(a) of the Federal Communications Act to delete the equal time requirement for presidential and vice-presidential candidates.

We recommend, however, that the bills be expanded in this regard so as to delete the equal time requirements for all candidates.

We agree with Deputy Attorney General Richard G. Kleindienst in his testimony of March 31 that section 315 "Contrary to its purposes, has had the effects of discouraging broadcasters from offering free time and coverage."

This is also in accord with Dr. Frank Stanton of CBS when he stated that "Because section 315 requires equal time for every candidate for an office, however insignificant or frivolous his candidacy, the practical effect of the law has been to deny free broadcast time to major candidates or to force free time to be shared with fringe candidates."

Therefore, we recommend the repeal of section 315(a) and its equal time requirements for all candidates.

Mr. President, the following considerations convinced the Rules Committee that the equal time requirement should be removed for all Federal candidates.

Free time if given to political candidates would reduce the costs of campaigns.

Broadcasters have been unanimous in claiming that the equal time requirements of section 315 inhibit them from providing free time.

The FCC studies confirm the fact that very little free time is provided.

Consequently, incumbents who tend to be better known and have an ability to "make news" are presently in a much better position than nonincumbents.

Therefore, the Rules Committee removed the equal-time requirement for all Federal candidates.

Mr. President, this brings me to the next three features which are designed to cut the cost of political campaigns. As I have stated we are all in agreement that political campaigns are too expensive. In many ways I have sympathy with the proposal put forth by the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan

(Mr. HART). At various times, he has suggested that campaigns for Federal office should be financed by the Federal Government. His idea is to remove all private money from political campaigns. On the face of it his proposal has considerable merit, but under close examination it becomes clear that that route would serve only to favor incumbents.

Did the presiding officer know that in the Congress of the United States since 1940 over 93 percent of the incumbents who have run for reelection have achieved their goal? I suggest that the only thing 100 percent Federal financing of campaigns would accomplish would be to have 100 percent of the incumbents seeking reelection achieve their goal. Such a result would further increase the lack of confidence that the public has in our democratic society.

It is interesting to note, Mr. President, that some other methods for decreasing the costs of political campaigns run the same risk of encouraging the reelection of incumbents in perpetuity. I shall shortly discuss those problems when I deal with spending limitations. Before then, however, I would like to discuss two measures taken by both committees which are designed to reduce costs inherent in a political campaign.

REDUCED MEDIA CHARGES

Mr. President, the Rules Committee retained those parts of the bill reported by the Senate Commerce Committee requiring the communications media to charge political candidates at the "lowest unit rates." History has demonstrated that candidates for political office are charged more for the same amount of space or time than major advertisers. While we do not have any definitive facts as to the differences between "lowest unit rate" and the amount being charged political candidates, we are hopeful that an overall reduction in campaign costs will occur as a result of this legislation.

ENCOURAGEMENT OF SHORTER CAMPAIGNS

Second, Mr. President, the Rules Committee retained the provision added by the Senate Commerce Committee limiting the "lowest unit rate" requirement to 45 days preceding a primary election and 60 days preceding a general election. Everyone agrees that political campaigns tend to be too long. We are hopeful that the 45- and 60-day provisions will encourage shorter campaigns.

SPENDING LIMITATIONS

Mr. President, simplistic solutions often sound brave. However I am more concerned with the soundness of the limitation than how a limitation sounds at first hearing. I am concerned that the limitation enacted serve for all times and not merely to suit the specific needs perceived for the 1972 elections. I would hope, Mr. President, that all of us would place the welfare of democracy and the integrity of our elective process ahead of any partisan considerations.

I would hope, Mr. President, that we would be able to accept a spending limitation which, in fact, would limit expenditures without depriving the American public of the chance to hear all sides of a question in a political campaign.

I would hope, Mr. President, that we would avoid setting a rigid, overstructured spending limitation.

As we know, S. 382 as reported by the Senate Commerce Committee had separate but identical spending limitations on the amount of money a candidate could spend on the broadcast and non-broadcast communications media.

The Senate Commerce Committee report recognized the difficulties in having separate but identical spending limitations.

Some of the witnesses who testified before your committee urged there be one total limitation on all media spending with discretion left to the candidate to determine what amounts to spend on broadcast and non-broadcast advertising. There is merit to this contention especially since campaigns differ according to the personal style of a candidate and the area of the country in which the election is being held.

On the balance, however, your committee opted against such an approach. Television is unquestionably the most used media in political campaigns, and it has been the most significant contributor to the spiraling cost of these campaigns. If candidates were given complete discretion to spend on the use of this media your committee was fearful that in the closing months of a campaign the airwaves might become inundated with political broadcasts to the exclusion of entertainment and other public interest programs. (S. Report 92-96, p. 30).

Deputy Attorney General Richard Kleindienst in testimony before the Rules Committee addressed that particular reason in the following manner:

We think the economic facts of life in the broadcasting industry and the long-term self-interest of broadcasters will adequately protect the public from any real possibility of an inundation of the air by political advertisements. We also believe that compartmentalized spending limitations ignore differences in candidates and variances in media coverage capabilities and media rates throughout the Nation. Candidates should have the flexibility to structure their campaigns to produce the most efficient and effective communication with the electorate.

In all candor, Mr. President, it is extremely difficult to establish any limitation without having complete and accurate facts concerning existing campaign practices and expenditures. Under the present law, candidates are not required to disclose their exact expenditures. Consequently Congress has nothing upon which to base a realistic limitation. Nevertheless, we are convinced that some limitation is necessary in order to curb campaign costs.

In its deliberations the Commerce Committee did have before it some preliminary expenditure figures for radio and television during the 1970 campaign. Those figures indicated that had the separate broadcast spending limitation been in effect during the 1970 campaign, statewide candidates in nearly half of the States would have violated the law.

Those figures also indicated that the degree to which radio and television were used as a part of a campaign varied considerably from one State to another. I am convinced, Mr. President, that some times we erroneously assume that radio and television are the most important items in every single campaign. That assumption is simply not true. In some States the broadcast media may be the best method for informing voters about the issues in a campaign. In other States broadcast media may have no significance whatsoever.

In some States political candidates find that they must use out-of-State television stations to reach the voters in their State. In New Jersey and Delaware, for example, there is not a single television station. In my own State of Vermont we have but one television station which, by the way, has several times the number of viewers in Montreal, Quebec than it has in the State of Vermont. To reach over half of the State of Vermont it is necessary to purchase television time on broadcast stations in New York, Massachusetts, and Maine. Naturally, the rates charged by television stations have a relationship to the station's total number of viewers rather than the voters in any particular State.

As you know, Mr. President, the bill reported by the Senate Commerce Committee and the spending limitations contained in the substitute amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) have separate but identical limitations for broadcast and nonbroadcast communications media.

Mr. President, I am convinced that this artificial restructuring of political campaigns is very undesirable due to the great variety of campaign situations throughout the country. As you know, the members of the Rules Committee heard additional testimony which verified the fact that interchangeability was needed between the spending limitations in order to give candidates the maximum flexibility in tailoring a campaign to suit their particular needs. The overall intent of S. 382 is to restore the confidence of the American people in the election process. Unrealistic spending limitations for radio and television simply mean that some of the American people will be deprived of being fully informed about a candidate and the issues. This discrepancy is compounded by the fact that a limitation was based on nonbroadcast communications spending without having a single fact indicating how much candidates have spent on nonbroadcast media in the past.

We have no sure way of knowing whether candidates spend twice as much for newspaper advertisements as they do for television advertisements.

We have no detailed information concerning the amount of money candidates spend for billboard facilities. We have no detailed information about the amount of money that candidates spend for advertisements in magazines and other publications. Nevertheless, the bill as reported to this committee set a limitation on nonbroadcast spending of 5 cents times the resident population of voting age.

Mr. President, we were faced with the impossible task of guessing how much money is spent by political candidates in the nonbroadcast communications media. We were placed in this position because at present there is no effective disclosure law or agency to compile non-broadcast communications spending.

I believe that the Rules Committee amendment which, in effect, placed an overall spending limitation on communications media goes a long way toward insuring that an effective spending limitation is workable. However, we do want to emphasize that the information concerning spending patterns on the communications media is today very limited.

How much spending is enough to insure truly democratic elections and how much is too much are at this point in history impossible to determine. An even greater risk is inherent in making binding decisions for the future.

In examining campaign spending on television, Mr. President, we suspect that the report by the FCC on campaign spending in 1970 has considerable significance. In all candor, however, none of us at this time know what significance it has. For example, the FCC report indicated that total political spending for radio and television advertising reached $50.3 million including $2.7 million by minor parties. This represented an increase of 57 percent over the last comparable figure for 1966. Despite the increase the actual number of political broadcasting hours declined sharply to 7,535 from the 1966 total of 11,499 hours.

Mr. President, I can only conclude from that statistic that television time was more expensive in 1970 than 1966. As a matter of fact, it would seem to indicate that a political candidate could get nearly twice as much time for his dollar in 1966 than he could in 1970. Certainly this statistic seems to put to bed any doubts that might have existed as to whether or not the committee proposes a strict spending limitation.

Mr. President, we must not lose sight of the fact that S. 382 contemplates permanent legislation. It is not a bill enacted merely for the next election. A recent article in the June 10 edition of the Washington Post gives some indication as to the escalation of media advertising costs. In the Washington, D.C., area alone, media advertising costs rose 8.8 percent between April 1970 and April 1971. The article went on to point out that this was a smaller increase than the average 10.8 percent rise in media costs over the previous 5 years. Of all media costs, television rates rose the sharpest. Over the past 6 years in Washington, D.C., television rates rose 80.2 percent. This far outstrips any future adjustments which may be made in the formula as a result of the costs-of-living increase provision contained in the bill.

Reluctantly, I must conclude that for all practical purposes the lowest unit rate requirements contained in the bill seem meaningless.

Title I continues to be the only part of S. 382 which runs the risk of eroding rather than strengthening our democratic process.

I say this reluctantly because as compared with S. 3637 of the last Congress, title I is a much better piece of legislation.

The automatic cost-of-living increase provision applicable to the spending limitations was the result of an amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from Kentucky (Mr. Cook). To a considerable measure it insures that this limitation will not become obsolete in the years to come, although that inclusion is premised upon the assumption that media rates will increase no faster than does the general cost of living. I also commend the junior Senator from Kentucky in winning his fight to insure that the formula is based on the total population of voting age rather than on the number of voters who voted in the last election.

You will recall, Mr. President, that S. 3637 in the last Congress and S. 382 as originally introduced in this Congress tied the limitation formula to the historical fact that a certain number of people had voted in the previous election. There was no logic in that and the amendment by the junior Senator from Kentucky did represent a significant improvement in the bill.

TITLE II—CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENTS

Mr. President, I am somewhat amused and, quite frankly, disheartened by some of the press reports I read which suggest we are not in the process of developing the most comprehensive reform of laws regulating Federal elections since the founding of the Republic. Such reports are simply based on misinformation or lack of understanding. Some have suggested that the reports are simply politically motivated. Whatever their motivation, these reports are doing a disservice to the American public, because there is far more to this legislation than a limitation provision on how much a candidate can spend for radio and television in order to get his message across.

Title II of this bill makes a number of substantive amendments to the criminal laws regulating our election process. As you know, Mr. President, corporations, labor unions, and banks are prohibited from making contributions to candidates for Federal office. The purpose of the prohibition is to protect the integrity of the election process. Naturally, effective enforcement of this prohibition has been difficult because of the lack of effective disclosure requirements.

The Rules Committee carefully examined all of the criminal code provisions relating to Federal elections. A number of changes were made in existing law which will significantly help restore public confidence.

Specifically the committee amended the criminal code with respect to the following:

First. Made lawful bona fide bank loans to political candidates;

Second. Expanded the definition of political contribution and political expenditure;

Third. Eliminated unregulated political committees;

Fourth. Repealed the limitation on the amount of individual contributions;

Fifth. Eliminated the maximum limitation on the amount of money any one political committee can handle; and Sixth. Prohibited unsecured debts by political candidates for certain regulated industries.

BANK LOANS

First, Mr. President, in section 201 the definition of contribution and expenditure was modified so as to permit candidates for Federal office to obtain bona fide bank loans. Under the present law a bank is prohibited from making a contribution or expenditure to a political candidate. In the future, banks will continue to be prohibited from making contribution or expenditure to political candidates. However, the committee clarified the law so that ordinary bank loans could be obtained. The reason for this change is obvious. No one wants a Federal election law which, in effect, says that only the very wealthy can run for elective office. As a practical matter, it is often necessary for a candidate to borrow money in order to defray immediate and pressing campaign expenses. Under the present law, there was a real danger in permitting even bona fide loans to political candidates because in the absence of an effective disclosure law it would be very easy for a bank making a loan never to collect it. S. 382, as amended, has rigid and effective disclosure requirements. All bona fide loans made to political candidates must be reported. The candidate must continue to report his loan until it is fully repaid.

DEFINE CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

Second, Mr. President, it should be noted that the definitions of "contribution" and "expenditure" include "anything of value." This would mean that contributions in the form of facilities, equipment, supplies, personnel, advertising or personal or other services without a charge, or at a charge which is below the usual charge for such items, is considered as a contribution or expenditure to or on behalf of the candidate for Federal office. Since section 301 of title III contains an identical definition, all such donated services are not only subject to criminal code provisions but also must be disclosed under the provisions of title III.

ELIMINATION OF UNREGULATED POLITICAL COMMITTEES

Third, Mr. President, the Rules Committee eliminated the serious loophole in present law which has the effect of permitting political committees organized in the District of Columbia or U.S. territories to escape all provisions of the law. Specifically, the committee terminated the existence of the unregulated District of Columbia committee by adding the following definition of "State" to 18 U.S.C. 591:

"State" means each State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States.

CONTRIBUTION LIMITATIONS

Fourth, the Rules Committee carefully examined the desirability of having a limitation on individual contributions. The committee rejected placing a limitation on individual contributions for three reasons:

First. Such a limitation probably is unconstitutional;

Second. Such a limitation is completely unworkable; and Third. Full disclosure makes such a limitation unnecessary.

Prof. Ralph Winter, of Yale Law School, stated the following:

It is my judgment that the first amendment plainly prohibits the setting of a legal maximum on the political activities in which an individual may engage. This is the case whether or not the maximum is imposed in the name of equalizing opportunity or whether an actual discriminatory effect can be shown.

Even if such a limitation were constitutional, it clearly would be unworkable. Section 204 of S. 382, as originally introduced, would have limited individual contributions to an aggregate amount of $5,000, whether given directly or indirectly to a political candidate. Not only would the $5,000 limitation have invited evasion of the law by encouraging back-room cash contributions, but also it would have created a situation whereby both the contributor and the candidate could have inadvertently violated the law. Such a situation would arise whenever an individual gave $5,000 to a particular candidate and any additional money to an organization or committee, which in turn, made any contribution to the same candidate. Deputy Attorney General Richard G. Kleindienst, in testifying before the Rules Committee, succinctly summed up the problem:

Further, the proposed section would impose felony sanctions for aggregate contributions exceeding the limitation in any amount, and regardless of the intent of the contributor. In view of the perplexing array of political committees which solicit campaign contributions, inadvertent violations are likely and intentional violations may easily be made to appear inadvertent. Such a proscription would be virtually impossible for the Department to enforce and the public would be deluded if it believed otherwise.

Moreover, it was recognized that full and complete disclosure really solves the problem of large contributions. Under the new disclosure provisions contained in title II, the public will know exactly how a candidate's campaign is financed. Since the disclosure provisions require reports 15 days and 5 days before an election, the voter will be in a position to make a judgment at the polls concerning the effect of large individual contributions to a political candidate.

Recognizing that the present limitation on individual contributions is merely a sham, the Rules Committee adopted an amendment which would repeal 18 U.S.C. 608.

LIMITATIONS ON COMMITTEE RECEIPTS

Fifth, Mr. President, under the present law it is unlawful for any political committee to collect or expend more than $3 million. This 1925 requirement was also subject to easy evasion. National and interstate political committees simply created other committees, none of which received the limitation. As a practical matter, the national committees of both major political parties received and spent far in excess of $3 million. Since they also will be required to make full and complete disclosure, 18 U.S.C. 608 is repealed.

UNWARRANTED AND UNCOLLECTABLE DEBTS

Finally, a very significant change in title II is the committee amendment prohibiting airlines, telephone companies, and other federally regulated businesses from extending unsecured credit to political candidates. We were shocked to learn that these regulated industries have been unable to collect large sums of money from candidates for Federal office. The committee amendment insures that these corporations will not be placed in a situation of inadvertently making unlawful contributions to political candidates of what amounts to debt forgiveness. It also protects the public which uses the services of such regulated industries, for ultimately users must pay higher rates because of the bad debts.

TITLE III—PROVISIONS FOR FULL AND COMPLETE DISCLOSURE OF ALL POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS AND EXPENDITURES

Mr. President, a recent article in Parade magazine contained a headline "The Nation's Worst Scandal." The article concluded as follows:

As things now stand, large segments of the educated public are losing faith in the too high cost of democracy. They suspect that the oil lobby, the labor lobby, the doctors lobby, the postal lobby, the people with the money and the clout again and again exercise undue influence upon the Nation's legislators, confronting them time after time with a conflict of interest and an almost perennial debt of gratitude which must be paid off in special-interest legislation.

As I pointed out in the beginning of this statement:

Democracy succeeds only where citizens have faith and trust in their Government and its elected officials.

All the witnesses before the committee acknowledge that under the present law there is widespread dissatisfaction in the political process. Sidney H. Scheuer, the chairman of the National Committee for an Effective Congress, summarized some of the publicity which has created an atmosphere of distrust and lack of confidence in the democratic process:

In the 1970 campaign alone, countless newspapers and magazines appeared with such glaring headlines as: "Unseen Fund Raisers, Financing Lobbyists," "False Front Campaign Funds: How They Work," "Campaign Spending Violations Found."

It makes little difference that not all those stories concern clear-cut violations of the law, that many only demonstrate the enormous size of the loophole in that law. Each instance stokes the fires of public cynicism and the common suspicion of widespread wrongdoing. As a result, the reputation of politics and all politicians suffers.

The lack of accurate information concerning campaign financing generates this type of publicity. Every witness before the committee urged a change in the present law, which actually discourages disclosures. A respected Twentieth Century Fund Task Force on Financing Congressional Campaigns in its 1970 report entitled "Electing Congress—The Financial Dilemma" came to the following conclusion:

We believe that full public disclosure and publication of all campaign contributions and expenditures are the best disciplines available to make campaigns honest and fair.

If there were full public disclosure and publication of all campaign contributions and expenditures during a campaign, the voters themselves could better judge whether a candidate has spent too much. This policy would do more to protect the political system from unbridled spending than legal limits on the size of contributions and expenditures.

In this modern age, Mr. President, where mass communications have created an information rich public, the present ineffective disclosure laws have unwarranted secrecy. The lack of complete and full disclosure erodes competence in the entire elective process and if allowed to continue would only serve to generate pressures against our democratic form of government.

There are five basic considerations in developing a meaningful disclosure law:

First. Determining who are required to make periodic reports;

Second. Determining what such reports should include;

Third. Determining when such reports should be filed;

Fourth. Determining the agency of government entrusted with the responsibility for administering the disclosure law; and Fifth. Insuring the widest possible dissemination of reports made under the disclosure law.

WHO ARE REQUIRED TO MAKE PERIODIC REPORTS

On its face the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925 requires disclosure. However, we have pointed out that law is fraught with loopholes. Committees organized solely within a State supporting a particular candidate do not have to report. Committees organized in the District of Columbia or any U.S. territory are free from reporting. Consequently most contributions and expenditures in any political campaign go completely unreported.

Recognizing that only full and complete disclosure will restore the confidence of the American people, the committee requires every candidate and every committee supporting a candidate to file a report—section 304.

In addition individuals who make contributions or expenditures other than by contribution to a political committee or candidate must file a report if the contribution or expenditures exceeds $100—section 305. A specific provision is also included to require any business regulated by the Civil Aeronautics Board, the Federal Communications Commission, or the Interstate Commerce Commission to file a report if it extends a political candidate or political committee any credit.

WHAT REPORTS SHOULD INCLUDE

Mr. President, the Rules Committee included language in the bill requiring as comprehensive a report as possible. Candidates and committees must report in detail all contributions and expenditures. It was the committee's intention that committees supporting more than one candidate should itemize with specificity contributions made to each candidate.

Every committee is required to have a chairman and a treasurer. The treasurer has the duty of maintaining the names and addresses of each contributor of more than $100.

The Rules Committee was confident that candidates and committees would be able to work out procedures to insure that they would be able to provide the detailed information necessary under the act.

WHEN REPORTS SHOULD BE FILED

Mr. President, any disclosure law has very little effect on the election process if it is filed after elections. Therefore, the committee determined that reports should be filed on the 10th day of March, June, and September in each year. In election years there is the additional requirement that reports be filed 15 days prior to an election and again 5 days prior to an election. This provision is included so that the voters will be in a position to judge for themselves the method of financing a particular campaign. The committee fully realized the practical difficulties inherent in filing absolutely accurate reports of expenditures and contributions 15 days and 5 days preceding an election. In the heat of a political campaign, absolute accuracy is often impossible, yet the electorate is entitled to full and complete disclosure particularly just before an election. It is contemplated that all candidates and political committees will make every effort to provide as precise and realistic an estimate as possible if specific figures are not available.

In election years there is also the additional requirement that candidates and committees file a report on January 31. Generally a sufficient period of time will have passed between election day and January 31 to insure the absolute accuracy of this report.

The Rules Committee did entrust this responsibility with the Comptroller General of the United States in lieu of the Clerk of the House or Secretary of the Senate. This is an improvement over the original provisions of the bill. However, we doubt that it goes far enough in order to completely restore public confidence in the election process. The Comptroller General and the General Accounting Office are in the legislative branch of Government. Their prime responsibility is to the Congress of the United States.

In placing the Comptroller General in the position of administering a campaign disclosure law, we are placing upon him the impossible burden of deciding whether or not his "employers" have complied with the law. The integrity and thoroughness of the Comptroller General and the General Accounting Office is beyond question. We must consider that his effectiveness in conducting investigations and studies for individual Members of Congress could be impaired if he were placed into the position of questioning the completeness of a disclosure by a Member or a committee supporting a Member.

Mr. President, I am convinced that the establishment of an independent Federal Elections Commission insures the greatest public confidence. Naturally, the Comptroller General and the General Accounting Office could continue to provide the support and service necessary for carrying out the disclosure law. However, the creation of an independent commission would place policy decisions in a body isolated from employer-employee relationships.

WIDEST POSSIBLE DISSEMINATION OF REPORTS

Herbert Alexander, in testifying before the Committee, stated:

Public reporting of campaign and political finances consists of two elements: disclosure and publicity. Disclosure is only a first step; the larger purpose is to inform the public about sources of funds and categories of expenditures.

The Rules Committee attempted to insure the widest dissemination of the material obtained under the disclosure law. The candidate or political committee must not only file a report with the Attorney General but also with the clerk of the district court in his State or congressional district. The clerk of the district court is required to maintain the reports and make them available to the public—section 309. In addition, the Comptroller General is given the responsibility to prepare and publish annual reports and compilations. Those reports must include a breakdown of total contributions and expenditures reported by candidates, committees, and others. The total amount must be broken down into specific categories. Individual contributors giving the aggregate of more than $100 must be identified by name and address.

To further protect the public, the Rules Committee adopted an amendment which will require political committees soliciting contributions to carry the following notification letting the public know how to obtain a copy of the report they have filed.

In compliance with Federal law a report has been (or will be) filed with the Comptroller General of the United States showing a detailed account of our receipts and expenditures. A copy of that report is available at a charge from the Superintendent of Documents, U.S. Government Printing Office, Washington, D.C.

I am convinced that such a notification will make absolutely certain that individuals living in remote areas of the country know the activities of political committees operating largely in Washington, D.C. Once such knowledge is readily available, we are confident that many existing committees will take full advantage of involving as many of their contributors as possible in the decision-making process.

In conclusion, Mr. President, S. 382 as amended by the Rules Committee is a good bill. I urge all of my colleagues to support all of the measures contained in the bill as reported by the Rules Committee.

The amendments introduced Friday by Senator BAKER and me to amendment 308, introduced by Senator PASTORE as a complete substitute to S. 382, represent an attempt to restore some of the provisions contained in the bill reported by the Senate Rules Committee.

First, we believe that the Rules Committee was correct in exempting all Federal candidates from the equal time requirements in section 315(a) of the Federal Communications Act. Witness after witness testified that the equal-time requirements of section 315(a) are in effect "no time offered requirements," because broadcasters are inhibited from giving free time to any candidate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I yield myself an additional 10 minutes.

Amendment 308 by exempting presidential and vice-presidential campaigns from the equal time requirements recognizes the fact that section 315 has not worked in the interest of having an informed democracy. However, by not including all candidates for Federal office under the exemption, amendment 308 merely represents an effort to provide special protection for every incumbent Senator and Congressman. The American public deserves to expect more from this Congress than legislation designed to protect incumbents.

Our second amendment to amendment 308 would restore the interchangeability feature contained in the Rules Committee bill with respect to spending limitations. Again all the evidence warns against an arbitrary overstructuring of political campaigns by Congress unless Congress wants to deliberately increase the percentage of incumbents reelected to office. Is it not enough that since 1940, 93 percent of all incumbents for Federal office have been reelected?

We have given ourselves the franking privilege.

We have name recognition in our States or congressional districts.

We have the ability to make news headlines by our stand on the issues and the way we vote.

Now amendment 308 attempts to give us a further advantage by placing separate but identical limitation on broadcast and nonbroadcast communications media. It in effect is implying that a campaign in New Hampshire, Maine, or Wyoming is the same as a campaign in New York City, New Jersey, or California. Since campaigns in fact have very different requirements in different parts of the country, the Rules Committee correctly permitted the individual candidate to spend money on either broadcast or nonbroadcast communication media as long as he stayed within his overall limitations.

Our final amendment, Mr. President, restores the fair labeling provision contained in a Rules Committee bill.

Mr. President, disclosure of political contributions and expenditures is meaningless unless the American people are given the opportunity to easily obtain the facts. My amendment which was overwhelmingly adopted by the Rules Committee simply required political committees to place a notice on the material they used for soliciting contributions. That notice did two things.

First, it certified to the potential contributor that the political committee had complied with the Federal Disclosure Act. Second, it informed the potential contributor that he could purchase a copy of the report of contributions and expenditures from the Government Printing Office.

Mr. President, the American citizen should be entitled to this information. We should make certain the American citizen who wants to contribute to committees be given the opportunity to obtain the information about how the particular committee spends its money. I might point out, Mr. President, that long ago we protected stockholders in our Nation's businesses by requiring corporations to issue stockholders' reports. It is about time we afforded the same opportunity to those dedicated Americans who contribute money to political committees in the hopes that our democracy will more effectively work.

I support a number of other amendments to amendment 308 and I sincerely hope that when we get to consideration of this important bill we can amend amendment 308 so that it will reflect the same strength as the bill reported by the Rules Committee.

We should put partisan politics aside and follow the lead of the Rules Committee in supporting a comprehensive election reform bill. Let us not get sidetracked in a legislative battle of political gamesmanship.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, as the senior Republican member of the Committee on Commerce which initially considered the bill S. 382, I personally entertained some very grave reservations about many of its provisions. I still have many of these same concerns, notwithstanding the number of improvements made to it by the Committee on Rules and Administration.

I did join with my colleagues on the Committee on Commerce in ordering the bill S. 382 reported. I did so, however, filing individual views with the committee's report—see Senate Report No. 92-96 at 79.

In those individual views I stated that the principal objective of any legislative measure of this type should be fair and competitive elections, restoring the credibility of the elective process which has become so eroded in recent years in the eyes of the public. This still should be our primary objective, toward which we should strive in consideration of the pending bill and amendment No. 308.

It is my personal opinion that the principal means, if not the only means, by which this objective can be obtained realistically is through periodic public disclosure and publication of all campaign contributions and expenditures both before and after an election. It is my view that the American electorate is sufficiently sophisticated to render its own judgment based upon a full disclosure of such facts.

Mr. President, before getting into specific subject areas of the pending measure, I believe we would be well advised to briefly examine what motivated this legislation in the first place. As the distinguished Chairman of our Communications Subcommittee (Mr. PASTORE) indicated in his opening statement commencing hearings on S. 382 before our Committee on Commerce last March, it is "... the problem of excessively high campaign costs." (See Commerce Committee hearings Serial No. 91-6 at 151.) But, Mr. President, are campaign costs in fact excessive? I believe it is well to note that there are some highly respected individuals who hold the opinion that such costs are not excessive.

For example, Ralph K. Winter, Jr., Esq., professor of law at Yale University Law School and special consultant to the Subcommittee on Separation of Powers of the Senate Committee on Judiciary, expressed some skepticism on the allegation that election campaign costs are excessive. In an article entitled "Money, Politics and the First Amendment" which was printed by the American Enterprise Institute for Public Policy Research under the title "Campaign Finances—Two Views of the Political and Constitutional Implications", Professor Winter makes the following observation:

There is a powerful urge to "do something" about political campaigns and the costs they impose on those running for office. There are proposals to limit spending generally, to limit amounts spent on the broadcast media, to "tighten up" reporting laws, to require the media to "donate" time or sell it at reduced rates, to do away with "equal time" rules in some elections, to use tax revenues to pay part of campaign costs, et cetera. Rarely are these proposals opposed on the general grounds that campaigns should be free of regulation as a matter of democratic principle, even though that is an argument worthy of attention by those who wish to maintain the open political process contemplated by the First Amendment. Instead, they are opposed as unworkable, or insufficiently comprehensive, or the like, and are met with counter-proposals involving yet other forms of regulation. There is thus a widespread consensus—if not assumption—that some regulation of campaign spending is not only desirable but necessary.

I am skeptical about this consensus, and for a number of reasons. For one, all of the rhetoric about escalating campaign costs has taken the issue out of perspective. The cost of television time, for example, is the target of accusing fingers in discussions of campaign costs. Money spent on television, however, is a relatively open expenditure. An increase there does not necessarily reflect a significant increase in total campaign expenditures, for similar sums may well have been spent in the past but in a fashion which permitted concealment. Inflation, moreover, necessarily distorts our view of campaign expenses. For all of the widespread belief that campaign costs are escalating, political expenditures between 1952 and 1968 in fact declined relative to the gross national product. That fact alone casts doubt about the validity of the claims that further regulation is needed.

Similarly, Dr. Herbert Alexander, director of the Citizens Research Foundation, noted the following:

But political costs need to be considered in perspective. Considered in the aggregate, politics is not overpriced. It is under-financed. $300 million is just about one-tenth of one per cent of the amounts spent by governments at all levels ($282.6 billion in fiscal 1968), and that is what politics is all about, gaining control of governments to decide policies on, among other things, how money will be spent. $300 million is hardly more than the amount spent in 1968 by the largest commercial advertiser in the United States, which corporation, according to Advertising Age, had a $270 million advertising budget in 1968. (Commerce Committee hearings Serial No. 92-5 at 637)

Recently Dr. Alexander had published a book entitled "Financing the 1968 Election." In that book there appears a table—1-3—listing direct campaign expenditures by national-level presidential and party committees for general elections, 1912-1968. A cursory examination of that table would seem to support the contention that there has been a substantial increase in campaign costs. However, I took the time to have those figures transposed into constant 1968 dollars, and the results viewed in this common denominator support the skepticisms of Professor Winter and others concerning excessive campaign costs. For example, bearing in mind that for 1968 the table indicates a cost of $44.2 million, the 1928 figure of $11.6 million is equivalent to $23.5 million in 1968; and the 1936 expenditure of $14.1 million is $35.4 million in 1968 dollars. Thus, in over 30 years, from 1936 to 1968, based upon constant 1968 dollars, the cost increase has been slightly less than $9 million. Mr. President, can we in all honesty say, therefore, that election campaign costs are excessive?

This only serves to support what I have said all along, Mr. President, that the legislation that we are considering here today is responsive to not excessive campaign costs, but rather a prevailing view held by the American public that there should be some law limiting the total amount of money that can be spent for or by a candidate in his campaign for public office. All I am saying is let us not set up any "straw man" such as excessive campaign costs in our consideration of the pending measure.

To further place in proper perspective the consideration of S. 382, let us also keep in mind the following two other observations made by Professor Winter:

Limiting campaign expenditures, therefore, is hardly a technique that will equalize the influence of special interest groups. Quite the contrary, it is fully designed and intended to increase the power of some special groups at the expense of others.

Many of the supporters of limitations on campaign expenditures and contributions style themselves as vigorous defenders of First Amendment rights. It is thus surprising to find that of the many problems raised by such legislation, the free speech issue is the least mentioned. A limit on the amount an individual may contribute to a political campaign is a limit on the amount of political activity in which he may engage. A limit on what a candidate may spend is a limit on his political speech as well as on the political speech of those who can no longer effectively contribute money to his campaign. In all of the debate surrounding the First Amendment, one point is agreed upon by everyone: no matter what else the rights of free speech and association do they protect explicit political activity. But limitations on campaign spending and contributing expressly set a maximum on the political activity in which persons may engage.

Mr. President, having at least tried to place the issue in some proper perspective, I now would like to turn to some of my principal concerns with respect to the pending Amendment No. 308 proposed by the distinguished senior Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) and others.

INTERCHANGEABILITY OF MEDIA SPENDING LIMITATIONS

Amendment No. 308 is, in effect, the media spending limitations as contained in the bill reported with amendments by our Committee on Commerce. It provides for a spending limitation of 5 cents multiplied by the estimate of resident population of voting age for such office with respect to each the broadcast media and the nonbroadcast media. It makes no provision whatsoever to allow a candidate some flexibility to spend this amount of money in one media or the other. In other words, he has 5 cents per potential voter as a ceiling on what he can spend on the broadcast media and 5 cents per potential voter for what he can spend on the nonbroadcast media. It totally regards situations such as prevail in my own State of New Hampshire where the broadcast media is not the most effective means of conducting an election campaign. I, for example, in order to insure full and comprehensive coverage, must go to a television broadcasting station in Boston, Mass., to obtain statewide coverage, but in doing so must pay a higher rate since I would be covering other States as well. I am aware that a similar situation prevails in other States. What, for example, do you do in a State like New Jersey which does not have any television stations? Or what is the junior Senator from Kentucky (Mr. COOK) to do in order to obtain effective broadcast coverage in his State?

Amendment No. 308, lacking as it does interchangeability of the spending limitation between the broadcast and nonbroadcast media, totally disregards this very basic problem. I personally feel that the Committee on Rules and Administration is to be commended inasmuch as it did recognize this problem. The bill as reported with amendments by that committee provided for interchangeability with respect to the two media.

Moreover, the desirability of providing some flexibility, be it through interchangeability or an overall limitation, has been recognized, I understand, by none other than our distinguished Majority Leader (Mr. MANSFIELD) in correspondence he included in his statement contained in hearings before our Committee on Commerce. And, I might add there was reason to believe that the distinguished chairman of our Communications Subcommittee was similarly so inclined at least to provide some degree of flexibility for interchangeability from broadcast to nonbroadcast media.

Mr. President, I fear that with the overly restrictive and inflexible spending limitation being proposed in Amendment No. 308 we will be doing a grave injustice under the color of campaign reform. Let us, therefore, now have the wisdom to recognize that the election campaign for every political office is not the same. I, therefore, urge all of my colleagues in the Senate to give this matter most serious consideration and at the appropriate time when an amendment is offered, provide candidates for political office a necessary and justified degree of flexibility with respect to the manner in which the candidate himself judges in which media his expenditures should be made.

DISCLOSURE RESPONSIBILITY

Second, Mr. President, I sincerely believe that we in the Senate should finally come to grips with this issue of who is to have the responsibility of monitoring election campaign expenditures and reports. In the past it has been the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate. With all due respect to both of those gentlemen, I find that to be a totally unacceptable mechanism. It is simply incongruous to me to expect an employee of the House and of the Senate to monitor individuals who, in effect, are their employers.

The Committee on Rules and Administration recognized this and amended S. 382 to place this responsibility in the Comptroller General of the United States. This solution, too, is highly suspect. In the first place, it is my understanding that the Comptroller General of the United States in correspondence to Members of the Senate has indicated that he does not want this job. In the second place, like the present system with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate, the Comptroller General feels—and rightly so in my opinion—that:

Because our relationship to the Congress closely resembles that of principal and agent we especially wish to avoid being placed in the anomalous situation of having to investigate and report on our principal. (Rules Committee hearings at 202)

Mr. President, there remains but one solution. That solution is to establish an independent Federal Elections Commission. I offered such an amendment in our Committee on Commerce on behalf of the distinguished senior Senator from Kansas (Mr. PEARSON) and the distinguished minority leader (Mr. SCOTT). Unfortunately the matter was never considered on its merits. It was defeated on a motion to table. Yet, this is a recommendation which has been made over the years to establish a single joint repository in the Federal Government to which political fund reports would be made. It was recommended in 1962 by the President's Commission on Campaign Costs—Financing Presidential Campaigns and in intervening years up to the 1970 report of the Twentieth Century Fund Task Force—Electing Congress. I believe, Mr. President, that it is high time that we heed the counsel of these various reports and act at an appropriate time when the senior Senator from Kansas (Mr. PEARSON) brings up his amendment to establish an independent Federal Elections Commission. Nothing to my mind would do more to establish credibility in the eyes of the public than to establish such a commission.

CAMPAIGN DEBTS

Thirdly, Mr. President, Amendment No. 308 deletes that amendment made by the Committee on Rules and Administration prohibiting unsecured debts by political candidates with respect to certain regulated industries. This was an amendment prompted by an investigation initiated by the distinguished minority leader (Mr. SCOTT) and one for which he is to be commended. I believe it would be a grievous injustice for industries such as the airlines facing the financial problems they do today to place them in further precarious position and to, in effect, require them to make involuntary campaign contributions. I further believe, Mr. President, that to condone this practice in future election campaigns would be to perpetrate a hoax on the American public and give them firm grounds for their current feeling that the election process lacks credibility.

Mr. President, as a Senator and more particularly, as a senior Republican Senator on the Committee on Commerce which has jurisdiction over industries affected by this practice, I want the record to show that when an amendment is offered to prohibit such practices, I shall vigorously support its adoption. And, I can see no other choice but to support it for my colleagues in the Senate unless, of course, they feel that such an abuse and such a hoax is meritorious. This, I believe, would constitute an extremely tenuous position, especially for those over the past several weeks who have opposed Government relief to Lockheed because of alleged prior mismanagement. We ourselves could rightly be accused of mismanagement if we fail to meet this issue raised by the distinguished minority leader (Mr. SCOTT) and stop once and for all this deplorable practice.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, in these my opening remarks at the beginning of the debate on S. 382, I have touched upon but three major areas of concern to me. I believe my remarks also provide insight into my feeling concerning many of the several other issues which will be raised during the course of our consideration of S. 382. On these other specific points, I will have more to say later.

The point is that expenditure ceilings, no matter how carefully determined, are almost certain to reflect some unfair discrimination and are almost impossible to enforce. The heart of the problem, in my opinion, is the need for rigidly enforced periodic disclosure so that the public may know who is spending, for whom, and how much.

I cannot escape the conviction that most of the other provisions of the bill create more problems than they solve.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE) and I have offered an amendment to the Pastore substitute which would establish a 3½ cents per voter subceiling for television advertisements of less than 5 minutes duration. I am gratified that our amendment has been endorsed by Newton Minow, former Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission and Chairman of the Commission on Campaign Costs in the Electronic Era, by George E. Gill, Executive Director of the Communications Workers of America and by Thomas Hoving for the National Citizens Committee for Broadcasting.

I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Minow's letter, Mr. Gill's letter, and Mr. Hoving's letter be printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LEIBMAN, WILLIAMS, BENNETT,
BAIRD AND MINOW,

Chicago, Ill., July 30, 1971.

Senator ADLAI E. STEVENSON,
Old Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR STEVENSON: I most enthusiastically encourage your efforts to strengthen S. 382 by your proposed Amendment No. 324. As I understand it, your Amendment would limit the amount of money which a candidate could spend for spot announcements on radio and television to 3½ cents a voter. This would be an important step in the right direction. I would hope that the Senate would go even further in the direction of taking all steps possible to discourage "spots" in political campaigns.

In Voters' Time, the report of the Twentieth Century Fund Commission on Campaign Costs in the Electronic Era, which I chaired, we pointed out that:

"All too often, we believe, political broadcasting makes use of advertising techniques more properly suited to the sale of a commercial product. Such political advertising has been marked by appeals to the emotions of the viewers or listeners rather than to their intellect; it succeeds often through the skillful editing of film or tape or through special lighting and sound effects."

Radio and television offer ideal ways to provide the voter with rational political discussion—and longer programs should be encouraged. I support your efforts to develop public policy in this direction and hope your colleagues will join you in thus advancing the public interest.

Cordially,

NEWTON N. MINOW.

COMMUNICATIONS WORKERS OF AMERICA,

Washington, D.C., August 2, 1971.

HON. ADLAI E. STEVENSON, III,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

MY DEAR SENATOR STEVENSON: The action you and Senator Hartke are taking which would limit the use of television spot commercials in political campaigns is certainly valid, and deserves the consideration of every member of the Senate.

In my testimony before the Senate Subcommittee on Communications I mentioned these spots in the following way:

"In the battle of the 30-second and 60-second spots, when image maker fights it out with image maker, glibness can overpower perceptiveness."

We know that no perceptive discussion of any issue can be brought before the voters in a 30-second or 60-second spot.

I also mentioned that "if there is one thing that will cut through the phonyness of the 30 and 60-second commercial—of the spurious slogan and the image maker's gimmick—it is debates."

The Communications Workers of America has been supporting the effort to obtain legislation permitting debates between the major candidates for President and Vice President and supports the suspension of Section 315 for this purpose.

The amendment you and Senator Hartke are offering is an additional step to eliminate spuriousness in campaign advertising, and would improve the American political process.

Sincerely yours,

GEORGE E. GILL,
Executive Vice President.

NATIONAL CITIZENS
COMMITTEE FOR BROADCASTING,
Washington, D.C., August 2, 1971.

Senator ADLAI E. STEVENSON III,
United States Senate, Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR STEVENSON: We are writing to you with reference to your and Senator Hartke's Amendment 324 to S. 382 which would limit the use of political spot advertising. National Citizens Committee for Broadcasting (NCCB) strongly supports the principle embodied in this amendment.

The question of political spot advertising is extremely important as it has become a principal means of reaching voters. Yet political spots (defined as TV spot commercials of less than five minutes' duration) lend themselves to slick marketing techniques and are singularly inappropriate for serious and informal discussion of political issues. Thus it has been NCCB's position that expenditures on such spots should be limited or disallowed altogether. While we support a limitation of 3½ cents out of a total of 5 cents per voter on political spots, we would like to see expenditures on these spots limited even further, say, to 20% of a candidate's total television expenditures.

In the production of these political spots, the so-called USP selling technique is often employed. This is where a Unique Selling Point is selected and dunned into the viewer so that hopefully he responds almost subconsciously when it comes time to vote. Of course, this technique is hardly an appropriate manner in which to present candidates and issues in an election campaign.

In addition, it should be noted that spot political announcements are not scheduled so that the viewer may plan to tune them in (or out). Rather, such announcements come on unexpectedly and seek to make an impression upon a relatively inattentive viewer. Furthermore, because of their short duration, political spots do not lend themselves to a serious presentation of the issues. They do, however, lend themselves to dramatic techniques and such commercial, product-oriented techniques as saturation campaigns, wherein a large number of spots are scheduled over a relatively short period before the election to impress upon the voter the desired choice.

The magnitude of the political spot announcement problem can be grasped when it is noted that according to a Federal Communications Commission study of political broadcasting expenditures released January 2, 1969, fully half of total network expenditures on political advertising in 1968 by both parties was for spot announcements.

In view of these considerations, NCCB strongly supports your amendment limiting expenditures on political spot advertising.

In closing, the National Citizens Committee for Broadcasting thanks you for requesting our comments on your amendment to the political advertising bill.

Sincerely,

THOMAS HOVING.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, the amendment will, therefore, be the pending question when the Senate returns to the consideration of the unfinished business on tomorrow.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills:

THE PAYMENT OF DUES TO THE INTERNATIONAL LABOR ORGANIZATION

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, tomorrow we shall be considering the conference report on an appropriation bill which cuts off the payment of dues to the International Labor Organization. The Senate, Mr. President, sent me abroad as an observer at their last meeting, in May, and I came to the conclusion that it would be unwise to withhold those dues, and indeed a regressive step, which could lead the organization into channels which could be very harmful to the interests of the United States, because it could result in dismantling activities and establishing others which would be very regressive in terms of the employer-labor-government aspect of the ILO, and the effort to establish labor standards which could help us in raising the labor standards of the whole world in terms of economic competition, and also in raising the issue of collective and free bargaining for their work in the Communist countries which are members of the ILO.

I believe that, while I opposed the previous cutting off of dues and so voted, nonetheless it may have had a good effect in bringing the organization around to a better understanding of our position, but at this point I think the effect will be exactly the contrary. This often happens with something that works out up to a point and beyond that point can be very harmful. I think that this is the situation here.

So on tomorrow, Mr. President, I shall oppose the adoption of the conference report.

So that Senators overnight may have an opportunity to read into the situation, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD my letter to my colleagues dated August 2, together with an analysis of the reasons why it would be unwise to withhold this contribution to the dues, my testimony before the Appropriations Committee on the appropriation, and an editorial published in the New York Times of July 22, 1971, on this subject.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. SENATE,

Washington, D.C. August 2, 1971.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: Within the next few days the Senate will be voting on the State, Justice, Commerce Appropriations Conference Report. I hope that the Senate will reject this Report not only because it fails to include the Ervin Amendment relating to the SABC, but also because it fails to include any funds for the International Labor Organization, as requested by the Administration and approved by the Senate.

Together with many others, I have been very concerned about our failure to pay our dues to the ILO for the last half of 1970; in my testimony before the Senate, Justice, and Commerce Subcommittee and my report to the Senate on June 21, 1971, a copy of which is enclosed, I explained why I believe it is in our national interest to resume our dues payments. Briefly, there have been a number of significant improvements in our relationship with the ILO during the past year. Anti-American propaganda has been sharply curtailed at ILO meetings; the basic principle of tripartism has been emphatically affirmed through the election of an employer delegate as the President of the annual conference and the refusal in the ILO to consider structural changes which would have weakened tripartism; the issue of communist violations of the Freedom of Association Convention has been faced squarely; and in general we have been accorded more consideration and respect within the organization.

While this improvement may well be in part attributable to our action in withholding our dues last year, I share the view of the Administration and the labor and employer members of the U.S. delegation that any further withholding of our dues would be extremely counterproductive for us and the ILO. Unless we resume payment of our dues, permanent cutbacks in programs and staff will have to be made, to the great detriment of the developing countries of the world to which the ILO is extremely important—frequently it is the only source of manpower training and technical assistance in the labor area for such countries. The inevitable result of such cutbacks would be hostility toward the U.S., and the increase in influence of the communists in the ILO.

Accordingly, I hope very much that you will join me in voting to reject the pending Conference Report. Should you desire any further information, please contact me or Mr. Eugene Mittelman, extension 52705.

With best wishes.

Sincerely,

JACOB K. JAVITS.

Mr. BUCKLEY submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to amendment No. 315, intended to be proposed to the bill (S. 382), supra.

AMENDMENT NO. 369

(Ordered to be printed and to lie on the table.)

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, on behalf of myself, Mr. ALLOTT, Mr. BENNETT, Mr. SCOTT, and Mr. WILLIAMS, I send to the desk for printing an amendment to S. 382, the "Federal Election Campaign Act of 1972."

It would provide that in national elections, all polls would remain open for at least 12 hours, and would close simultaneously.

By establishing a time for the simultaneous closing of all polls, this amendment would eliminate the possibility that predictions based on early returns from one area may affect election results in areas where the polls have not closed. There has been increasing concern that computer projections of election results by the electronic media influence the way many votes are cast, and cause people not to vote because they believe the outcome has already been decided.

Mr. President, solving this problem through a uniform closing time for all polls would be better than trying to restrict the flow of information about election returns. I do not think there is any constitutional question about the power of Congress to establish a uniform poll closing time. Article II, section 3, gives Congress the power to "determine the time or choosing the electors" for President and Vice President. Article I, section 4, gives Congress power to regulate the "time, place, and manner of holding" elections for Senators and Representatives, and the Supreme Court has indicated this may apply to presidential elections.

Under this amendment, in Federal elections all polls would close at the same Greenwich mean time across the Nation. They would close at 11 p.m. eastern standard time; 10 p.m. central standard time; 9 p.m. mountain standard time; 8 p.m. Pacific standard time; 7 p.m. Yukon standard time; 6 p.m. Alaska-Hawaii standard time; and 5 p.m. Bering standard time. Since this would require some polls to close earlier than they have in the past, all polls would be required to stay open at least 12 hours.

Mr. President, the idea of providing for a uniform poll closing time was endorsed by the National Governors Conference in 1968. I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the proposal and resolution of the Governors conference in that regard be included in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. President, I think this reform merits our consideration. It is relatively noncontroversial and would not be difficult to implement. I have chosen January 1, 1974, as the effective date for this legislation in order to give the States adequate time to enact implementing legislation.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A PROPOSAL—TO ESTABLISH A UNIFORM, SIMULTANEOUS, NATIONWIDE 24-HOUR VOTING DAY IN YEARS OF FEDERAL ELECTIONS

Voting is the most important function in a democracy. Yet, generally speaking, many of our election customs are a throwback to the days when it took hours and even days to get to the polling booth. By a determined avoidance of improvements we have done little to ease—and much to impede—the voting process.

Among our archaic election customs is adherence to Election Day itself, first designated in 1845, as "the Tuesday next after the first Monday in November." This day was chosen by Congress largely because public sentiment was against traveling on Sunday and it was necessary to allow an entire day and night for many voters to get to the polls.

A second anachronism in the electoral process is the system of widely divergent hours in which the polls are open across the country in federal elections. The polls in the West are open many hours after they are closed in the East. And opening and closing hours vary, not only within time zones, but also within individual states. The system grew without much design or direction as the nation expanded to the Pacific and through four time zones. In our own time we have seen the boundaries of electoral participation extended even further, from West Quoddy in Maine to Attu in Alaska, across six time zones.

In recent years technological progress—particularly in the area of computers and communications—has highlighted the archaic nature of our voting procedures. For example, polling places have traditionally closed early to allow time for counting the votes, but today ballots can be tabulated in a matter of seconds using computer systems. And modern communications permit speedy transmission of returns to collection centers.

Various proposals have been made to bring election day procedures into line with 20th century realities. One appears to meet the test of equity, and logic, and appears to present no constitutional problems: A common, simultaneous, nationwide, voting day of 24 hours length for federal elections. There is much to recommend that this day also be a national holiday.

The advantages of such a uniform voting period are many:

It would give every qualified voter in the nation the time and the opportunity to vote.

A uniform 24-hour voting day would provide all voters with the identical real-time hours in which to vote; and although the polls would open at different hours in different time zones, the voters of every community in the nation could vote at whatever local time of day or night that was most convenient for them.

It would relieve the pressure in urban and suburban voting districts where long, slow-moving waiting lines have discouraged many voters from casting ballots.

It would put an end to unsupported speculations that reports from one area of the country, with all its polls closed, can affect voting in another area where they are open.

Computers would enable a fast, accurate tally of the national vote immediately after the polls had closed, and thus do away with the confusion and uncertainty generated by delayed and partial returns.

No constitutional barrier exists to prevent the Congress from instituting a universal, 24-hour voting period. Indeed, Article I of the Constitution specifically gives the Congress the authority to make regulations concerning the holding of elections. Nor has anyone suggested that such a period would not be in the best interests of the voter himself. The only significant argument against it is made in terms of expense.

Against this argument, consider that the United States has the least impressive voting record in federal elections of any democracy in the world. In 1964, only 62 percent of eligible Americans cast a ballot for one of the Presidential candidates. In off-year congressional elections, the record is even worse—less than 50 percent of Americans over 21 vote. In Europe, on the other hand, where uniform, nationwide voting hours are common practice, the percentages range from 87 in Denmark to 72 in France. It is difficult to defend the position that the most affluent democracy with the sorriest voting record cannot afford to keep the polls open for a few additional hours every two years.

Principle aside, there is no real evidence to indicate that costs would rise unreasonably. In recent years election costs have been dramatically reduced in some states through the use of electronic voting systems. For example, Orange County in California spent $235,869 on the June 2, 1964 primary, at which 273,756 ballots were cast and tabulated without the electronic system. On General Election Day, 1964, Orange County used an electronic system encompassing both the voting and counting. The cost, with 416,136 votes cast, was $118,428. The saving here was $117,441—cutting the bill in half, even without allowing for the greatly increased number of votes cast. Actually, the cost per ballot cast declined by over two-thirds, from 90 cents to 28 cents.

Looking ahead, we can anticipate additional savings through the use of the instruments and techniques which science has made possible. In addition, urban polling places may be able to operate on a more efficient basis when voting is spread over a 24-hour period, while polling places in small communities can close after the last registered voter has cast his ballot.

The need for election reforms in many areas is urgent: the Presidential campaign period is too long; residency requirements prevent millions of citizens in our mobile population from casting a vote even in Presidential elections; much of the apparatus we use for registering and counting votes was contrived for another age.

But electoral procedures must be brought into line with the realities of the 20th century. A start must be made. It is the conviction of this conference that a logical and proper place to begin is with the most serious consideration of a biennial national voting holiday during which the polls would be open across the nation for a uniform period of 24 hours.

A RESOLUTION

Whereas it is the sense of the National Governors Conference that the most serious consideration should be given to the proposition that in federal elections the electorate would benefit from the establishment of a "national voting holiday" during which the polls would be open across the nation for a uniform period of 24 hours—that is, regardless of time zone the polls would open simultaneously, and close simultaneously 24 hours later;

Be it resolved that the National Governors Conference forward to the President of the United States the respectful suggestion that he initiate a study, by whatever means he deems appropriate, of the feasibility of instituting a uniform, nationwide, 24-hour voting period for federal elections, and its designation as a biennial national holiday.

POWERPLANT SITING ACT OF 1971—AMENDMENT

AMENDMENT NO. 364

(Ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Commerce.)

FEDERAL POWER RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT ACT

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, the Nation's appetite for electric power has been doubling every 10 years—five times the rate of population growth—and current projections are that it will continue to grow at nearly this rate. Electricity is the cleanest form of energy at the point of consumption, but its generation and transmission already raise serious environmental and resource problems. These problems will get worse as electric consumption grows unless new technologies and new sources of energy are used.

Coal, our most abundant fossil fuel, is currently used to generate about half of our electric energy and even with the growth of nuclear power, coal will continue to be a major source of power. Unfortunately, its production and use raise serious problems. Coal production scars the landscape through heedless strip mining and subjects thousands of miners to both sudden and cumulative disaster through tragic accidents and the long-term ravages of black lung. Its use in generating electric power produces vast quantities of debilitating air pollutants—sulfur oxides, nitrogen oxides, particulates, and other pollutants such as traces of mercury—as well as mountains of solid waste—ash.

Oil used to generate electric power also generates air pollutants, although in lesser quantities. A key problem is that natural gas, our cleanest energy source, is in short supply. In some areas its use for electric power generation is being curtailed to conserve it for other uses.

As we learn more about the effects of various products of combustion new pollutants will undoubtedly be added to the list. Currently there is a debate among scientists as to whether the combustion of fossil fuels will heat up the earth due to increased carbon dioxide or cool it due to fine particulates.

Adams was a resident of Illinois for 65 years. He first moved to Champaign-Urbana in 1916 to become assistant professor at the University of Illinois, and was later chairman of the department of chemistry and chemical engineering at the University from 1926-1954. In 1957 he became research professor and then professor emeritus.

Born in Boston, a member of the distinguished Adams family of Massachusetts, Dr. Adams received his A.B., A.M., and Ph.D. degrees from Harvard. Early in his teaching career he taught organic chemistry at Harvard University and Radcliffe College. At the University of Illinois he was personal research director for 184 Ph.D. recipients, many of whom became distinguished members of the academic and industrial scientific communities.

During his long career, Dr. Adams and his students developed what were referred to as "innumerable methods of organic synthesis" and determined structures of synthetic and natural products. Many of his methods have had important industrial or medical applications.

Dr. Adams held important scientific posts during World War I and II. Following the latter he was scientific advisor to the U.S. Military Governments in Germany and Japan. Appointed by the President to serve from 1954-1960 as a Member of the National Science Board, the governing body of the National Science Foundation, Dr. Adams' breadth of experience in university and government scientific circles was invaluable in shaping the growth of the Foundation in its early years. (The Foundation was formed in 1950 to continue on a permanent, peacetime basis the successful government-university relationships which had been established during World War II to support basic research.)

Dr. Adams served as overseer of Harvard, a trustee of the Battelle Memorial Institute, and a member of the Illinois Board of Natural Resources and Conservation. He was elected a member of the National Academy of Sciences, 1929 (head of its chemistry section from 1938-41); president of the American Chemical Society in 1935 and its chairman from 1944-50; president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science in 1950.

Dr. Adams was recipient of the Priestley Medal of the American Chemical Society (1946), the Davy Medal of the Royal Society (1945), the Perkin Medal of the Society of Chemical Industry (1954). In 1965 he was presented the National Medal of Science by President Johnson as "the one recognized leader" in organic chemistry for many years.

Dr. Adams' wife—the former Lucile Wheeler—died in 1964. He is survived by a daughter, Mrs. William E. Ranz of Greensboro, Vermont, and four grandchildren.

U.S. COMMITMENT TO PAY DUES OWED TO ILO

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, the American assessment of membership dues to the International Labor Organization is now in arrears. Should these dues not be paid soon, this country will lose its voting rights and a major component of its voice in that international forum.

As Samuel de Palma, Assistant Secretary of State, recently testified before the Senate Appropriations Committee:

The Departments of State and Labor are convinced that, subject to a future review of the situation, it would better serve United States interests to maintain our membership, and that our influence and effectiveness in pursuit of our objectives within the Organization would be seriously impaired if we were to continue to withhold payment of our legally assessed dues of membership.

The Senate has seen fit to include this $7.8 million appropriation in the bill which has now come back to this Chamber without it. I do not intend to vote for this bill as it now stands and urge Senators to do likewise until the bill has been revised to include this important appropriation.

POSITION ON POLITICAL ADVERTISEMENTS BY WGN-TV, CHICAGO

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, WGN-TV in Chicago has long been at the forefront of the effort to improve the quality of political advertising. Under the outstanding leadership of Mr. Ward Quaal, WGN-TV has voluntarily refused to accept political advertisements less than 5 minutes in length. According to Broadcasting magazine, for July 26, 1971, Mr. Quaal intends to bring the issue before the National Association of Broadcasters later this year.

I commend Mr. Quaal for this highly constructive initiative and ask unanimous consent that the Broadcasting article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

QUAAL WANTS BAN ON POLITICAL SPOTS

A prominent Midwestern broadcaster has called on the National Association of Broadcasters to ban the use of 30- and 60-second spots by political candidates.

Ward L. Quaal, president of WGN Continental Broadcasting Co., said he wants the NAB TV and radio codes amended to prohibit stations from accepting any political statements that are less than five minutes in length in time for the 1972 election.

"I am fearful that unless such a plan is implemented," he told members of the San Diego Advertising Club last week, "we will have the same misunderstanding, distortion of issues and confusion" that occurred in the 1968 election campaign. Spot announcements by political candidates in 1968, Mr. Quaal said, "represented a pitiful reflection upon political leaders and a demonstration of total irresponsibility."

No candidate, Mr. Quaal said, can address himself adequately to his program in the course of a 30- or 60-second announcement. Also, he added, a candidate with heavy financial backing can saturate TV and radio in his area by buying spots.

"It is rather silly," Mr. Quaal said, "if we apply certain standards for shaving creams, dentifrices, gasoline, detergents, pharmaceutical products and intimate apparel and ignore an area which involves the election to office of the man who will lead this great Republic in the months and years to come and who is really the most powerful man on earth."

Mr. Quaal noted that he instituted this policy in 1952 at what is now Avco Broadcasting Corp., and in 1956 at the WGN Continental stations (WGN-AM-TV Chicago, KDAL-AM-TV Duluth, Minn., and KWGN-TV Denver).

Mr. Quaal's recommendation is not the first along these lines. A number of congressmen and senators, as well as political analysts, have expressed the view that 30- and 60-second spots should be banned in political campaigns. The latest was Senator Vance Hartke (D-Ind.) during the political-spending bill hearings by the Senate Communications Subcommittee last spring (BROADCASTING, March 8).

The subject is expected to come before the NAB's TV and radio code boards—the radio board on Sept. 21 in Denver; the TV board, Dec. 9-10 in Phoenix.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, is there further morning business?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there further morning business? If not, morning business is concluded.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON STATE-JUSTICE APPROPRIATION BILL—MODIFICATION OF UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, yesterday the Senate agreed to temporarily lay aside the pending business at 2 p.m. today for consideration of the conference report on H.R. 9272, the State, Justice, and Commerce Departments appropriation bill.

I ask unanimous consent that that time be changed, instead, to 4 p.m. today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. I further ask unanimous consent that when the conference report is laid before the Senate, the Senator from North Carolina (Mr. ERVIN) be recognized.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Chair lays before the Senate S. 382, which the clerk will report.

The second assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

Calendar No. 223 (S. 382), a bill to promote fair practices in the conduct of election campaigns for Federal political offices, and for other purposes.

The Senate resumed the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Kansas (Mr. PEARSON).

QUORUM CALL

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that the time not be taken out of either side.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Who yields time?

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I may be required to use, and I might at this time ask the Chair what the parliamentary situation is.

Is it true that we are now considering an amendment to the Pastore amendment No. 308 in the nature of a substitute?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not a substitute. It is an amendment to the substitute.

Mr. PEARSON. The question is, to be more precise, whether amendment No. 340, which I understand was laid before the Senate last night and was reported by the clerk, is an amendment in the second degree consistent with the unanimous-consent agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is an amendment in the first degree to the Pastore substitute.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. President, I shall not seek to identify election campaign financing problems, but only make reference to the fact that I was the principal cosponsor of S. 1, together with my distinguished colleague from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), who is now on the floor.

It is my feeling that S. 382, whether it be the predominant version of the Commerce Committee or of the Committee on Rules and Administration, can be a good bill, addressing itself to spending limitations, repeal of section 315, disclosure, and tax incentives for political contributions, seeking to broaden the base of participation in the democratic process.

All of those objectives will be provided in a good bill, if there is provision for enforcement and if it is enforced.

I think that necessitates precise procedures and an agency to act as a registrar, to set forth procedures, to conduct investigations as necessary, to provide for administration, and to do all these things without political pressures and without political influences.

The Commerce Committee version designated that agency to be the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, and the Committee on Rules and Administration bill provided that this function should be placed in the General Accounting Office.

The pending amendment provides for an independent agency, seeking to draw to this bill greater public confidence and independence not only from the Congress but from the Executive.

Mr. President, the Secretary of the Senate acts in an employee-employer relationship. The General Accounting Office operates in a principal-agency relationship, the GAO being an arm of the Senate or an arm of the Congress.

I make reference to the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of July 8 of this year, at page 24004, wherein was inserted a letter from the Director of the General Accounting Office to Senator MAGNUSON, chairman of the Senate Commerce Committee, setting forth first a recognition of the need for this sort of legislation, but further setting forth the nature of the General Accounting Office—the principal-agency relationship; how it needs, in order to be effective, to be an independent agency, and not be embroiled in partisanship issues or even partisanship criticisms.

I think then that if GAO were given this responsibility that not only would it be ineffective to this particular task, but it would reduce the effectiveness of other great and satisfactory roles which the GAO has performed in the last few years.

The pending amendment would create a five-man commission, with 10-year terms, staggered so a new commissioner would come aboard with the appointment of the President and with the advice and consent of the Senate, every 2 years. It would be composed of no more than three members from any one political party.

This would be done not to create a new bureaucracy, but to compile reports, file reports, establish procedures, and report any possible violations to the Justice Department.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEARSON. I will yield in just a moment to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania.

Let me say that in a conversation earlier this morning with the Senator from Rhode Island I was reminded of the constitutional rights and privileges and duties of the Congress itself. Nothing in this amendment would abrogate any of those rights, duties, and responsibilities.

Now I yield to the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCOTT. I thank the distinguished Senator from Kansas.

Mr. President, first of all I support the amendment. I have advocated the same concept based on my own experience in the Commerce Committee, when we have in the past considered campaign reform, and based on my experience and service in the Committee on Rules and Administration. It is essential that we have an independent agency. I congratulate the Senator for offering the amendment.

I think this is the way we establish that we really mean what we say. I remember a Member of the other body once who used to say: "Whenever we pass a law down here, we ought to add a line: 'By God, we mean it.'"

Now I think we have a good chance to show that Congress is wholly on the level in its desire to have campaign reform and to have an oversight by a truly independent commission. I do not think we ought to embarrass our own staff establishments on Capitol Hill by requiring them to pass judgment on us. I do not think we ought to turn it over to an agency which is bound by long association to be highly responsive to Congress, as is the General Accounting Office. I think we need a truly, genuinely independent commission.

One of these kneejerk columnists of the far left had the colossal gall, in his own particular imbecile way, to imply that I did not want a genuine bill. Now that man is not telling the truth. Moreover, he has not researched the record, and he is certainly not aware of my own consistent desire to have reform.

Heavens, I have put into the RECORD a statement of how much we owe, as well as how much the other party owes. My party has instituted and is instituting programs to pay off their indebtedness and has indicated that to the federally regulated agencies. I have listed how much my party owes and how much I myself owe. I work to pay off my own deficit. I do not owe now, I am glad to say, any money to federally regulated industries, but I owe a little to the few people who trusted me, and they will be paid.

I am not going to submit mildly or quietly to the imbecile types who, for the benefit of their own readership, will believe anything that some jackasses say; and therefore I believe the way to show that we mean business, the way to show that we are independent, the way to show that we do want a bill which works and one with teeth in it, is to adopt this kind of amendment. I propose strengthening it, and I ask the distinguished Senator from Kansas if he could approve an amendment which I submitted last night, on behalf of myself and Senator BAYH, to further strengthen the independence of this agency. That amendment, designated as No. 359, would be as follows:

On page 2, at lines 13 and 14, strike out "shall be appointed" and insert in lieu thereof the following: "shall be chosen from among persons who by reason of maturity, experience, and public service have attained a nationwide reputation for integrity, impartiality, and good judgment, are qualified to carry out the functions of the commission, and shall be appointed".

I would express the hope that the distinguished Senator from Kansas would accept it and agree to modify his amendment on those lines, so that we can make it crystal clear, to coin a phrase, that we intend this commission to be of the highest possible character.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point, before discussion takes place on the modification?

Mr. SCOTT. The Senator from Kansas has the floor.

Mr. PEARSON. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Could we in some way alleviate the suspicion that might arise? I am not accusing anyone of any ulterior motive at this point, because I will say very frankly, while I know the arguments against this amendment, I still feel personally amenable to it, as the Senator from Kansas knows. But as he spells it out, he specifies that no more than three Members shall be of the same party. I wonder if we could not agree to the amendment suggested by the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, together with my amendment making it a six-man commission, because you find, when you get five people, and you do not have them equally represented on both sides, by analogy to the ethics committee here and the situation in our own State of Rhode Island, when you get yourself into this idea of supervising elections and things of that kind, it is usually good to have an even split, and you need not worry over their lack of decision for the simple reason that if you get the caliber of people the Senator from Pennsylvania talks about, any abuses will be reported, and it removes that suspicion.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. President, speaking of the proposal of the Senator from Pennsylvania, I have no objection to his modification. It just makes clear what I hope the President would follow in making appointments, and what is the essential role of the Senate in advise and consent.

May I say to the Senator from Rhode Island that I gave some thought to his suggestion last night, reached independently of his suggestion. The setting up of a commission in most instances requires an odd number for decisionmaking, but here, to accentuate the bipartisan nature or nonpartisan nature, if you will, I would have no objection at all to making this a six-member commission.

What I seek to do, above everything else, is to find some source of independence from Congress, from the executive branch and from politics. If the Senator from Pennsylvania would so modify his amendment, by changing the word "five" to "six," I would be glad to accept both the suggestion of the Senator from Rhode Island and that of the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. President—

Mr. PASTORE. On our time.

Mr. PEARSON. Of course.

Mr. CANNON. I would just like to give a little background as to why we came up with the solution we did in the Rules Committee.

As Senators know, there was considerable support for the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate, on the theory that under the Constitution each House is the judge of the rights of its own Members to be seated.

Mr. PEARSON. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. And we heard testimony at some length from people who were interested and had some expertise on this subject. While a number of witnesses said they would prefer an independent elections commission, they thought the GAO was a good compromise. This was more or less the reason we went to the GAO, because the GAO has a history of being about as independent an agency as can possibly be found in Government. It was originally created in 1921 by the General Accounting Act, and it was vested with all the powers and duties of six auditors and the Comptroller of the Treasury. We, of course, have used it very extensively since that time.

The authority was expanded and enlarged by various acts of Congress, and the office has grown to the point that today it certainly has a full staff of trained auditors, investigators, and others who have the experience and the expertise to really do a job such as would be required here.

One of the reasons that I was not favorably inclined toward the independent commission is that to establish such a commission, that has a job only every 2 years, is really to set up another bureaucracy, such as, for a good example, the Subversive Activities Control Board—another way to spend the Government's money without giving anyone a job to do.

Obviously, the commission would have to expand during an election year, build up its staff, and be prepared to handle the matters relating to an election, and then, after the election year is over, they have nothing to do.

I realize the proposal would establish the Commissioners on a part-time, $100-a-day basis, but on that basis I do not think they would ever develop the technical expertise that would really be developed by the General Accounting Office. I certainly hate to see us—

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAMBRELL). The time of the Senator from Kansas has expired.

Mr. CANNON. We were operating on the time on this side of the aisle, and I will yield another 5 minutes. We were not operating on the time of the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That had not been made clear to the Chair. But we will proceed on the time of the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. CANNON. So, Mr. President, this is one of the reasons that we did not accept the proposal in the first instance.

The idea that there is an independent agency completely removed from politics is good. Theoretically, all of our independent agencies are removed from politics. They are made up with balance. But we all know the facts of life, and we know, for example, that the former chairman of the Republican National Committee is now chairman of one of these independent agencies, and, if the Democrats were in, the probabilities are that one of the agencies would be chaired by the former chairman of the Democratic National Committee.

So to say that they are completely removed from politics, in these appointive jobs, is not quite correct, and I do not know how we could ever get them completely removed.

As I say, I am quite reluctant to see us establish another bureaucracy that is going to cost the American taxpayer more than what we could do the job with through the General Accounting Office. That is my whole view on the matter.

Mr. PEARSON. Yes. I appreciate that comment and the rationale of the committee. It has great merit.

Before I respond to the comments of the Senator from Nevada, I wonder if I might ask unanimous consent to accept the modifications of the Senator from Pennsylvania and the Senator from Rhode Island, before we get the yeas and nays ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator may modify his amendment as a matter of right. There have been two modifications suggested; does the Senator propose both modifications?

Mr. PEARSON. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator send those modifications to the desk?

Mr. PASTORE. They are being prepared now.

Mr. CANNON. I wonder if the Senator would yield one further moment, on my time.

Mr. PEARSON. Yes, I am pleased to yield.

Mr. CANNON. I made the statement earlier that some of the witnesses who testified before our committee said they favored the separate commission, but that they felt a good compromise would be to compromise on the General Accounting Office. One of those was Deputy Attorney General Kleindienst, who said that while he favored the independent commission, he felt the GAO was a good compromise. Senator JORDAN testified to that same effect, Senator COOPER to the same effect, and Dr. Alexander, who has considerable expertise in this area, to the same effect. All have said that they think this is a good compromise, to go to the General Accounting Office. So I submit that for consideration.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. This is on my time, Mr. President.

First of all, I congratulate my colleague, who is the chairman of the subcommittee of the Committee on Rules and Administration.

I think he did what he thought was the right thing. There is no question at all that perhaps either way would be the proper way. This has been endorsed by the group known as Common Cause; this has been endorsed by the group known as the Committee for a More Effective Congress. It is a proposal that is very satisfactory or amenable to some Democrats on this side.

However, as I said yesterday, this is not to be a political instrument. There is no desire on the part of the Commerce Committee, no desire on the part of the senior Senator from Rhode Island, and no desire on the part of the Senator from Nevada to make this a game between Republicans and Democrats; because if it got to that point, I would no longer be interested.

I became involved in this very important subject because of what has been happening—the spiraling costs—and something needs to be done to bring this matter under control before we scandalize ourselves as an institution. So I think that, in the spirit of bipartisanship, we ought to go along with this amendment.

As I said before, we are not tied down to the pride of authorship. If anyone comes along with a suggestion that we feel will improve the bill, the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Nevada not only are willing to listen but also to abide.

It is in that spirit, Mr. President, that I shall vote for the modified amendment. That is the way I feel about it.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. President, I modify my amendment as proposed by the Senator from Pennsylvania, and modified further consistent with the proposal of the Senator from Rhode Island.

These modifications would contain certain language that deal with the personnel of this commission and would make it a six-man commission, with 12-year terms, staggered terms, appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified, and the clerk will read the modifications.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the modifications.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the modifications be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered; and, without objection, the modifications will be printed in the RECORD.

The modifications are as follows:

On page 2, line 12, strike "five" and insert in lieu thereof the word "six".

On page 2, line 18, after the words, "ten years," the following: "and one for a term of twelve years."

On page 2, line 20, strike the word "ten" and add the word "twelve."

On page 3, line 5, strike out "3" and insert "4."

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. President, I think I should respond to the Senator from Nevada, who made some very valid points in relation to this amendment.

I am as sensitive as he is about a new bureaucracy. I think it will be found that most of the body of this amendment seeks to address itself to that problem—a per diem arrangement for members of the commission, a requirement to use personnel of the Justice Department and the GAO when necessary.

If we are going to have a job to do, and additional work to do, it is just a matter of where the additional bureaucracy—there is no other word for it—is going to be. With respect to the General Accounting Office taking this over, I say to the Senator that Mr. Staats, in a letter to the chairman of the Commerce Committee and in another letter to me, of a more personal nature, has indicated his lack of desire—almost a plea—not to be asked to undertake this. So the question is whether we are going to have more bureaucracy in the General Accounting Office or whether we are going to have more bureaucracy in the office of the Secretary of the Senate or whether we are going to have an independent commission. I do not really envision this to be a large, unyielding body of men and people.

Whatever the cost, I think it can be justified in renewed confidence in the inevitable result of reform, which is essential in this field.

So, I am sympathetic to the points raised about the additional bureaucracy and the great possibilities and the great record of the General Accounting Office. I think it is most natural that the committee look in that direction. It is an agency which has served us so well that I do not know what we would have done without it in many fields of congressional effort. That is why I think one of the most persuasive arguments is the letter of Mr. Staats, indicating that he thinks that this additional assignment would diminish his independence and his authority to act.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter from Mr. John W. Gardner, chairman of Common Cause, dated July 26, 1971, and an editorial which was broadcast by Station WTOP on July 29 and July 30, 1971.

There being no objection, the letter and the editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMMON CAUSE,
Washington, D.C., July 26, 1971.

Hon. JAMES B. PEARSON,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR PEARSON: You have done a great service to the public in your proposal to amend S. 382 by establishing a federal elections commission. The amendment has the strong support of Common Cause.

The need for an independent commission should be self-evident. Effective enforcement of the new law will be a grave responsibility affecting political careers and party fortunes, and should not be assigned to an office that is associated with Congress or the political parties.

Assigning the responsibility to a registry in the Government Accounting Office is clearly inappropriate. The GAO performs delicate tasks for the Congress, tasks that require an easy relationship of trust and confidence. That relationship could not survive the controversies that would inevitably beset any enforcement agency presiding over campaign finance. The Comptroller General himself has argued that such a responsibility would place a crippling burden on his office.

An independent elections commission would stand on its own, bearing the full consequences of its decisions and rendering objective judgments on the facts of each case. It would be free from even the appearance of Congressional influence. No conflicting obligations would restrain it from diligently searching out violations of law and reporting those violations impartially. Because an independent elections commission would have greater stature than a registry in the GAO, its decisions on controversial issues would be more readily accepted. In the eyes of the public, the establishment of a new commission would dramatize the departure from past practice and lend credibility to Congress' announced willingness to open political campaigns to objective scrutiny.

With adequate enforcement such as you would provide, I believe that S.382 could be a landmark reform. Without adequate enforcement, it is likely to fall flat. For the sake of the campaign reform Congress has worked so hard to achieve and for the sake of public confidence in the political process, I hope your amendment is adopted.

Sincerely,

JOHN W. GARDNER,
Chairman.

A WTOP EDITORIAL

As Congress moves toward final bills on campaign finance, there's still a strong compulsion—especially in the House—to hide as much as possible about the sources of money in political campaigns. Congress must be pressured relentlessly to write a law that will reveal as much as possible.

The bill which the House elections subcommittee has favored contains an atrocious provision which would require only one public disclosure of contributions and expenditures, and that would come 45 days after an election. A fat lot of good that kind of disclosure would do!

The Senate's primary bill, on the other hand, would vastly improve the disclosure process, with four major reports of fund-raising activities filed every single year—including non-election years as well. That's the right direction.

In terms of policing and enforcing disclosure, the House is leaning toward a solution which is politically loaded. It would let the clerks of the House and Senate—political appointees both—continue to be watchdogs. We can't for a minute envision that such hired-hands would vigorously enforce the law against their political masters.

The Senate bill puts the whistle in the hands of the General Accounting Office, which would be an immense improvement. The GAO, at least, is once removed from the danger of political reprisals.

Far and away the best solution would be a new, independent, bipartisan Elections Commission, which also has the support of the President. We urge the Senate to lead the way by opting for such a Commission.

Big money in politics has created some big dangers for government in this country.

When that money is concealed, the danger is multiplied. As Senator Mondale noted recently, "It's often more revealing to know who a politician takes money from, than what he says in his speeches."

As showdown time approaches on campaign finance legislation, let disclosure—wide disclosure—be the key.

This was a WTOP Editorial . . . Norman Davis speaking for WTOP.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time, if I have any left.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

The Senator from Nevada has 5 minutes.

Mr. PEARSON. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment. I hope every Senator will raise his hand.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CANNON. I yield myself 3 minutes.

Mr. President, I want to associate myself with the remarks of the Senator from Rhode Island. We are anxious to try to get a bill. We have gone too long by marching up the hill and then going down the hill over the last few years, to try to get some meaningful bill on election reform, even to the extent of having a bill passed in this body by a vote of 86-to-0 and still not being able to get it through.

I think we all are interested in the same objective. I have explained the reasons why our committee went to the compromise position of the General Accounting Office. I still think it would be best, because it would cost less money, and it would result in one less bureaucratic agency than if we established a separate commission.

Of course, the expert witnesses to whom I referred testified that this was a good compromise. It was an acceptable compromise, so far as they were concerned. However, we did not get all the provisions out of my committee that I would like to see. I was voted down on a number of provisions in committee, and the bill came from the Rules Committee with a number of amendments that I would prefer not to have.

Again, I say that I am interested more in trying to get a bill that will give us some meaningful election reform, which we can get on the books, and then get on with our business.

So, Mr. President, under those circumstances, I am willing to accept the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, along with the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE).

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. PROUTY. I yield myself 3 minutes on the bill.

Mr. President, I had an amendment very similar to one which has been offered by the distinguished Senator from Kansas, and I was prepared to offer it before the Rules Committee; but I decided that this matter was of sufficient importance that it deserved wider publicity than would have been possible had we simply acted on it in the Rules Committee.

I commend the distinguished Senator from Kansas for offering the amendment, of which I am a cosponsor. I think the compromise which has been agreed to is highly commendable. It will go a long way to suggest to the general public that we are acting in a strictly non-partisan manner, and I hope we shall continue to do so on other amendments submitted.

I invite the attention of the distinguished Senator from Nevada to the last section of the amendment, which reads as follows—and I am referring now to his fear that we are creating a new bureaucracy:

"(1) In carrying out its responsibilities under this title, the Commission shall, to the fullest extent practicable, avail itself of the assistance, including personnel and facilities, of the General Accounting Office and the Department of Justice. The Comptroller General and the Attorney General are authorized to make available to the Commission such personnel, facilities, and other assistance, with or without reimbursement, as the Commission may request."

Mr. President, it seems to me that covers the situation clearly.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed by the Comptroller General to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, the distinguished Senator from Louisiana (Mr. ELLENDER). Let me quote one sentence from it:

We are strongly opposed to placing the responsibility for the administration of Federal campaign financing requirements in the Comptroller General.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D.C., June 9, 1971.

HON. ALLEN J. ELLENDER,
Chairman, Committee on Appropriations,
U.S. Senate

DEAR CHAIRMAN: This replies to your request for our views on the question of involving the Comptroller General in the reporting, disclosure, and investigative functions concerning federal campaign contributions and expenditures, as is proposed by S. 382, as amended by the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration.

We are strongly opposed to placing the responsibility for the administration of Federal campaign financing requirements in the Comptroller General. Our position, as we have stated in the past with regard to several bills, is that we should not be given the responsibility for audit, investigation, or enforcement in connection with Federal elections. We believe that the effectiveness of the Comptroller General and the General Accounting Office depends in large measure upon maintaining a reputation for independence and objectivity. Not only must we remain free from political influence, but we must zealously avoid being placed in a position in which we might be subject to criticism, whether justified or not, that our actions and decisions are prejudiced or influenced by political considerations. We are, therefore, apprehensive of any measure that might subject us to such criticism, the inevitable result of which would be a diminution of congressional and public confidence in our integrity and objectivity.

Because our relationship to the Congress closely resembles that of principal and agent, we especially wish to avoid being placed in the anomalous situation of having to investigate and report on our principal. Over the years, we have had frequent and recurring associations with the committees of the Congress and with many of the members of Congress acting in their individual capacity. Our relationship has been most harmonious, but we are quite concerned that it could be severely impaired were we required to investigate and report on members of the Congress concerning campaign funds and expenditures.

We agree that there is a need for new legislation relating to the disclosure and financing of Federal election campaign costs, but we strongly recommend that the administration of legislation in this area not be placed in the Comptroller General. An alternative which we believe should be given serious consideration, would be the establishment of an independent, nonpartisan election Commission to oversee Federal campaign spending. This approach is proposed in two bills, S. 1 and S. 956, which have been introduced in the 92d Congress.

We very much appreciate your interest in obtaining our views on this legislation.

Sincerely yours,

(S) ELMER B. STAATS,

Comptroller General of the United States.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of amendment No. 340 to amendment No. 308. The primary purpose behind election reform is to restore confidence of the American people in our election process. In order to achieve this end, it becomes essential for us to enact meaningful legislation. The only way that legislation can be meaningful is if we place the responsibility for administering the law in an agency which can insure impartiality and strict enforcement.

You will recall that S. 382 as introduced placed a responsibility for administering the disclosure law with the Clerk of the House and the Secretary of the Senate. Not only have those officials enforced the Federal Corrupt Practices Act of 1925 with less than active vigor, but also, by their very nature, there was a problem in giving them the task for administering the disclosure provisions of this act. First of all, they would have had to increase their staff tremendously. Second, being appointed by the Members of Congress, they hardly could have been expected to have enforced the law with vigor. When Deputy Attorney General Kleindienst testified before the Senate Commerce Committee, I asked the following question: The suggestion has been made that a Federal Election Commission be established with very detailed reporting required. Do you have any position on that? He responded as follows:

I think it is our position that probably an independent commission established by the Congress with appropriate personnel and appropriations would do a better job than the system that you now have. Even if it was put together on a bipartisan basis with appropriate staff and money I think it would be a good approach to this problem.

Unfortunately, as we have previously pointed out, the bill was not considered in its entirety by the Senate Commerce Committee. However, it is interesting to note that on page 33 of the majority report, there was the following acknowledgment that the demand for an independent Federal Elections Commission was great: There was strong feeling expressed by some members of the committee that an independent Federal Elections Commission should be created, in lieu of the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House, to supervise the enforcement of this legislation. The committee members strongly recommend to the Committee on Rules and Administration that they give this matter very serious consideration.

Senator PEARSON and others have pointed out the tremendous public interest for an independent Federal Elections Commission, and in testimony before the Senate Rules Committee, the distinguished senior Senator from Virginia (Mr. SPONG) testified as follows:

Briefly, I believe the bill should be amended to provide the creation of a Federal Elections Commission, as proposed by S. 956. Such a commission would seem to me to be a more effective agency for enforcing disclosure requirements than the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House who are designated for these responsibilities under S. 382. Because it would have only this function and because it would be independent of the Congress, the commission is far more likely to vigorously carry out the provisions of the law.

A number of other witnesses appearing both before the Commerce Committee and the Rules Committee endorsed the concept of an independent Federal Elections Commission. In our deliberations at the Rules Committee there was sharp disagreement as to where the responsibility should be placed. A number of questions were raised concerning the constitutionality of placing the responsibility anywhere other than in Congress. Deputy Attorney General Kleindienst had pretty well resolved that matter, so far as I was concerned. In a letter to Chairman MAGNUSON of the Senate Commerce Committee dated April 8, 1971, the Deputy Attorney General stated the following:

Finally, the Department is of the opinion that the establishment of an independent commission to administer the disclosure requirements would not constitute an unlawful delegation of legislative authority to the executive branch. Presently, reports and statements under the Federal Corrupt Practices Act (2 U.S.C. 244-246), and under the Federal Regulation of Lobbying Act (2 U.S.C. 264) are filed with, and preserved by, the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate. The creation of an independent commission would not deprive either House of its constitutional authority under Article I, section 5, nor would it involve a delegation of such authority. Rather, it would merely permit each House better to exercise its authority by acting upon the most informed judgment.

Personally, I was mildly pleased that the Rules Committee agreed to give up the notion that only the Clerk of the House or the Secretary of the Senate could administer a Federal Campaign finance disclosure law.

As you know, Mr. President, I have long been an admirer of the Comptroller General. The integrity of the Comptroller General and the General Accounting Office is beyond question. I recall that several years ago I amended the Equal Opportunity Act so as to require a comprehensive study by the Comptroller General as to the effectiveness of the war on poverty. He carried out that study with impartiality and thoroughness, which today has resulted in some improvements in that particular program. However, I could not agree that we had acted wisely by placing the Comptroller General of the United States in a position of administering the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971. In my supplemental views to the Rules Committee I pointed out the following:

In placing the Comptroller General in the position of administering a campaign disclosure law, we are placing upon him the impossible burden of deciding whether or not his "employers" have complied with the law. The integrity and thoroughness of the Comptroller General and the General Accounting Office is beyond question. We must consider that his effectiveness in conducting investigations and studies for individual Members of Congress could be impaired if he were placed into the position of questioning the completeness of a disclosure by a Member or a committee supporting a Member.

I was convinced then and I am convinced now that the Committee's reasoning in adopting the amendment, placing the Comptroller General in charge of this law, was not based on any firm commitment against the Federal Elections Commission. For example, Mr. President, on page 61 of the Rules Committee report, the following reasoning is given:

With respect to the approval by the Committee of an amendment to direct the Comptroller General and the General Accounting Office to perform the duties set forth by pertinent sections of the bill, it is noted that opinion was and continues to be divided between the continuation of the offices of Secretary of the Senate and Clerk of the House of Representatives to act as depositories for statements and for other purposes, and the creation of a Federal Elections Commission to carry out those functions.

Recognizing the probable need of a Federal Elections Commission to borrow, from time to time, competent auditors, accountants, and investigators from GAO in order to avoid the expenditure of unnecessary money for salaries during nonelection years, among other reasons, the Committee agreed that the office of the Comptroller General which already is charged with oversight authority over certain government contracts and spending, and which employs many experienced accountants and investigators, would be preferable to the offices of the Secretary and the Clerk.

Accordingly, the Committee approved an amendment which in every pertinent title, section, or other provision of S. 382, changes the language of the bill to reflect the Comptroller General in lieu of the Secretary of the Senate and/or the Clerk of the House of Representatives.

Now, Mr. President, all those who suggest that we be creating bureaucracy should put their fears to rest. The Pearson amendment specifically provides that the independent commission should use to the maximum extent possible the services of GAO and the Justice Department. We would not be creating a big new bureaucracy. What we would be creating is an impartial, unbiased independent commission which could restore the faith of the American people.

Mr. President, this brings me to my final point. The Comptroller General himself agrees with me that he would be put in an untenable position if he were placed in charge of determining which Congressman or Senator may or may not have complied with the law. On every Senator's desk is a letter from the Comptroller General to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, Senator ELLENDER. I believe we should follow the advice of the Comptroller General and good common sense by adopting the Pearson amendment creating an independent Federal Elections Commission. Let us have the courage to make the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971 one that we can all be proud of.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I am ready to yield back my time. I am ready to vote. How much time do I have left? The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GAMBRELL). Three minutes.

Mr. PASTORE. I thank the Chair. I yield 1 minute to the Senator from Michigan.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Michigan is recognized for 1 minute.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Mr. President, as a member of the Commerce Committee, I strongly supported a similar amendment to the bill when the legislation was before that committee.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD additional views which I inserted in the report of the Commerce Committee, indicating my support for this particular approach.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

ADDITIONAL VIEWS OF MR. GRIFFIN

In 1913 Supreme Court Justice Louis D. Brandeis noted that:

"Publicity is justly commended as a remedy for social and industrial diseases. Sunlight is said to be the best disinfectant; electric light the most efficient policeman."¹

In today's era of instant communications, Brandeis' statement is doubly relevant.

The bill reported by the Committee makes significant strides in the direction of full and timely disclosure. It provides the current for the electric light as well as the light bulb. But, unfortunately, it does not assure that someone will be available to switch on the light.

What good is a reporting system if there is no effective agency to police it? As in the past, S. 382 would continue to provide that reports by candidates and political committees be filed with the Secretary of the Senate or the Clerk of the House.

As the Twentieth Century Fund pointed out in its 1970 report on campaign financing, the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House "do not have the authority, the staff, or the motivation to do anything but accept the reports that are filed."

Furthermore, these agents of Congress, realistically speaking, are just not in a position to investigate charges of campaign abuse—particularly in the case of charges lodged against incumbent Members of Congress.

To leave the present regulatory set-up unchanged would surely invite public criticism that Congress is writing a law that would be nothing more than a paper tiger.

If one of the principal purposes of enacting reform legislation is to restore public confidence in the electoral process, then I submit that in-house regulations does not aid in achieving it.

On the other hand, there is widespread support for creation of an independent, bipartisan (or nonpartisan) Federal Commission to oversee the spending and disclosure requirements. In 1960 the Citizens' Research Foundation published a report entitled "Money, Politics and Public Reporting" by Dr. Herbert E. Alexander. In the report it was suggested that:

There is much to commend the establishing of an independent agency patterned, for example, upon the Civil Rights Commission. The electoral-financial process is hardly more sensitive an area than that of civil rights, and the strong opposition to the latter's establishment was overcome. . . .

Certainly, the record of the Civil Rights Commission, particularly in the area of voting rights, provides an excellent precedent.

Since this 1960 report was published, support for the concept of a Federal Elections Commission has mushroomed. Both the Foundation's report and the 1962 Report of the President's Commission on Campaign Costs called for creation of an independent Registry of Election Finance.

More recent proposals have also called for such a commission with investigative as well as publicity functions. Two of the bills that were before the Committee—S. 1, cosponsored by Senators Gravel, Brooke, Javits, Mansfield, Moss, Muskie, Packwood, Pearson, Randolph, Spong and Symington, and S. 956, cosponsored by Senators Scott, Mathias, Hatfield and Humphrey—call for establishment of a Federal Elections Commission.

In addition, other organizations, such as the National Committee for an Effective Congress, have spoken out in support of the commission approach. In a statement submitted to the House Committee on Standards of Official Conduct last December, the NCEC emphasized that "[e]ffective reform requires, at a minimum, the creation of an independent, non-partisan Federal Elections Commission insulated from and protected against the political pressures of the day."

Similarly, the position of the Justice Department and the Administration is that "a commission would be insulated from outside pressures and would increase the likelihood of vigorous enforcement."

Those who oppose establishment of such an Elections Commission say, in effect, that spending limitations, full disclosure and tougher penalties as provided in the bill will be enough to meet the mounting criticism against campaign spending abuses. But such an argument is unrealistic. While the tighter controls on spending and disclosure in the bill are essential, there is no glue to hold the pieces together in the absence of an effective independent, bi-partisan agency to monitor such activities.

Accordingly, while I recognize other deficiencies and inadequacies in the reported bill, including some outlined in the supplemental views, I believe the most glaring shortcoming is the omission of a Federal Elections Commission. I hope an effort to remedy this shortcoming will succeed.

ROBERT P. GRIFFIN.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I yield my remaining 2 minutes to the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, I endorse the pending amendment and would like to say to my colleague from Nevada that I share his view that if there is anything we must be, it is vigilant against expansion of bureaucracies which seem to be the character of our system. If there is ever an area that indicates the need for expansion, it certainly would be in this area, which is the touchstone of our democracy. There is probably nothing that will be more important, no agency that will be more important than the operation of a system of representative government than will be this one, since this one will actually police the methods that bring about the creation of all else. So I would agree with his view, but I am forced to deviate because of the importance of this single act.

Now, Mr. President, the bill currently before us is the most comprehensive and meaningful proposal for reform of election campaigns ever to be considered by the Senate. Its passage will go a long way to restore the lost confidence in the electoral process so prevalent today by letting the public know where campaign funds are coming from and where they are going.

Both the Commerce and the Rules Committees are to be highly commended for the prompt but careful attention they have given this subject, and I hope the whole Senate will follow their lead with an early enactment of this legislation.

Before final passage, however, there are several perfecting amendments which I believe should be adopted.

One of the most important of these is the amendment by the senior Senator from Kansas (Mr. PEARSON) to replace the General Accounting Office as repository of election reports with a nonpartisan Federal Elections Commission. This idea was contained in my own election campaign reform bill, S. 1, and I still think it the best assurance of full and fair disclosure of campaign financing.

While there is no question that the GAO possesses the facilities and expertise necessary to function as the repository of campaign reports, competence is not the only requirement if we are to have the most meaningful and complete disclosure of all campaign receipts and expenditures. We must also have independence.

The GAO is not, of course, subject to the charge of partisanship, which can hardly be avoided if the Secretary of the Senate and the Clerk of the House serve as the receivers of financial reports, as at present. Therefore, the committee's idea of placing this responsibility with the General Accounting Office is a commendable one, and constitutes a great step in the right direction.

Nonetheless, assigning this task to the GAO creates unique problems of its own. It would place the General Accounting Office in an investigatory and reporting capacity vis-a-vis the Congress, thus reversing the employer-employee relationship between the two bodies.

The undesirability of this situation was remarked upon by Elmer Staats, the Comptroller General, in a letter to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee (Mr. ELLENDER). He stated that—

The General Accounting Office is strongly opposed to placing the responsibility for the administration of Federal campaign financing requirements in the Comptroller General.

Mr. Staats said:

We believe that the effectiveness of the Comptroller General and the General Accounting Office depends in large measure upon maintaining a reputation for independence and objectivity. Not only must we remain free from political influence, but we must zealously avoid being placed in a position in which we might be subject to criticism, whether justified or not, that our actions and decisions are prejudiced or influenced by political considerations . . . because our relationship to the Congress closely resembles that of principal and agent, we especially wish to avoid being placed in the anomalous situation of having to investigate and report on our principal.

This is the inherent weakness in the proposal that the GAO assume responsibility for future financial disclosures. Any such extension of the Comptroller General's authority would be burdensome and uncomfortable, and could thereby prejudice not only the full disclosure of campaign financing but the other work of the GAO as well.

Creation of an independent, non-partisan Federal elections commission would avoid this difficulty. And it would not—as some have thought—entail setting up a whole new bureaucracy. The five-man commission would assume the responsibilities of decisionmaking and promulgating regulations, but the day-to-day work of receiving reports, conducting audits, and investigating abuses could be performed by personnel already available in the General Accounting Office and the Department of Justice.

The elections commission is a very practical idea, long supported by such reform-minded groups as the National Committee for an Effective Congress and the Citizen's Research Foundation. I hope that the Senate will adopt the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas and myself.

Mr. BROOKE. Mr. President, comprehensive reform of the Federal campaign practices law is one of the most important issues with which the Congress must deal this year. Election after election, we have seen evidence that the American public is becoming increasingly weary and disillusioned by widespread abuse at campaign time of its tolerance, its intelligence, and its laws.

By its initial efforts in Commerce and Rules Committees, the Senate has posted clear notice that it intends to consider and approve the most sweeping reform and regulation of election laws in the Nation's history. I commend those Senators on both sides of the aisle who have worked diligently and cooperatively for several months, and trust that this spirit will carry the bill to prompt enactment. These efforts have laid a solid foundation for the molding of legislation which is both fair and effective.

Although previous legislation, principally the Corrupt Practices Act and the Hatch Act, has provided a basis for establishing some sense of order in campaign law, these acts have not been notably successful in preserving the integrity of the election process. Nor have they been adequately enforced over the years by the responsible officials of the Congress and the Justice Department. I am confident that this new legislation will provide means by which existing loopholes can be tightened and enforcement made more stringent.

There are several sections of the proposed legislation which I believe are deserving of special comment.

First, I believe that the most significant section of this bill is title III, which is concerned with disclosure of receipts and expenditures by candidates and their political committees. Should the Rules Committee version of the bill be enacted—and I am not aware of substantial opposition to most of its principal provisions—the American public will be provided with extensive information describing all phases of each candidate's financial activity.

Specifically, the treasurer of each political committee will be required to maintain records of all contributions and expenditures, and to file with the administrative office enforcing this act a listing of all contributions and expenditures in excess of $100. The bill requires that such reports be made on five separate instances prior to any election, including on the 5th day preceding the election.

I support also the provision, originally proposed by Senator SCOTT, requiring that candidates provide monetary guarantees that debts will be paid when owed to businesses regulated by the Federal Government, such as the telephone and airline companies. In my mind, it is scandalous that several candidates in the 1968 elections still owe hundreds of thousands of dollars to these corporations and have given no indication that the debts will ever be cleared.

Comprehensive disclosure is vital because it permits the voters to review the sources of funds for each candidate, as well as the total amount of such contributions. Indeed, disclosure requirements, if enforced, make less necessary any limitation on contributions or spending because they provide the public full opportunity to determine the appropriateness of a candidate's income and spending practices, and to translate that judgment into action at the ballot box.

It should be clear that a sum of money spent in one heatedly contested race might properly be greater than a sum of money spent in a mildly contested race in the same State. I for one have greater confidence in the logic and wisdom of an informed American electorate than I do in uniform legislative guidelines. Consequently, I fully support the disclosure provisions in the bill.

Third, I strongly support the amendment offered by Senator PEARSON of Kansas, which would create an independent Federal Elections Commission to supervise the enforcement of campaign laws. This proposed five-member bipartisan commission, appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate, would have full power to investigate charges of illegal campaign activities, to subpoena evidence, and to report possible violations of law to the Justice Department for prosecution.

These important responsibilities can be most effectively undertaken by a body which is almost entirely independent of both the executive and legislative branches. Although it would be an improvement over present law, the proposal that the General Accounting Office be assigned the responsibility would endanger that important body's nonpartisan status. Indeed, the Comptroller General, as Director of GAO, has himself stated that he favors the independent election commission.

Bearing in mind that fair campaign practices will, in large measure, follow from stringent disclosure requirements, the Congress should be particularly careful to respect first amendment considerations in establishing campaign spending limitations. As incumbents, we ought to recognize that we have the most to gain by tightly limiting allowances for media expenditures. In most contests, the challenger starts with a serious disadvantage simply because his name and face are largely unknown. I believe that any campaign regulation should bear this factor in mind.

Thus, I strongly support the repeal of section 315 of the Communications Act for all candidates for Federal office, congressional as well as presidential. The present "equal time" requirement prohibits broadcasters from granting the two or three major party candidates an opportunity to debate and discuss the issues without providing an equal opportunity to all other candidates for the same office. The section should be repealed because it is unrealistic and because its net effect is to provide little, if any, free air time to any candidates for Federal office. Surely, it makes little sense to take the halfway measure of repealing the law only insofar as it applies to presidential contests. Recent experience as well as statistics prove that there is a much greater likelihood of third party opposition in a contest for the Presidency than in one for the Congress; therefore, if section 315 is repealed for presidential elections, there would be little point in retaining it for other Federal contests.

Repeal of section 315 would logically bring about a second highly desirable goal—a reduction in spending for media advertising and in the superficial commercialization of candidates that has become much too familiar in American political life.

After thorough consideration, I have concluded that we should adopt that part of the amendment proposed by Senator PASTORE which would limit spending for broadcast media to 5 cents per eligible voter. A study of the 1970 expenditures in senatorial contests reveals that a large majority of the candidates would have spent less than 5 cents per voter. There is, therefore, no need to enact into law a provision which has the effect of permitting increases, rather than limits, of the high costs of campaigning.

My decision on this matter was influenced also by two additional aspects of the bill about which there is little disagreement. First, the spending limitation will be based on the number of eligible voters rather than the number of individuals voting in the previous election. Second, the bill requires that all charges for broadcast facilities be assessed at the lowest unit advertising rate of the station in the 45 days prior to a primary election and 60 days prior to a general election. These changes will, in most cases, translate the 5-cent limit of the present bill to approximately 10 cents under the old standards.

Along with the 5-cent per eligible voter limit on nonbroadcast media expenditures, as well as repeal of section 315, this provision would place a reasonable limitation on the amount of television advertising but would still be high enough to provide adequate opportunity for each candidate fully to present his views to the public in whatever manner he sees fit.

The Senate will be debating other important aspects of this bill in the coming days. Hopefully, these efforts will result in legislation which is desired by a great majority of the public as well as by most individuals who run for public office.

It is clear that the American campaign process has become, in too many instances, a contest where the survivors are the wealthiest, the best performers, and the ones with the best advertising consultants. If we are to restore the confidence of American citizens in the political process and in the Congress itself, passage of this bill is a vital and requisite step.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, whatever time I had, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. GAMBRELL). All time on the amendment has now been yielded back.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified, of the Senator from Kansas (Mr. PEARSON).

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. STENNIS) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Washington (Mr. MAGNUSON) and the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH) would each vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

The Senators from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER and Mr. BROCK) are detained on official business.

AMENDMENT NO. 342

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 342 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was read, as follows:

On page 17, between lines 2 and 3, insert the following:

"Sec. 208. Chapter 29 of title 18, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"§ 614. Extension of credit to candidates for Federal office by certain industries

"(a) Except as otherwise provided in subsection (b) of this section, no person engaged in a business, the rates and charges for which are regulated by the Civil Aeronautics Board, the Federal Communications Commission, or the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall furnish goods or render services to a candidate, or to any other person who is acting on behalf of such candidate, in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office unless such candidate or person (1) pays for such goods or services in advance of their being furnished or rendered, or (2) secures the debt so created in full by property, bond, or other security.

"(b) In the case of any such business whose customary practice is to submit statements to its customers at periodic intervals requesting payment for goods furnished or services rendered, such business shall not furnish goods or render services to any such candidate or person, or to any other person acting on behalf of such candidate in connection with his campaign, so long as any debt owed by such candidate or person for past goods furnished or services rendered in connection with the campaign of such candidate remains unpaid for more than ten days after the date such statement is issued unless such debt is secured in full by property, bond, or other security. In order to carry out the provisions of this subsection, such business shall submit such statements on a monthly basis to its customers who are candidates or persons acting on behalf of a candidate in connection with his campaign.

"(c) Any candidate who purchases goods or services from any such business in connection with his campaign for Federal office, and any person who purchases such goods or services on behalf of such candidate in connection with his campaign, shall identify himself as a candidate or as a person acting on behalf of a candidate before purchasing such goods and services and shall indicate that such goods and services are being purchased in connection with the campaign of such candidate.

"(d) For purposes of this section—
"(1) payment in advance by cash, check, money order, or by credit card (if the issuer of such card is not the person from whom such goods or services were purchased, or a subsidiary, parent, or affiliate corporation thereof) shall be considered to be payment in advance; and

"(2) a person shall be considered to be acting on behalf of a candidate if—

"(A) he is employed by such candidate or by a political committee to act on behalf of such candidate in connection with such candidate's campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office;

"(B) such candidate, or a political committee which makes expenditures to influence the nomination or election of such candidate, pays, directly or indirectly, for goods and services purchased by such person while so acting;

"(C) such person is acting under an agreement with such candidate, or with a political committee which makes expenditures to influence the nomination or election of such candidate, under which he is to engage in activities in connection with such candidate's campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office; or

"(D) such person is acting as an agent of such candidate, or of a political committee which makes expenditures to influence the nomination or election of such candidate, in connection with such candidate's campaign for nomination for election, or election to Federal office.

"(e) The Civil Aeronautics Board, the Federal Communications Commission, and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall each promulgate its own regulations, within ninety days of the effective date of this Act, in order to carry out the provisions of this section with respect to businesses regulated by it.

"(f) Violation of the provisions of this section, or regulations promulgated under this section, is punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000, imprisonment for not to exceed one year, or both."

On page 17, line 3, strike "Sec. 206" and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 207".

On page 17, strike the matter between lines 10 and 11, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"611. Contributions by Government contractors.;"

(4) Adding at the end of such table the following:

"614. Extension of credit to candidates for Federal office by certain industries".

On page 27, line 21, strike out "Sec. 305," and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 305. (a)".

On page 28, between lines 4 and 5, insert the following:

"(b) (1) Any candidate, or person acting on behalf of such candidate or as an agent of such candidate in connection with the campaign of such candidate for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office, who purchases goods or services in connection with such campaign from any business the rates and charges for which are regulated by the Civil Aeronautics Board, the Federal Communications Commission, or the Interstate Commerce Commission, shall file with the Comptroller General a statement disclosing—

"(A) the name of the purchaser and the name of the candidate for the benefit of whose campaign the goods or services were purchased;

"(B) a specific description of the goods or services furnished and the quantity or measure thereof, if appropriate;

"(C) any amount of the price of such goods or services not paid in advance of their being furnished to the purchaser;

"(D) any unpaid balance of the price of such goods or services as of the reporting date;

"(E) a description of the type and value of any bond, collateral, or other security securing such unpaid balance; and

"(F) such other information as the Comptroller General shall require by published regulation.

"(2) Reports required under paragraph (1) of this subsection shall be filed on the dates on which reports by political committees are filed, and shall be cumulative.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I yield to the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. FASTORE. Mr. President, I wish to point out to Senators—

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, may we have order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island will withhold for a moment. The Chair asks that Senators be seated and that attachés retire to the rear of the Chamber. Let us have order.

The Senator from Rhode Island may proceed.

Mr. FASTORE. Mr. President, as I was saying, we have a one-half hour limitation, with 15 minutes to a side. I would expect that votes will come fast and, hopefully, furious.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I agree with the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, my amendment concerns the extension of credit to candidates for Federal office by certain federally regulated industries.

The basic points to consider are that the legislation and regulations covering common carriers—airlines, telephone companies, and telegraph companies—generally prohibit discrimination and unreasonableness in setting rates, charges, and deposits. Because of this inflexibility, these federally regulated industries have great difficulty in obtaining sufficiently large deposits to cover operations connected with political campaigns.

Because of this difficulty, many political accounts remain outstanding. In some cases they are completely uncollectable and, in fact, have been written off entirely.

The combination of these three factors places these regulated industries, all of them corporations, in a position of making illegal corporate contributions to political campaigns. Existing law already prohibits corporate contributions, in addition to "free" services.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, may we have a little better order in the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will again attempt to get order. The best way to have order is for Senators to respect the right of other Senators to be heard.

The Senator from Pennsylvania may proceed.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, very simply, because of their inability to protect themselves adequately these federally regulated industries become easy prey for political candidates. The airlines, telephone, and telegraph companies have been placed in a position of unlawfully, unavoidably, and unintentionally—and I might add illegally—subsidizing political campaign expenses.

Another point to keep in mind is that, even if it can be shown that these particular industries have enough latitude to protect themselves, a very delicate political problem remains. For example, an airline executive could be faced with a problem of how he tells a powerful Member of Congress, whose jurisdiction in committee may include airlines and who may be a candidate for office, that the candidate's credit or application for credit must be denied. Perhaps the candidate would seek out another airline to extend credit, but in any event the uncooperative airline would be at least in fear of possible future recrimination. Only the force of law, as proposed in my amendment, would prevent such abuses of power.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. SCOTT. I will yield in a moment.

Mr. President, on July 23, 1971, at page 26935, I introduced a longer statement on the amounts due—from both political parties and the candidates of both political parties—indicating that this difficulty has afflicted many federally regulated industries, no matter who is the candidate or which party is running.

I am glad to yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. DOMINICK. I raise a question just on the wording of the amendment. I can certainly sympathize with the Senator from Pennsylvania on the purpose of the amendment. I understand what he is trying to get at, but on page 3 of the amendment, it reads:

For purposes of this section—
(1) payment in advance by cash, check, money order, or by credit card . . .

Then the language continues—
If the issuer of such card is not the person from whom such goods or services were purchased . . .

And so on.
I have an international credit card, just to make it personal, so I will not be stepping on anybody else's toes, which is under the aegis, at least, of the United Air Lines. In the process of traveling back and forth to my State, I use United Air Lines all the time, and then go ahead on that travel-card system.

I would hesitate to make a pronouncement on this, but, for the record, I would think that is a person from whom such goods and services were purchased if I were traveling on United; and I would think it would be prohibited under this language.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, the Senator and I discussed this earlier. I did not intend to mislead him, but, on a careful reading of the amendment and its effect, it would mean credit could be used by candidates as long as the debt is fully secured. American Express cards, for example, could be used at any time; but a credit card issued by a particular airline, for example, could not be used unless the credit is secured—that means otherwise secured. So an airlines credit card would not be covered, but the other credit cards would be exempted. Western Union or Bell Telephone cards would be covered unless otherwise secured.

Mr. DOMINICK. I would think that would create all kinds of problems, because in the normal course of events, I use the airlines all the time—and I am sure everyone else around here does—on the ordinary credit card, or some other credit card which is available, and I would think it would be extremely complicated to say the whole bill must be secured, when one does not know what it is that must be secured before he can travel on it.

Mr. SCOTT. There is a 10-day grace period during which unsecured credit can be cleared up by full payment of bills or through a security arrangement. Monthly statements, however, are required. But there cannot be any attempt to pile up bills on that credit card.

For example, if a Senator used the United Air Lines card and ran up a debt of $10,000 unsecured, there is nothing in the credit card or no available means by which the airlines could proceed. Failure to pay an American Express card bill definitely affect the personal credit as well as the credit of a candidate or of any person who is running for office, and it is believed that that in itself operates as sufficient security, in addition to the checks and the protections which American Express, Diner's Card, and all the rest have used to assure themselves by prior credit investigation.

Mr. DOMINICK. I am trying to clear the record. Most of the credit cards issued by the airlines do have credit secured, because it costs about $200 to go back and forth, and one has to put up $400 security. Obviously, it is not going to be enough in a campaign year for any kind of candidate.

The difficulty I see in this amendment is that it provides that one is still abiding if he pays within 10 days, but if he does not, he is in a substantial problem. He may find himself engaged in a campaign where the bill does not even come in during that period or he may find himself in a position where, because of the campaign exigencies, he is not able to get back just to find the bill and write a check. In other words, there are some problems in this airline situation which perhaps have not been considered.

The American Express card is largely unsecured. The airlines cards have some deposits behind them, at least to some degree. But is it not a matter of business on the part of the airlines to decide whether or not they are going to crack the whip and make a person pay his bill?

Mr. SCOTT. I grant that there are difficulties, but I do not know of a better way to get at it. The effect probably would be that the airlines would require a greater deposit than they presently require, according to the track record of the candidate who is running. One who is in a nearby State might be expected to pay a smaller deposit. They might do that. Perhaps others will want to do that. In any event, say $4,000 was required; that might be used as security until it was exhausted.

Mr. DOMINICK. It seems to me that if we take the words out of the amendment on page 3 in parenthesis, on lines 12 to 15, the problem that I have brought up would be solved, and that person, in other words, would still be considered to have made a payment in advance when he has a credit card. Therefore, he would not have that problem.

Mr. SCOTT. I would be glad to consider that possibility and discuss it with the Senator from Colorado prior to the vote and make a statement as to whether or not we can do that. In the meantime I would like to give other Senators an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. DOMINICK. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, at this time I yield the floor and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, as our beloved former colleague, Mr. Dirksen, would be prone to say, this indeed is discriminatory; it makes a second-class citizen out of a candidate. My question is, Why do we do it to ourselves? Who really are we that we think of ourselves in such a way that we have to punish ourselves unnecessarily when we are trying to do what most of us think is an act of nobility in running for public office? The former Senator from Illinois would be prone to say this is really throwing out the baby with the bath water. I would say this is burning down the barn to catch one mouse.

After all, this is entirely within the discretion of the airlines. If they do not think PASTORE or HUMPHREY is worthy of credit, they do not give it, and if they give credit and get stuck, they cannot add it on their rate base. That is the law.

I say this amendment is absolutely unnecessary. This is not the place for it. It should not be in the bill. It ought not to be in the bill. I hope the Senate will knock it down.

As the Senator from Colorado said, talk about a sieve when the President vetoed the original bill; this is full of potholes. This is a bottomless kettle, and I think we will all be inundated with shame if we adopt the amendment. I hope it will be knocked down.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PASTORE. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I associate myself with the Senator from Rhode Island in opposing this so-called fat cat or rich man's amendment that is before us.

In the first place, it would establish a discriminatory position in favor of Carte Blanche, American Express, and other credit chains that issue cards to cover many different services and charge a percentage to the agency that is utilizing those services.

On the other hand, it would penalize any company that wants to carry its own credit. Any of the airlines, Western Union, or the telephone company that wanted to carry their own credit and use their own credit would be penalized because they could not operate under this amendment.

I pointed out yesterday that it is, plainly and simply, a fat cat or rich man's amendment. It is not only designed to, but will, eliminate those without ample resources and finances from participating as candidates for public office.

I do not think that is what we want to do. We heard a lot of discussion here a few minutes ago, on the last amendment, about the worthy objectives of a non-partisan approach to try to get an election bill out of here that would provide some election reform.

This is going to reform it; it will make it so that no one except a rich man can run for public office.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CANNON. I am happy to yield.

Mr. STEVENS. How does this get to be a rich man's amendment? I do not quite understand that. The people who are running up these bills are people who are not paying their bills. I do not quite see how you can call this a fat cat or a rich man's amendment. We are trying to assure that people are responsible for the debts incurred in their names by committees which are organized in order to help a candidate run for election.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. The poor man, the guy we are trying to help, is not getting that kind of credit.

Mr. STEVENS. Who does the Senator know in that circumstance? What candidate does he know who is running around the country, running up bills and not paying them?

Mr. PASTORE. Did the Senator ever run for President?

Mr. STEVENS. No, and I have no intention of doing so.

Mr. PASTORE. When the Senator runs for President, he will have a job on his hands.

Mr. STEVENS. We are talking about campaign committees running up charges and now being serviced by corporations, contrary to the Corrupt Practice Act. That is my understanding. How does that turn out to be a "fat cat" amendment? We are trying to make those fat cats pay up.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I would like to answer now. I have yielded to several Senators on my own time.

In the first place, if they are extending credit in violation of the Corrupt Practices Act, the Department of Justice ought to take action, and I am sure they would if someone made a complaint to them, because that is their responsibility, to prosecute if there is a violation of the Corrupt Practices Act. The violation would be if this were really a contribution and not a pure and simple extension of credit.

But the amendment would prohibit the ordinary man, like myself, the Senator from Alaska, and a few others, who travel great distances, from using an airline credit card unless we post security in full. With the amount of traveling we would do, we could not use that card.

On the other hand, we could, as I pointed out earlier and as the Senator from Colorado pointed out, go to American Express or Carte Blanche or some other company, and use the credit card there without posting security, and the beneficiary, the company extending the service, either the airline, Western Union, or the telephone company—and those are the only three involved—would have to pay a premium to Carte Blanche or American Express to use that service, and could not issue its own credit card, which it has the right to do in the ordinary course of good business practice, in carrying out good credit management.

I submit, Mr. President, that this is really and truly a fat cat or rich man's amendment, and it would prohibit a poor man, who cannot put up the necessary cash to cover his own traveling expenses and the telephone calls he is going to make, from running for public office.

It covers three agencies, the FCC, the ICC, and the CAB. We might as well eliminate the ICC to begin with, because they only cover the railroads, and the railroads are not running any more, anyway, as far as passenger traffic is concerned, and do not extend credit when they do.

The other two have authority to establish rules and regulations to protect the organizations which they exercise jurisdiction over. Certainly the business management practices of those companies ought to be adequate to take care of this particular situation. Therefore, Mr. President, I oppose the amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I send to the desk a modification of my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the modification.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 36, after line 16, add the following:

"TITLE IV—MISCELLANEOUS
"EXTENSION OF CREDIT BY REGULATED INDUSTRIES

"SEC. 401. The Civil Aeronautics Board, the Federal Communications Commission, and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall each promulgate, within 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act, its own regulations with respect to the extension of credit, without security, by any person regulated by such Board or Commission to any candidate for Federal office (as such term is defined in section 301 (c) of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971), or to any person on behalf of such a candidate, for goods furnished or services rendered in connection with the campaign of such candidate for nomination for election, or election, to such office."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, the reason for submitting the modification is twofold. First, the sheer pragmatism of recognizing that, in view of the opinions expressed here, particularly by the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island, for whom we have such respect, and recognizing pragmatically that my original amendment is not going to carry, although I think it is better than the one I am now submitting, and I think it is more desirable; and second, I have here just received further evidence of the piling up of bills of the Bell Telephone Co., in the form of a letter from the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., dated yesterday; the back of poor old Ma Bell is bending, and I ask unanimous consent that the letter and supplementary material be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCOTT. If I may say just briefly this: What we propose now, after discussion with the distinguished manager of the bill (Mr. PASTORE), is that the appropriate regulatory agencies, within 90 days after the enactment of this act, issue such rules and regulations as will have the effect of correcting a situation where huge bills can be piled up without any subsequent genuine effort to pay them. We are going to leave it to the regulatory agencies. To do the job they are supposed to do.

My original amendment was a mandate. This is a directive that regulations be proposed. It has been discussed with the Senator from Rhode Island, and I understand that the Senator from Nevada is aware of it, and I hope that the manager of the bill can accept the amendment.

EXHIBIT 1

AMERICAN TELEPHONE & TELEGRAPH Co.,
New York, N.Y., August 2, 1971.

Mr. BERNARD STRASBURG,
Chief, Common Carrier Bureau,
Federal Communications Commission,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. STRASBURG: This is in further reply to your letters of May 24, 1971 and June 21, 1971 (File 9330) which enclosed copies of letters from the General Accounting Office (GAO) requesting that we obtain and furnish certain information regarding political campaign debts owed to the Bell System Telephone Companies.

The revised GAO request, transmitted with your June 21, 1971 letter, specified that we need to provide (1) only the amount of debt still outstanding for each candidate in the 1968 presidential campaign and (2) the amounts written off as uncollectible for all candidates for Federal office for the years 1968, 1969 and 1970.

Our letter of July 7, 1971 transmitted the information covering the amounts written off as uncollectible for the years 1968, 1969 and 1970. However, we do not consider any such amounts as written off in the sense of discharging the debtor; nor do we discontinue collection efforts. In addition, we do not settle debts for less than the full amount.

We are attaching hereto the requested information covering the outstanding campaign debts owed to Bell System Companies for communication services furnished during the 1968 presidential campaign to national, state and local committees campaigning for the candidates.

Bell System policy and procedures with respect to the billing and collection of debts incurred by the committees campaigning for the candidates for Federal office are consistent with the policy and procedures applicable to any other customer. Furthermore, we do not differentiate in our collection efforts between regular customers and those campaigning for political candidates.

All communication services for all customers are provided at the rates and charges specified in applicable tariffs on file with the appropriate regulatory bodies.

In addition, the GAO requested that we provide:

1. An explanation as to why any other data requested could not be provided including, where appropriate, an estimate of the time and cost that would be involved (in assembling such data).

2. Actual or estimated total amounts, written off as uncollectible for each of those years for which the carriers cannot submit (the requested) data.

In response to item 1. above, the records for all the years prior to 1965 have been destroyed as provided for by Part 42 of the F.C.C. Rules and Regulations, "Preservation of Records of Communication Common Carriers." For the years 1965 through 1967, political accounts were not separately identified and were filed with all other accounts. To determine at this time the political accounts previously written off as uncollectible for the years 1965 through 1967 would require identification of the names of all candidates then running for Federal office. Once these names were determined, a manual search of Commercial records in each of the Telephone Companies would have to be initiated to obtain the telephone numbers of the political accounts in question. Many accounts, however, may be listed under billing names other than those of the candidates and thereby virtually impossible to identify. The list of telephone numbers that could be assembled would then be furnished to the Comptrollers Department, which would institute a search of the records to determine what amounts had been written off as uncollectible. These Comptrollers Department records are currently stored in each Telephone Company in a number of dead storage locations. We estimate that it would require approximately 1,750 man hours at each of the 108 Revenue Accounting Offices or a total of 189,000 man hours to search the records at an estimated cost of $960,000.

In response to item 2. above, we have no basis for estimating the political account amounts written off as uncollectible prior to 1968, other than by extrapolation of our experience starting with 1968. In our opinion, such a bench mark would be unrealistic. The campaigns commencing in 1968 differed from previous campaigns inasmuch as the amount of telephone communications used from 1968 onward greatly exceeded the volume of calling in comparable campaigns. Therefore, we do not believe we possess sufficient data to permit an estimate which would have any degree of validity.

If you have any questions regarding the attached information, we shall be glad to discuss them at your convenience.

Yours very truly,

D. E. EMERSON.

Mr. SCOTT. I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, this is now a horse of a different color. It is acceptable to me. It really modifies a directive which is the existing authority today, under the law, of these various agencies. It reminds them of their responsibilities. There is nothing punitive about it, and for that reason I am perfectly willing to accept it. I think as now modified it really is a public service.

Mr. SCOTT. I thank the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island. My white horse is now a palomino, but it is by no means piebald, and I thank the distinguished Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUMPHREY). Do Senators yield back their time?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. PASTORE. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All remaining time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCOTT), as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

AMENDMENT 348

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I call up my amendment 348, offered by the distinguished senior Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER) and myself, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 7, insert "(1)" before "Section".

On page 2, strike lines 10 and 11, and insert in lieu thereof the following: "and the following: 'other than Federal elective office (as defined in subsection (c) of this section)'."

On page 2, between lines 11 and 12, insert the following:

"(2) Section 315(a) of such Act is amended by inserting after the first sentence thereof the following: 'If a licensee permits a legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office to use his broadcasting station in connection with such candidate's campaign for nomination for election, or election to such office, the licensee shall afford such candidate maximum flexibility in choosing his program format.'"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair inquires of the Senator from Vermont whether he asks unanimous consent that the amendments be considered en bloc.

Mr. PROUTY. I so request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Chair inquires of the Senator whether this is one of the amendments for which he has asked 3 hours.

Mr. PROUTY. No, Mr. President, it is not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, in considering the proposed legislation, both the Senate Commerce Committee and the Committee on Rules and Administration were made acutely aware of the fact that section 315(a) of the Federal Communications Act of 1934 inhibited broadcasters from providing any free time to candidates for Federal office. Section 315(a) is the so-called "equal time provision" of the Federal Communications Act.

Mr. President, a provision similar to section 315(a) was in the Radio Act of 1927. In 1934 Congress saw fit to carry this provision over into the new law. The reasons for the provision were simple. Then, as today, broadcasting was recognized as a powerful force for influencing public opinion. It was because of the tremendous power inherent in the use of radio and television that section 315 was enacted, so as to insure that if one candidate was given free time on radio or television, other candidates for the same office would be afforded an equal amount of time. If one candidate was able to buy a certain amount of time on radio or television, his opponents would be entitled to purchase an equal amount of time.

Quite frankly, Mr. President, this "equal time provision" in reality became an easy excuse for broadcasters to provide absolutely no free time.

Dr. Frank Stanton, president of CBS, in his testimony before the Senate Commerce Committee on March 3, described the inhibitive effect of section 315 when he stated:

Central to any measures calculated to strengthen the electoral process must be the improvement of the quality and quantity of information provided to the public about the candidates and the issues. The repeal of Section 315 is an important avenue to this end, since it would provide opportunities for greater contribution of free time by broadcasters and deeper treatment of the issues. Because Section 315 requires equal time for every candidate for an office, however insignificant or frivolous his candidacy, the practical effect of the law has been to deny free broadcast time to major candidates or to force free time to be shared with fringe candidates. This, it seems to me, is a classic case of backlash on the public interest.

Dr. Stanton was but one of many from the broadcast industry to testify to the fact that section 315(a) has become a "no time offered requirement" in practice.

Vincent Wasilewski representing the National Association of Broadcasters before the Commerce Committee stated:

Broadcasters stand ready and willing to provide free time for the appearance of presidential and vice-presidential candidates of the major parties.

We believe the capricious operation of Section 315, however, makes it impossible for broadcasters to perform this public service responsibility.

The presidents of NBC and ABC confirmed the conclusions of Dr. Stanton and Mr. Wasilawski. Since we were determined in Rules Committee to consider this important legislation in its entirety other broadcasters testified before us. Victor Diehm, president of the Mutual Broadcasting System succinctly reinforced the need for exempting all candidates for Federal office from the equal time requirements of section 315 (a), when he said:

Under the present law, any appearance by a candidate in person gives rise to the requirement of equal opportunity or equal time for all other candidates for the same office. The bill, S. 382, as amended, recognizes that this is really an inhibiting factor operating on a broadcaster rather than a guarantee of equal treatment. By its present language, S. 382 would repeal the equal opportunity provision of section 315 of the Communications Act for Presidential and Vice-Presidential candidates. Extension of this policy to all Federal offices would permit coverage of all serious candidates to a much greater extent than is now possible.

It should be pointed out that the public interest standard and all other applicable considerations bearing on a broadcast licensee's stewardship of the airwaves remain in full force. Abuse, if it should occur, could be readily redressed.

Stations, freed from the threat of great swarms of candidates appearing for a variety of reasons, would be able to concentrate coverage on bona fide candidates to the benefit of the public.

Before the Rules Committee we were also fortunate to have the president of the North Carolina Association of Broadcasters, Mr. Richard Barron and Mr. Wade Hargrove, the general counsel for the association. I say we were fortunate, because too often we rely on national associations or big national networks. Mr. Barron and Mr. Hargrove were speaking for the small broadcast station owners. They too agreed that section 315(a) has become the "no free time offered" provision. For example, Mr. Barron testified:

We do have certain reservations about particular aspects of this bill which we wish to briefly state.

First, we agree with the provisions of the bill that would call for the repeal of section 315(a) of the Federal Communications Act to delete the equal time requirement for presidential and vice-presidential candidates. We recommend, however, that the bill be expanded in this regard so as to delete the equal time requirements for all candidates.

The Deputy Attorney General in fact testified before both committees urging the repeal of section 315(a) for all Federal candidates. Before Rules Committee Mr. Kleindienst testified as follows:

First, section 101 would repeal the equal time provision of section 315 of the Federal Communications Act with respect to candidates for the office of President and Vice President. The justification for this provision is that section 315, contrary to its purpose, has inhibited broadcasters from offering free time and coverage to candidates, and has favored incumbents over challengers. Also, it has restricted the access of the electorate to the candidates and their views. We agree that section 315 has produced the wrong results, but these are not limited to presidential and vice-presidential candidates. They are equally applicable to candidates for other Federal offices. Every argument supporting limited repeal supports total repeal. The fairness doctrine enforced by the Federal Communications Commission will afford all candidates access to broadcasting facilities on an equitable basis. We urge total repeal of section 315.

Mr. President, one of the major purposes of this legislation is to reduce the costs of campaigns. The standard argument favoring spending limitations is that campaign costs are too high. Radio and television they argue is the prime reason for the increased costs. For the sake of argument, assume the advocates of limitations are correct. What better way to lower costs than legislation encouraging "free" radio and television time?

The evidence is overwhelming from broadcasters that the equal time requirements now inhibit them from giving any free time for fear of encouraging fringe candidates and crackpots. Can that evidence be substantiated by an objective source? The chairman of the Federal Communications Commission testified before the Commerce Committee. Mr. Burch stated emphatically that—

A first improvement should be concerned with facilitating free time for political candidates. Broadcasters have long claimed that section 315 in its present form discourages affording such free time because they have to make time available to so-called fringe candidates, such as candidates of the Socialist Labor, Socialist Worker, and Vegetarian Parties.

Mr. President, what would any reasonable man conclude from the evidence I cited with respect to need to exempt all Federal candidates from the equal time requirements of section 315(a)? Local broadcasters, broadcast associations, network presidents and the chairman of the FCC all agree that section 315(a) has become the "no free time offered requirement."

Basically, Mr. President, the equal time requirement favors the incumbent because he is better known and it is easier for him or her as an incumbent to make news. In 1960, we exempted Presidential candidates from the equal time requirement so that the Kennedy-Nixon debates could take place.

We saw that networks in fact did give free time.

We saw that millions of Americans took a greater interest in the campaign than ever before.

In my mind we proved that the equal time requirement should be changed so as to encourage a wider dissemination of issues, ideas, and political philosophy in an election campaign.

As a member of the Communications Subcommittee prior to the 1964 election I recall that the incumbent President did not want section 315(a) repealed nor did he want it repealed in 1968. Today we have a President who wants section 315(a) repealed not only for candidates for the office of President but for all Federal candidates. What holds us back? I suppose it is fear but if that is the case it should not be. There is nothing to fear from exposing voters to all of the issues and facts in a campaign.

Our distinguished chairman of the Communications Subcommittee has in the past supported complete repeal of section 315(a) for all Federal offices as well as for the offices of Governor and Lieutenant Governor. During the current hearing on S. 382, Senator PASTORE responded to Dean Burch's comments on section 315 as follows:

You have got to be a little pragmatic about that. I suggested at one time that we exclude the office of Congress and the governorship from the equal opportunity requirement of section 315. It didn't get to first base. There was a tremendous amount of resentment on the floor of the Senate and the House. . . .

The chairman went on in those hearings to further state his position with respect to those who felt that repeal of the equal time requirements would result in unfairness:

That is the fear on the part of most. Inasmuch as this is a monopoly you would leave too much power in the hands of the broadcaster. I have never felt quite that way. I always felt there was sufficient maturity and integrity in the industry that you could afford to take the risk.

But that is the feeling of the Congress at the present time. I don't think it is going to be an easy thing to repeal section 315. I think it is an impossible thing at this moment. All we are trying to do is to do it because there is precedent for it in the case of presidential and vice-presidential campaigns.

Chairman Burch responded to those possible fears as follows:

I think as a practical matter, Mr. Chairman, broadcasters, and we cite this later in a letter we wrote to this committee, I think broadcasters in the political field dealing with major candidates are going to find that the only fair way to handle them is comparably.

I think that is just the realities of life.

Nevertheless, when it came to a vote before the Commerce Committee those of us who wanted section 315(a) repealed for all Federal candidates did not have the votes. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, that a copy of that rollcall vote be printed in the RECORD immediately following my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, quite frankly, I was surprised that the Commerce Committee did not extend the exemption to all Federal candidates when I considered the following response by Senator PASTORE to the Deputy Attorney General concerning his recommendation for repealing section 315(a) for all Federal candidates:

Now your argument is that we should include the office of, let's say, a Senator or a Congressman. I personally have no objection to that. The only trouble is that there has been some stiff resistance to that on the grounds that this is more or less a parochial situation and does not fit in the same category as the offices of President and Vice President that have to appeal for the national networks rather than the local broadcasting station. . . .

As I have pointed out the Rules Committee considered S. 382 in its entirety. Among other things the Rules Committee would repeal section 315(a) for all Federal candidates.

We did so because we could not find one witness before either the Commerce Committee or Rules Committee who opposed such a move.

We did so because we did not want an incumbent's bill.

We did so because we felt repeal of section 315(a) would lower campaign costs even though nonincumbents might be given a fairer chance.

Broadcasters want repeal for all candidates.

Many Senators, including Senator KENNEDY, Senator SCOTT, Senator BAKER, Senator COOK, and Senator PASTORE apparently want repeal for all Federal candidates.

The President definitely wants repeal for all Federal candidates.

The Rules Committee chose repeal for all Federal candidates. Now the sponsor of the bill apparently wishes to avoid repeal for congressional and senatorial races. I believe, Mr. President, that, in the interest of fairness to candidates for political office, it is highly desirable that we repeal section 315(a), so that all candidates for Federal office will have the right to equal time, which I am sure will be granted on a fair basis.

EXHIBIT 1

1. Amendment offered by Senator Baker to repeal the equal time requirement of section 315 of the Communications Act and to provide that the lowest unit charge shall apply to all legally qualified candidates for public office. Rejected: 6 yeas; 7 nays.

YEAS—6

Cotton, Prouty, Pearson, Griffin, Baker, Cook.

NAYS—7

Magnuson, Pastore, Hart, Cannon, Long, Moss, Spong.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield on my time for a question?

Mr. PROUTY. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PASTORE. Referring to his amendment, what he does, actually, is to repeal section 315 which is the equal time provision of the law with reference to all Federal offices. Then on page 2 of his amendment he has this expression:

"If a licensee permits a legally qualified candidate for Federal elective office to use his broadcasting station in connection with such candidate's campaign for nomination for election, or election to such office, the licensee shall afford candidate maximum flexibility in choosing his program format.

It has been my experience—and I want to say to the Senator from Vermont that he quotes me correctly when he says I was for repeal of section 315 insofar as all Federal elective offices are concerned, and I went so far as to include Governors and Lieutenant Governors—that we took up that bill on the floor of the Senate several years ago, but we did not get very far because there was a solidified feeling that this would place a campaign more or less at the whim of an affluent licensee.

Well, I am one of those that will admit there might be spotty cases where that would be the case. I remember the former Senator from Texas, Mr. Yarborough, getting up and saying that he had bought certain time at a station but when he went there to make his broadcast they told him they were sorry but the engineer was not there. So he became a victim of the whim of that licensee. It was to fill the equal-time need, in order to keep a gage on the local licensee, that we instituted that provision in section 315. But my personal feeling is we have come a long, long way from that day.

What I do not like about the amendment of the Senator from Vermont is the word "if." When he uses the word "if," he is going to put that licensee in a position to say, "Unless you do it my way, I will not give you time."

If the Senator would permit, if we could rather use the word "when," I think the record which is being made for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD today will show that we intend that free time shall be given as a public service.

I tell the Senator frankly—I do not know how our other colleagues will vote on it—that I shall not vote against it.

I tell the Senator frankly that I think the President has a point. The reason why we wrote this exemption into section 315 for the President, was to do the President a favor. I am the one who said to the networks—I do not know whether the Senator was at the meetings, "You cannot compel the President of the United States to enter into debate. I do not want to tell the President what the format should be. If the President of the United States does not feel that he should debate, no one should embarrass him, whether he be a Republican or a Democratic President." I have said this 10 times on the floor of the Senate.

I got an agreement from the networks that they would allow the President, and the candidate against him, to initiate their own format. It would be a format of their own choosing, because of the astronomical cost of the nationwide television program, that this would be helpful to the candidates, be they Republican or Democrat. That is the only reason why we did it.

In the various States, when it comes down to Senators and Representatives, time has been given because we do not have 35 parties running in a particular State for the office of Senator or Representative. We might have an independent or two but, ordinarily, we have the normal number of candidates, Republicans or Democrats.

But, on the national level, we have the Prohibition Party, the party for this and the party for that, and by the time we get through, we have a bunch of bananas.

So I tell my colleague from Vermont very frankly that if he will change that word "if" to "when," so far as I am concerned, I am ready to vote for it now.

Maybe it will not meet with unanimous approval, and even the Senator's colleagues on his side of the aisle may have strong feelings otherwise, that they would want to have a check on an affluent licensee in a particular State; but so far as I am concerned, I find the amendment agreeable, and I am not going to contest it.

Mr. PROUTY. I certainly appreciate the comments and the cooperation of the Senator from Rhode Island. I am perfectly willing to modify the amendment by striking out on page 2, following the colon, the "if" and substituting in lieu thereof the word "when."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. HUMPHREY) The Senator has a right to modify his amendment and, at the request of the Senator, his amendment is modified accordingly.

Mr. PASTORE. I think, if it is agreeable, if we have consumed all the time, but before the vote, we should have a quorum call so that Senators will know what this is all about.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Three minutes remain to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield me 2 minutes?

Mr. PROUTY. I yield the Senator 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized for 2 minutes

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator from Vermont for yielding, so that I may add my entire and enthusiastic agreement to the accord which has now been reached between the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Vermont.

As the Senator from Vermont indicated in his remarks in support of the amendment, which was cosponsored by the Senator from Vermont and myself, I offered this amendment, or at least the first half of the amendment, in the Commerce Committee.

I must say that at that time I was impressed with the candor and frankness of the Senator from Rhode Island in indicating that he felt there was merit in the contention and that on previous occasions the waiver of section 315, as it related to presidents and vice presidents, had produced laudable results and that he felt it might have those results in other races.

Mr. President, I shall not prolong the debate by embellishing the accord reached between the distinguished Senators. I only commend the Senator from Rhode Island for coming to agreement on what I believe to be a very significant item.

This is the first time we have provided for a practical access to television and radio opportunities for candidates other than President and Vice President. I believe that there are bound to be laudatory results. I hope that the amendment will be agreed to.

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Virginia whatever time he might desire.

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator yielding to me. I would like to ask a question of the sponsor of the amendment.

May I ask the Senator from Vermont if the Senator from Virginia understands correctly that the amendment proposes to allow maximum flexibility in determining a program format for all candidates for Federal office, and not just for President and Vice President, as the original bill proposed.

Mr. PROUTY. That is exactly correct.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I would like to say that is not the basic issue. That is sort of a side effect to the main purpose of the amendment. The main purpose is that it fills the time requirement for all candidates and broadens it beyond the President and Vice President.

This means that we are putting a tremendous weapon in the hands of the broadcaster, whether television or radio. He could select the people to whom he wants to give time and he would not have to give equal time to all candidates.

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, I appreciate the statement made by the Senator from Nevada.

Frankly, I did not know that was a basic issue involved. I had been at a meeting of the Finance Committee querying the Secretary of HEW on some budget figures. I could not be here at the time.

That being the case, does the Senator from Rhode Island have adequate time that he could yield to me for the purpose of clarifying this matter?

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I have 7 minutes remaining. How much time does the Senator from Virginia require?

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, I do not know how much time I will require.

Mr. PASTORE. The Senator can continue and if he needs more time, I will yield him time on the bill.

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, I could continue speaking and then offer and amendment if the Senator prefers and take the time from that amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. No; the Senator may keep speaking, and then I will yield him time if necessary on the bill.

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, I ask either the Senator from Rhode Island or the Senator from Nevada in regard to repealing the equal time provision whether that would expand it to congressional or senatorial races.

Mr. PASTORE. The Senator is correct. We left it alone for the President and Vice President. That was because that involved a national question having to do with the networks and because of the prestigious position occupied by the President and Vice President, no national broadcasting network would dare to create a discriminatory position because it involves the highest offices in the land. When it comes to a Senator or a Representative, we are dealing with the licensee and not with the network.

If we have a licensee who is a Democrat and a candidate who is a Republican, he can do what he pleases. That argument can be made. However, we do have the fairness doctrine and the responsibility of the licensee, whose license comes up for renewal every 3 years.

That is about the only tool we have. However, if the Senator from Virginia were to ask me categorically whether, if we repeal the equal time statute, a station could give all of the time to one candidate and jeopardize its license if he wanted to, the answer is yes subject to the fairness doctrine. That is the reason we have section 315.

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, do I assume that the Senator from Rhode Island is opposed to or approves the amendment?

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I approve the amendment because I think overall the industry has reached the stage of maturity in which they can be trusted. I feel that we have the FCC which is a very efficient body. We have our committee, as well. Then we have the fact that every 3 years their licenses may be challenged.

I feel that these are the safeguards. However, I am not ruling out any possible abuse. I am not saying that in the State of Virginia or in the State of Rhode Island it could not happen. I do not know. However, on balance I believe we will find that the broadcast industry is rather a responsible industry when it comes to things of that kind.

I would doubt very much that anyone would even dare, unless it was a brother or a son, to work out a discriminatory arrangement of that kind. They would be scandalized publicly, and public opinion would be against them. In fact, the backlash would hurt the candidate that was being favored more than it would help him. They have to come in for a renewal of their licenses every 3 years and if the man who was prejudiced would rise up and say, "They have not been conducting themselves in the public interest; this is what they did to me," their license would be subject to cancellation.

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, the key point that the Senator made is that the broadcasting industry speaking generally is a responsible industry. I think that what the Senator said is correct.

To get to a broader question, however, does the legislation under discussion, either the pending amendment or the bill itself, discriminate in any way against candidates who are not nominees of either of the major parties?

Mr. PASTORE. Well, the discretion is up to the licensee. And in the State of Virginia—I do not mean to be facetious about this—I do not think, whether my good friend, the Senator from Virginia, ran on the Democratic or Independent ticket, anyone would dare do it to him.

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, I appreciate the statement of the Senator from Rhode Island. I am not sure about that. However, perhaps there will be others elsewhere, and even in Virginia.

As a matter of fact, one individual in Virginia, and I am not of the same political persuasion that he is, is running as an Independent for lieutenant governor. I do not want to see him discriminated against.

I think that everyone, regardless of his political philosophy, should have the same opportunity I have. I am not a champion of this individual who is an Independent candidate for lieutenant governor.

He fought me all he could. He went from one end of the State to the other, trying to defeat me, just as the Republican governor of the State did. However, I do not want to vote for any legislation that would be discriminatory against this individual who is running as an Independent candidate for lieutenant governor.

I assume from what the Senator says that he would be no more discriminated against than would the nominee of the Democratic or Republican Party.

Mr. PASTORE. In other words, the equal time which is now provided by law becomes the equal time for Federal office and the discretion is that of the licensee.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes on the bill.

Mr. President, I point out to the Senator from Virginia that there are probably 50 or 60 different political parties, so-called political parties, throughout the country. Very few of these candidates will receive more than a handful of votes. They are not considered to be candidates by anyone. Under the existing law, anyone who declares himself a candidate as a vegetarian, or something of that nature, would have to be given time if the broadcaster gives time to anyone. It is to get away from that feature that we are providing this amendment.

The Chairman of the Federal Communications Commission made it very evident in testimony before the committee that the fairness doctrine would apply to any of these stations. They have to give fair and equal treatment to all candidates. Certainly a candidate who is perhaps an independent will be given the same equal time as a member of either of the other national parties.

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PROUTY. I yield.

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. The Senator mentioned that there are candidates of minor parties scattered over the Nation, but an independent is not a candidate of any party, whether it be minor or large. I want to be sure that a person who submits his record to the public as an independent has the same standing as does the nominee of the major political party.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 additional minutes on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 2 additional minutes.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I think I can assure the Senator that that will be the case; that any bona fide independent candidate or a candidate running on some other ticket, if he is recognized as a major candidate, who is going to receive substantial support in his area, will be given equal time under this amendment. There is no question about that. It is guaranteed by the fairness doctrine, as well.

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield further, for the purpose of legislative history I would like to make a few comments. If this is the appropriate time, I can do it now or I could do it later, but I would like to make a few comments in regard to the question of an independent candidate so that the legislative history will be clear.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, how much time does the Senator require?

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. I would say 10 minutes.

Mr. PASTORE. Let us give him 5 minutes apiece.

Mr. PROUTY. I agree to that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has a "coalition" of 10 minutes.

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, this is an extremely important piece of legislation and I am speaking now of the total legislation, as well as the amendment which is being considered by the Senate.

First, I think it is very important that there be an election reform bill. I think it is very important that ceilings be placed on campaign spending.

Now, there is another aspect to this bill that is very important and for the purpose of legislative history I want to review what occurred in Virginia last year and what is now occurring in Virginia this year.

I want to query the managers of the bill as to whether the situation which took place last year and which again is taking place this year could be duplicated if anyone so desired in years to come if this legislation is enacted.

Mr. President, to go back to 1970, in February of that year the Democratic State central committee adopted a resolution requiring for the first time in history that anyone who was to file as a candidate in the Democratic primary for U.S. Senator must certify that he would support whomever the Democratic National Convention might nominate for President in 1972.

It was aimed directly at the incumbent senior Senator from Virginia. The incumbent senior Senator from Virginia took this under advisement and he determined that it would not be proper for a Member of the U.S. Senate to sign any such statement. No one knew who the candidate would be or what he would stand for and no one knows today.

I refused to sign such a statement, and submitted my record to the people of Virginia as an independent.

The Republican Party nominated a candidate for the U.S. Senate, and the Democratic Party nominated a candidate for the U.S. Senate. The Republican nominee had the full support of the Republican Governor, who spent full time in the latter part of the campaign going throughout Virginia seeking to eliminate the Senator from Virginia from the U.S. Senate.

The Democratic candidate in every speech that he made—and I would be glad to give his name but I never was able to recall it during the campaign and I cannot recall it now—called the Senator from Virginia "the Republican from Winchester." He made that statement in every speech and he made it very articulately.

The Republican Governor said he approved of my record; he thought I was a very fine Senator; but unless I called myself a Republican he was going to eliminate me—cut off my political head. That is a tough position to be in because in Virginia—and I do not know how it is in other States—the Governor has great power, and he used the full power and prestige of his office even to the extent of writing letters on official stationery of the Governor asking for campaign contributions to my opponent.

So I was in a very difficult position. I do not recommend to any of my colleagues that they get themselves in the same position. But I determined to struggle along as best I could.

I feel I know the people of Virginia fairly well. The people of Virginia are rather independent minded individuals; they do not like someone to tell them what to do; they make up their own minds. I have great confidence in the people of Virginia. I have even more confidence in them today than I did a year ago and I had unbounded confidence in them a year ago.

When the votes were counted, the Governor and his candidate had 14 percent, the Democratic nominee about 30 percent and the incumbent senior senator from Virginia 55 percent.

So the situation last year was that each major party nominated a candidate and the incumbent ran as an independent.

Now we come to this year. Several months ago, the vigorous, attractive, Lieutenant Governor died. It was very tragic; he died of cancer at the age of 33. He had a fine future. That left a vacancy in the office of Lieutenant Governor. The office must be filled this November. Each major party within the next several weeks will nominate a candidate for the office of Lieutenant Governor.

In the meanwhile, a State senator has announced his candidacy as an independent. It just happens that this particular State senator who will be a candidate for Lieutenant Governor as an independent is not of the same philosophy as is the Senator from Virginia, and this candidate for Lieutenant Governor did everything possible to defeat the Senator from Virginia in the general election last November.

But I want to be sure that in any legislation that is passed by the Senate that this State senator who has submitted his candidacy for Lieutenant Governor in Virginia will have the same opportunity insofar as the broadcasting industry is concerned, insofar as the newspapers are concerned, and insofar as any other media communication is concerned as I had as an independent last year. I want to be sure he will have the same opportunity that the Senator from Virginia had last year; and I want to be sure also that, if conditions require it, anyone who desires to run for public office as an independent will have an opportunity to do so without being handicapped by any law that might be passed by the Congress of the United States.

As I understand it, there is nothing in this legislation which would change in any way the situation which existed in Virginia last year, and is now existing in Virginia this year; which is to say, to phrase it another way, if this legislation is enacted the Senator from Virginia or a member of the State senate or any individual citizen in my State or any other State, for that matter, may submit his record or candidacy to the people as an independent and will not be discriminated against in any way if either this bill or this amendment is approved.

May I ask the manager of the bill whether my understanding is correct.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, the Senator has put his language in the extreme, and I am afraid I cannot affirm it in any way. I think the possibility for abuse is still there. I think a licensee would do so at his own peril. But I want to say to the Senator from Virginia the reason we reported a bill confining it to the Presidency and Vice Presidency was that I felt this was a matter that had to be determined on the floor of the Senate. I know this is not acceptable to every Senator. I know there are Senators who have hard feelings. As far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing to vote for this amendment, because if I can say to the President of the United States, "We shall exempt your office from the provisions of 315," I do not think I can stand up and say, "Insofar as you are concerned, Senator PASTORE, the same rule should not apply to you."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has only 1 minute remaining.

Mr. PASTORE. Then I give myself the other minute from the time on the bill.

The President of the United States took that position. That is exactly what he said. That argument was made by some of my colleagues before the committee. I think it was made by the Senator from Vermont (Mr. PROUTY) and the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER).

I say very frankly, I do not care whether one is a Republican or Democrat, this is an issue which has to be decided from good conscience. As far as I am concerned, I am going to vote for the Prouty amendment, but that does not mean every Senator will vote the same way from his convictions. If anyone thinks this amendment will put him at the mercy of a private licensee, he should vote against it. If he feels that way, he should vote against the Prouty amendment.

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, the point I am trying to make clear is that this does not put an independent candidate at the mercy of a licensee any more than it puts a candidate in a major party at the mercy of a licensee.

Mr. PROUTY. Precisely. As a matter of fact, if the licensee wanted to abuse the law, he could give all the time to an independent; but we are talking only about free time now.

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. We are talking about free time. The point I am trying to establish, and I believe the Senator from Rhode Island has established it, is that if the legislation is adopted it will not put the independent candidate in any more adverse position than it would put the candidate of a major party.

Mr. PASTORE. Exactly.

Mr. BYRD of Virginia. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time on the amendment has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Vermont (Mr. PROUTY), as modified. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. ELLENDER), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH), and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. STENNIS) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. ELLENDER) would vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1

NOT VOTING—7

Bayh	Hughes	Stennis
Eastland	Mundt
Ellender	Randolph

So Mr. PROUTY's amendment (No. 343), as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PASTORE. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, because of prior personal participation in the broadcasting industry and continuing family and trust interests in a broadcasting company, it has been and will continue to be my practice to answer "present" on matters directly affecting broadcasting.

Accordingly, I have answered "present" on this amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question recurs on amendment No. 308.

Who yields time? Time remains on amendment No. 308.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PASTORE. Is anything pending at the moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Pastore amendment, No. 308, is pending.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I cannot ask for third reading. Will someone who has an amendment offer it?

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 272.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Would the majority leader yield back his time on the Pastore amendment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. The Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE) has all my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 6, strike lines 9 through 13 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For the purposes of computing the limitation provided by the first sentence of this paragraph in connection with a Presidential primary election, the resident population of voting age for the office of President shall be held and considered to be the entire population of voting age for such office within the State in which such primary election is conducted. Amounts spent by or on behalf of any candidate for nomination for election to such office in connection with his primary campaign in any State shall not exceed such limitation for that State."

On page 11, strike lines 19 through 23 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For the purposes of computing the limitation provided by the first sentence of this paragraph in connection with a Presidential primary election, the resident population of voting age for the office of President shall be held and considered to be the entire resident population of voting age for such office within the State in which such primary election is conducted. Amounts spent by or on behalf of any candidate for nomination for election to such office in connection with his primary campaign in any State shall not exceed such limitation for that State."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. How much time does the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. MATHIAS. I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. President, this amendment deals with the spending limitations for presidential primaries. The language, as reasonably construed, is interpreted to mean that a candidate for President calculates how much he can spend in any one primary by first determining how much he can legally spend in the Nation at large—which is 5 cents multiplied by the resident population. Taking this figure, he can then divide that amount by as many primaries as he may wish to enter.

We have all been interested and, perhaps, amused at the sweepstakes going on among New Hampshire and other States that want to be first with the presidential primary. Maybe they have more of a point than we realize. Perhaps it is important from an economic point of view for a State to have the first primary. This is an amendment which brings that very much to mind. As presently drafted a candidate may spend his allocated amount all in one State primary, or he may enter three, 10, or 50 primaries.

I would submit, with due respect to the committee, that the language should be tightened up. It is much too general. Perhaps the chairman of the committee can help us to define what is meant by "resident population." Is he talking about residents who will participate in the primary party, just Democrats, or just Republicans, or is he talking about the resident population of an entire State?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KENNEDY). Does the Senator wish his amendment to be modified to apply to the substitute amendment rather than the bill?

Mr. MATHIAS. That is right.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is so modified.

Mr. MATHIAS. The specific points in the bill that would be involved are on page 5, lines 3 to 7, and on page 8, lines 17 to 21.

The text of amendment No. 272, as modified, is as follows:

On page 5, strike lines 3 through 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For the purposes of computing the limitation provided by the first sentence of this paragraph in connection with a Presidential primary election, the resident population of voting age for the office of President shall be held and considered to be the entire population of voting age for such office within the State in which such primary election is conducted. Amounts spent by or on behalf of any candidate for nomination for election to such office in connection with his primary campaign in any State shall not exceed such limitation for that State."

On page 8, strike lines 17 through 21 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"For the purposes of computing the limitation provided by the first sentence of this paragraph in connection with a Presidential primary election, the resident population of voting age for the office of President shall be held and considered to be the entire resident population of voting age for such office within the State in which such primary election is conducted. Amounts spent by or on behalf of any candidate for nomination for election to such office in connection with his primary campaign in any State shall not exceed such limitation for that State."

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I think that, as drawn, the bill limits broad-based participation by all States and their respective citizens. Congress should declare a policy that it desires more rather than less presidential primaries, that it desires more citizens of more States to have a realistic opportunity to determine the party nominee of their party for the office of President of the United States. It would be patently unfair for a man who aspires to be President to choose to enter one symbolic primary, be it in New Hampshire or Florida, or wherever, and to spend exorbitant amounts of money in that single primary to the exclusion of other and perhaps equally important State primaries, and to use the State's population base for the purpose of spending ceilings in the primary of his choice.

This amendment would limit the amount a presidential candidate can spend to 5 cents multiplied by the estimated number of residents in each State the candidate enters a primary. The amendment does not limit the candidate's choice but what it does is to encourage every presidential candidate to go into more primaries which, in the end, will result in a more responsive and a more responsible system of nominating a President.

In a general election, of course, no similar restrictions, in my judgment, should be applied. There, the nominees of the parties stumping the country in the final election drive could make any determination that they chose, in their own judgment and discretion, as to where the moneys allowed under the general limitation could be spent. But in the primary there is a different situation. It seems to me it should be a matter of declared public policy, to encourage a candidate who wants to be the nominee of his party not to throw all that he is legally allowed to spend into one or a few primaries, to the detriment of the entire electoral system.

Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will adopt this amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Maryland yield?

Mr. MATHIAS. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. I have no personal objection to the amendment. I raised the question with the staff that, when we use the expression "resident population of voting age," I was wondering whether the Senator took the language we used in the substitute or whether he used the eligible vote. I think we both join in meaning, but there is a question of whether, by reference, we may be confusing the issue. In other words, a resident vote, of course, could be even an alien or one not qualified to vote.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me to interject there, the language in the substitute states:

Multipled by the estimated resident population of voting age for such office.

Mr. PASTORE. All right. I thank the Senator. I do not know about my other colleagues, but I do not see any objection to the amendment. What the Senator is saying is that, in a primary, he does not want to allow the candidate for the office of President to pick and choose a particular State. It could be that he would want to go into a particular State to make a big impression.

Mr. MATHIAS. Yes. He may think it better for the public relations value of the thing to go into X State.

Mr. PASTORE. The same thing applies as for a Senator running on a statewide basis.

Mr. MATHIAS. That is correct.

Mr. PASTORE. I see no objection to the amendment. I am perfectly willing to accept it. I do not know about my other colleagues on the floor, of course, but, if it is necessary to take a vote, I suggest we do it now.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. MATHIAS. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CHILES). The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland, as modified, No. 272.

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 271

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 271 and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the amendment as follows:

On page 5, line 2, before the semicolon insert the following: "or (3) has publicly announced his candidacy for such office or has knowledge or information that any other person or political committee has received contributions or made expenditures for the purpose of bringing about his nomination for election, or election, to such an office and has not notified that person or political committee in writing to cease receiving such contributions or making such expenditures".

On page 10, line 2, before the semicolon insert a comma and the following: "or (C) has publicly announced his candidacy for such office or who has knowledge or information that any other person or political committee has received contributions or made expenditures for the purpose of bringing about his nomination for election, or election, to such an office and has not notified that person or political committee in writing to cease receiving such contributions or making such expenditures".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator wish to modify his amendment to conform to the substitute amendment?

Mr. MATHIAS. Yes; I make that request. The necessary pagination is page 4, lines 5 to 10, and page 7, lines 11 to 16.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is so modified.

The text of amendment No. 271, as modified, is as follows:

On page 4, line 10, before the semicolon insert the following: "or (3) has publicly announced his candidacy for such office or has knowledge or information that any other person or political committee has received contributions or made expenditures for the purpose of bringing about his nomination for election, or election, to such an office and has not notified that person or political committee in writing to cease receiving such contributions or making such expenditures".

On page 7, line 16, before the semicolon insert a comma and the following: "or (C) has publicly announced his candidacy for such office or who has knowledge or information that any other person or political committee has received contributions or made expenditures for the purpose of bringing about his nomination for election, or election, to such an office and has not notified that person or political committee in writing to cease receiving such contributions or making such expenditures".

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, this amendment deals with the definition of a legally qualified candidate. Unless a candidate comes within this legislative definition, he is free to spend as much as he wants and is excluded from the spending limitations of the bill. It is all very well for Congress, in its attempt to reform the election laws, to establish ceilings, limitations, and disclosure regulations, but unless they apply to actual people who are running for public office, it does not mean very much.

The definition as presently drafted has two parts: first, that the candidate qualify under Federal law. In the case of the U.S. Senate, this means that the candidate must be 30 years of age, and a citizen of the United States, whether natural or naturalized.

Second, he qualifies under applicable State law.

Mr. President, I submit that this is not enough. As drafted, both provisions omit any affirmative action by the candidate and only contemplate a passive, formalized series of acts of qualifying oneself for a candidate.

There may be situations in which a candidate would not, perhaps even could not, qualify under State law, although he might be running down the pike at a full gallop and in this case he would not be covered under "applicable State law" and thus excluded from the spending ceilings. He may be a candidate in the eyes of the public and a candidate in his own eyes, and yet not be covered by the bill.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, let us assume that someone invites the distinguished Senator to make a speech in California. Let us further assume that that Senator had in mind that he would like to be a candidate for the President of the United States. We would then get into the precise definition that is already recorded in the register and is the definition adopted by the regulations promulgated by the FCC. I am afraid that we are going to be doing a lot of crystal ball gazing. At what point do we know whether a man is a candidate unless he says so or qualifies under Federal law?

There is a period of time that is rather nebulous. It is true that we have a lot of men who are going all over the country making speeches. Whether they will become candidates or not, I do not know. However, when does anyone know that anyone else is a candidate unless that person says so.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island raises a possibility that is so remote that it is very difficult for me to answer it seriously. However, let me talk about it in more general terms, because there are people here to whom the question is not as remote as it is to me.

I think we can tell. We can tell that there are people in the Senate today who are thinking of being candidates. It is not any mystery. When one begins to collect money to open an office and to start to make expenditures which are campaign-type expenditures, I think this indicates more than something that is just in one's mind. I think it is something in one's mind which is being expressed.

I agree that we will always have these remarkable situations where, if an east coast Member goes to the west coast, and begins to make speeches and nothing more, it may have the effect of enhancing his reputation and improving his capabilities for the Presidency. However, it is not necessarily the act of a candidate. But when there is the collection of money for the purpose of being a candidate, with the candidate's knowledge—and which he has not disavowed—these are the circumstances my amendment touches.

Then I believe we have the situation which the law can identify and recognize. I think that is the point at which we ought to say that this bill takes hold.

There are also situations where one can actually file under some State law and then, because of the anomaly of different State laws, not become a candidate for a period of time, for as much as 10 days. Under those circumstances, he would still have the freedom to act without respect to the limitation of the bill as presently drafted.

For these reasons, I think we ought to expand the coverage so that we do include candidates who are merely running in their own minds or in the eyes of the public, who can accrue whatever benefits can be accrued from spending, but are not being limited or held accountable under the provisions of the bill.

I hope the amendment will be agreed to. It covers what I think is a serious loophole in the bill.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I mean to be very cooperative. I tell the Senator that any reasonable suggestion that may be made will be given consideration. However, as I said before, in the spirit of cooperation and developing a bipartisan bill, which is necessary because of the critical and crucial situation. I am willing to go along. However, on this amendment, I am afraid that we are dealing with something that may turn out to be a can of worms.

We debated this from every angle before the committee. It is one section of the bill that we devoted a little more time to than we devoted to other sections.

I hope that we would not do anything to disturb the already accepted definition of a legally qualified candidate.

I hope that the Senator would withdraw the amendment. Otherwise, I would have to move to lay it on the table.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD my reasons for being opposed to the amendment.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 271

Mr. President, my amendment to S. 332 defines "legally qualified candidate" solely for purposes of determining when the limitation on a candidate's expenditures becomes applicable. It is a paraphrase of the regulations and rulings of the FCC as published in the Federal Register, and I have here a copy of the FCC's primer on this matter. That definition is precise; its meaning is readily ascertainable by all concerned—the candidates and the media suppliers; and it is easily enforced.

Of course, one can make up remote, hypothetical situations where its intent could be evaded. But that is true of every piece of legislation ever conceived by the mind of man.

In the world of political campaign reality, however, the definition in my amendment will, for purposes of the spending limitation, make candidates identifiable.

Mr. President, the additional language of definition of "legally qualified candidate" in any attempt to include a class of individuals described by the sponsor of the amendment as "inchoate candidates." These are individuals, according to the amendment sponsor, who could not at a particular point in time, qualify as a candidate under State law, though clearly a candidate in the eye of both the public and himself.

In attempting to reach these candidates, the amendment would, in my judgment, create greater problems than the one it is designed to cure.

Under the amendment anyone who has knowledge or information that any other person or political committee has received contributions or made expenditures for the purpose of bringing about his nomination for election, or reelection, and has not notified that person or political committee in writing to cease receiving such contributions or making such expenditures, would be a "legally qualified candidate" for purposes of the spending limitation even if he is not qualified under applicable State law and Federal law.

Mr. President, this amendment can only cause confusion and uncertainty among the media suppliers, the candidates, and those who must enforce the legislation.

How, for example, can an individual be charged with knowing every person or committee who makes a contribution or expenditure in order to bring about his election? It also seems to me that this requirement could be easily evaded if someone were disposed to do so.

Moreover, it would bring within the purview of the legislation people who could not possibly be elected for the particular office, because they were not and could not legally qualify. This, it seems to me, would add a needless burden on everyone.

I, therefore, urge the Senate to reject the amendment. The present definition is more than adequate to deal effectively with the situations the legislation is designed to alleviate.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Rhode Island certainly has exhibited the desire to be helpful and cooperative, and I appreciate it. I also understand his feeling that we are in an area that is hard to define. However, because it is difficult to do does not mean that it ought not to be done. I think we can do it with the language I propose which deals with the acts of a man who should be covered by the bill. And these are definable. They are observable. They are not hard to recognize. I believe that the Senate ought to make a decision on it.

I think when we are talking about a man who has publicly announced his candidacy for office or who allows other people to puff up his candidacy with his knowledge and without any denial on his part that we are talking about a man who ought to be covered.

I think a man who allows a committee to be formed to receive money, which he does not disavow, has done something which is clearly within the realm of the legal definition and could be comprehended by the bill.

I believe that if we do not do this, we will then have the bucket of worms that the Senator from Rhode Island mentions. This is never going to get to the marginal case which the Senator and I discussed a moment ago. The marginal case is that of someone who goes out and simply puts up trial balloons in the normal course of public service and in the exercise of the duties of one in public life. We will not get to that. However, in those cases, we are not talking about collecting and disbursing money. Here we are talking about the real possibility that people are collecting and expending different sums of money and that they will accrue the benefit of a public relations campaign which results from those expenditures.

There are things in this area, such as name identification, which can be a very large asset to a man who is relatively unknown before he becomes a candidate. If his name is identified through a public relations campaign before he becomes a candidate, this would give him a substantial advantage over another candidate who has not made those expenditures or whose expenditures for such purposes were in fact limited by the law.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I recognize the problem. I am not saying that there is not merit in what the Senator says. The only trouble is that if we begin to tamper with an accepted definition of something that is very important—what is a legally qualified candidate—I am afraid that if we do it off the top of our heads, we will develop more trouble than we have. When we start talking about candidates, as far as I know we have two or three avowed candidates, and I guess every other Member of the Senate is running for the Presidency. I do not know. But the fact is that one has to go to the convention to get the nomination no matter what, and there is a limitation in there now that they cannot spend more in a State than an amount based on the resident population of the State. I think we should try it this way, without this disturbance. If there is some abuse, perhaps we can try it another way later, but I hope the Senator will not pursue this now.

Mr. MATHIAS. The Senator said we should not do this off the tops of our heads. I agree. I have tried not to do that. But I suggest that this is an untried definition in the amendment. The Federal Communications Commission has regulations and in their regulations they have definitions. If the Senator will bear with me further, I would like to read the definition which is in force under the FCC regulations. It states:

A "legally qualified candidate" means any person who has publicly announced that he is a candidate for nomination by a convention of a political party or for nomination or election in a primary, special, or general election, municipal, county, State or national, and who meets the qualifications prescribed by the applicable laws to hold the office for which he is a candidate, so that he may be voted for by the electorate directly or by means of delegates or electors, and who:

(1) Has qualified for a place on the ballot.

This is an expanded definition. It goes beyond that.

Mr. PASTORE. That is our definition. The paraphrase of that. That is exactly the point I am making.

Mr. MATHIAS. I do not believe that the committee bill makes reference to an announcement or to one who holds himself out as a candidate. The committee bill refers to one who qualified and there is a big difference between announcing and qualifying.

The unfortunate fact is that the broader definition and the more inclusive definition would be superseded by the statute, by the act of Congress, and I believe in the process we would be enlarging a loophole which the Federal Communications Commission has attempted by regulation to close.

It is for this reason I press this point because I think the bill, by eliminating not only those who allow others to act for them, but even those who say frankly, "I am a candidate," permits expenditures that should not be allowed.

Mr. PASTORE. As I said before, unless the Senator withdraws his amendment I am going to move to table it at this time. I would not want to do it but I certainly cannot accept it at this moment. I am afraid we would confuse the bill.

Mr. MATHIAS. With all deference to the Senator from Rhode Island, I feel that the question of who is qualified and who is covered is a very important point.

If the Senator feels he must move to table, I certainly understand.

I think the loophole is too big. I think we should agree to the amendment but I am perfectly willing to put the matter to a vote, if the Senator wishes to do so.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I move to lay the amendment on the table.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time must be yielded back first. Is all time yielded back?

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

Mr. PASTORE. I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is not a sufficient second.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Rhode Island to table the amendment (No. 271) of the Senator from Maryland, as modified. The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from Indiana, (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. STENNIS), and the Senator from Missouri (Mr. SYMINGTON) are necessarily absent.

I further announce, that if present and voting, the Senator from Missouri (Mr. SYMINGTON) would vote "yea."

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

The Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) are detained on official business, and, if present and voting, would each vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 40, as follows:

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT

A message in writing from the President of the United States, submitting the Locarno Agreement Establishing an International Classification for Industrial Designs, was communicated to the Senate by Mr. Leonard, one of his secretaries.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 382) to promote fair practices in the conduct of election campaigns for Federal political offices, and for other purposes.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I have introduced amendment No. 291 to S. 382, the Campaign Reform Act of 1971. The amendment creates a franking privilege for all candidates in Federal elections. I strongly believe that the equitable use of this privilege by all candidates would be a major contribution to the electoral process.

It is equally important, however, that the Congress and now the Senate, pass meaningful reform legislation. I believe to call up this amendment now, would seriously affect the chances of passage of S. 382, and, I clearly do not wish to do this. Amendments to S. 382 have been limited to changes in the language of the reported bill and new titles like the one proposed in my franking privilege amendment have been postponed for individual consideration.

In addition, the Post Office and Civil Service Committee of the Senate under the distinguished and able leadership of Chairman McGEE have not had the opportunity to consider this important matter, and I feel the Senate could greatly benefit from its involvement.

Mr. President, I shall not call up Amendment No. 291 for consideration by the Senate and I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a letter written to me from Chairman McGEE indicating his plans to hold hearings in the very near future on this subject matter.

Mr. President, I do not intend to drop this important addition to campaign reform, but only await consideration by the Post Office and Civil Service Committee until I again pursue its useful objectives.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AUGUST 2, 1971.

The Honorable CHARLES MCC MATHIAS, JR.
United States Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: Thank you for your note concerning your interest in removing your amendment #291 to S. 382, the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971.

Like you, I see great advantages to limiting the number of amendments to the campaign reform bill. Your offer to withdraw your amendment is commendable.

As you know, the Administration has introduced legislation which comes very close to accomplishing what this amendment would provide. This administration bill has already been referred to this Committee.

Although we have not yet had the opportunity to hear this legislation, you can rest assured that following the August recess this Committee will schedule hearings as soon as the calendar allows.

Best wishes.

Sincerely,

GALE MCGEE,
Chairman.

AMENDMENT NO. 273

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 273, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 9, beginning with line 6, strike down through line 25 and substitute in lieu thereof:

"(d) if a State by law and expressly—

"(1) has provided that a primary or other election for any office of such State or of a political subdivision thereof is subject to this subsection, and

"(2) has specified a limitation upon total expenditures for the use of broadcasting stations on behalf of the candidacy of each legally qualified candidate in such election, and

"(3) has provided in any such law an unequivocal expression of intent to be bound by the provisions of this section, and

"(4) has stipulated that the amount of such limitation shall not exceed the amount which would be determined for such election under subsection (3) had such election been an election for a Federal elective office or nomination thereto;

then no station licensee may make any charge for the use of such station by or on behalf of any legally qualified candidate in such election unless such candidate, or a person specifically authorized by such candidate in writing to do so, certifies to such licensee in writing that the payment of such charge will not violate such limitation."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator wish to offer his amendment to the Pastore substitute?

Mr. MATHIAS. Yes, it is offered to the substitute, and for the purpose of conforming—

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, we cannot hear the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

The Senator from Maryland may proceed.

Mr. MATHIAS. I offer the amendment to the substitute. For the purpose of conforming it with the Pastore bill, the opposite lines are on page 9, lines 6 through 25.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I yield myself 3 minutes.

This is a very simple amendment, very uncomplicated. It might be called a States rights amendment. It is to preserve the control of the States over their own participation in the electoral process. In the lines that have been proposed to be amended, in the broadcast section of the bill, it is provided that if the Federal Communications Commission makes certain findings as to the applicability of a State law, then that State's candidates will come within the purview of the bill as it pertains to licensees, certification, and spending ceilings.

I certainly support the committee very strongly in the goal which I believe to have been intended by this language—the goal of providing some uniformity and some voluntary compliance with Federal law.

But I would raise the constitutional question of instructing a Federal agency, the FCC, to determine the applicability of the laws of one of the States of the Union. I would suggest—and I have suggested by this amendment—that we leave the question of determination to the States and to the judicial system. I can see that there might be some tendency on the part of the States—which have also labored, as we are working here, for electoral reform—to resent this preemption in the effort to get some uniformity in the election laws.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MATHIAS. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. What we did in this bill was merely to recommend that the States follow suit. The decision is to be theirs. But because broadcasters and licensees have to report what candidates spend, we brought the FCC into the picture in the event that a State decided to limit the amount of money that a candidate for State office could spend in order to run for State office.

What this amendment does—and I think it clarifies the situation—is to say explicitly that the State shall make the determination and call upon the FCC for this guidance.

Is that not all the Senator intends to do?

Mr. MATHIAS. The Senator is exactly correct.

Mr. PASTORE. I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I yield.

Mr. PROUTY. I, too, wish to assure the Senator from Maryland of my support. I think it is a very worthwhile amendment.

Mr. MATHIAS. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all time on the amendment yielded back?

Mr. MATHIAS. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. PASTORE. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland.

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT NO. 312

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 312.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 34, line 5, before the period insert the following: "except that any contribution of $5,000 or more received after the last report is filed prior to the election, shall be reported within twenty-four hours after its receipt."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator wish to modify the amendment?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I offer a modified amendment, the only change being made to conform it to the line numbers of the Senator from Rhode Island's amendment. I send to the desk the modified amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The modified amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 25, line 9, before the period insert the following: "except that any contribution of $5,000 or more received after the last report is filed prior to the election, shall be reported within twenty-four hours after its receipt."

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, what we have now, in essence, is a 10-day grace period in which to file a report, 10 days prior to the election, because it is reported on a Thursday before the Tuesday, and a person need not file anything received within 5 days before that. There is the possibility—and I will call it more than that; there is this probability—if one has ever looked at the preelection and postelection reporting, an extraordinarily large amount of money comes into the campaign—I think deliberately prearranged—after the deadline for preelection reporting. We now have a 10-day period, in essence, between the deadline and the last day in which a report has to show money received, in which money can come in.

I am not suggesting that we are going to account for every nickel and dime in that 10-day period. I am asking that any contribution in excess of $5,000—and that is not very often, in most campaigns—be reported within 24 hours of its receipt, so that the voters might be aware of any large last-minute contributions that are filed.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, the way the bill is drafted, and the way my substitute is drafted at the moment, there is no limit to a contribution. I understand that there will be several amendments to accomplish exactly that. Whether or not this amendment is premature, I do not know.

Mr. PACKWOOD. This is not a limit on the size of the contributions.

Mr. PASTORE. I know it is not. But the Senator is talking about $5,000 or more. The question arises that if we limit the contribution to $5,000, "or more" does not apply any more.

Mr. PACKWOOD. The Senator's question confuses me. There is no limit. If somebody wants to give $25,000—

Mr. PASTORE. I know. But I am saying to the Senator that there will be a move here to limit the contribution to $5,000, that no one can give more than $5,000. What the Senate will do with that, I do not know. All I am saying, is that this amendment seems to jump the gun a little, because the Senator refers to anyone who contributes $5,000 or more. The words "or more" may not apply once we work on the other amendments.

I wonder whether the Senator would postpone this amendment for a while, until we determine what is going to happen to the other feature.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I have no objection, if we get to the stage of putting on the campaign limitation of $5,000, to strike out "or more." I want to make sure that money is not sneaked into a campaign in the last 10 days.

Mr. PASTORE. I have no objection to the amendment, if we have that limitation. I think we ought to wait and see what happens, and then we will entertain the Senator's amendment.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Then, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is withdrawn.

Who yields time?

AMENDMENT NO. 303

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 303.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I send to the desk a modified version of this amendment, so that it conforms with the Pastore substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the modified amendment.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 27, line 21, strike "Sec. 305." and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 305. (a)".

On page 28, between lines 4 and 5, insert the following:

(b) Any person who lends $10,000 or more within any calendar year to any candidate, political committee, or any candidate and one or more political committees supporting such candidate, shall report such loan to the Comptroller General within 5 days after such loan is granted. The report shall disclose the amount, term, interest rate, and date of the loan, the name of the person to whom such loan was made, the names and addresses of any endorsers of such loan, and the amount of such endorsements.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, what is the number of this amendment?

Mr. PACKWOOD. No. 303.

Mr. President, this amendment is intended to require people who lend $10,000 or more to candidates to divulge this fact.

I think most of us are familiar with the fact that quite often campaigns are financed on "loans" rather than contributions. Sometimes those loans are repaid, sometimes not. This amendment is not designed to determine whether or not the loans are repaid or whether they shall be treated as gifts. It simply says that at any time someone loans $10,000 or more to a candidate—which is not regarded at the time as a contribution—that information shall be reported immediately, or within 5 days, to the commission.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PACKWOOD. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I think this provision is unduly restrictive. S. 382 requires candidates and committees to report contributions and loans. To require banks to report on loans made in the ordinary course of business would be quite unreasonable. This certainly would make that imposition.

In other words, banks are in the lending business; and any time they make a loan of $10,000 or more, they would be required to report it, under the provisions of this amendment. I do not think it is necessary; and, under the circumstances, I would have to oppose it.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I would like to know if Chase Manhattan or Bank of America or some large donor is lending $10,000 to a campaign, and I would like to know it soon, not just within the reporting time provisions in the act.

The amendment is designed to get at exactly what the Senator has suggested. If a bank makes a loan in the normal course of business—a loan of $25,000 or $50,000—to a candidate, it is not going to be reported posthaste under the bill. It is going to be reported in due course. I think a loan of that size, $10,000 or more, should be reported as soon as possible.

Mr. CANNON. I have nothing further to say, Mr. President. I am opposed to the amendment. I think it is unreasonable.

The reporting provisions we have in the bill requiring periodic reports as well as reports in advance of election time are adequate. We require reports on the part of the candidate and on the part of the committee.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I want to ask for the yeas and nays, but before doing so, will yield back my time if the Senator from Nevada will yield back his time.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. (Mr. COOK). All time on the amendment has been yielded back.

Mr. PACKWOOD. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays on my amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I move to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Oregon (No. 303).

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Nevada (Mr. CANNON) to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Oregon.

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. HUGHES) and the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. STENNIS) are necessarily absent.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WHICKER) are detained on official business.

If present and voting, the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from Texas (Mr. TOWER) would each vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 43, as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 349

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 349.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The amendment was read as follows:

On page 4, beginning with line 16, strike down through line 7 on page 5 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) (A) No legally qualified candidate in any primary, runoff, general, or special election for a Federal elective office may spend for the use of broadcasting stations on behalf of his candidacy in such election a total amount in excess of—

"(1) 5 cents multiplied by the estimate of resident population of voting age for such office, as determined by the Bureau of Census in June of the year preceding the year in which the election is to be held; or

"(2) $30,000, if greater than the amount determined under clause (1).

A legally qualified candidate for nomination for election to the office of President may not spend a total amount for all primary elections held for such office in which he is a candidate in excess of the limitation provided by the first sentence of this paragraph.

"(B) In addition to the amount which he may spend under paragraph (2) (A) of this subsection for the use of broadcast communications media in connection with his campaign, a candidate for Federal office may spend for such use any unspent portion of the amount he is authorized to spend for the use of nonbroadcast communications media under section 103 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971."

On page 8, strike lines 6 through 21, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(c) (1) No legally qualified candidate in any primary, runoff, general, or special election for a Federal elective office may spend for the use of nonbroadcast communications media on behalf of his candidacy in such election a total amount in excess of—

"(A) 5 cents multiplied by the estimate of resident population of voting age for such office, as determined by the Bureau of Census in June of the year preceding the year in which the election is to be held; or

"(B) $30,000, if greater than the amount determined under subparagraph (A).

A legally qualified candidate for nomination for election to the office of President may not spend a total amount for all primary elections held for such office in which he is a candidate in excess of the limitation provided by the first sentence of this paragraph.

"(2) In addition to the amount which he may spend under this subsection for the use of nonbroadcast communications media in connection with his campaign, a candidate for Federal office may spend for such use any unspent portion of the amount he is authorized to spend for the use of broadcast communications media under section 315 (c) of the Communications Act of 1934 (47 U.S.C. 315(c))."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair wishes to ask the Senator if this is one of the amendments on which there is a 3-hour time limitation.

Mr. PROUTY. It is, Mr. President, I yield myself 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont may proceed.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I realize that there are many who believe that any spending limitation for political candidates is unwise and may be unconstitutional. For example, Prof. Ralph Winter of Yale Law School testified before the Senate Commerce Committee, as follows:

Any limitation on spending in political campaigns, whether limited to spending for certain media or encompassing spending generally, violates the First Amendment. This applies to any limitation on the amount of money that a person can contribute as an individual contribution to a campaign.

It is my judgment that the First Amendment plainly prohibits the setting of a legal maximum on the political activities in which an individual may engage. This is the case whether or not the maximum is imposed in the name of equalizing opportunity or whether an actual discriminatory effect can be shown.

In both the Senate Commerce Committee and the Rules Committee, we gave serious consideration to the question of the constitutionality of a spending limitation. I, for one, was convinced that such a limitation could be constitutional. However, as with any first amendment right, the limitation must be a reasonable one.

As you know, Mr. President, the bill reported by the Senate Commerce Committee had separate but identical limitations for the broadcast and nonbroadcast communications media. In Rules Committee, we adopted the same spending limitation but to avoid overstructuring of the political process, we permitted a candidate to spend any unspent portion of one limitation as an additional amount for the other limitation. This interchangeability feature is the feature which makes any spending limitation reasonable.

Mr. President, when we consider spending limitations, I think it is important for us to remember what the spending limitation does. First of all, any spending limitation favors the incumbent. This fact is particularly true with regard to spending limitations on the communications media.

Why is this the case? There are a number of reasons; but, perhaps the greatest reason is the fact that incumbents are generally better known than challengers. Moreover, incumbents can more easily make news by the way they vote or by the stands they take on important issues.

A recent editorial in Time magazine urged Congress to enact no spending ceiling. It concluded by stating that "money is the great equalizer in the American political system." I am not sure that I completely agree with that premise, but I can understand it. We all should be able to understand it when we consider that under the present system which is completely without spending limitations over 93 percent of the Congressmen and Senators who have run for reelection since 1940 have been successful. Any limit that we place on a challengers ability to spend money in order to convince the voters that an incumbent has served long enough will tend to be viewed as incumbent insurance.

Mr. President, the spending ceilings in S. 382 are relatively unimportant as far as meaningful reform of our election laws are concerned. For example, the repeal of the equal time requirement of section 315(a) for all Federal candidates is much more than election reform because the effect of the repeal is to increase rather than diminish the exchange of political ideas. The amendments to the Criminal Code which eliminate the unregulated District of Columbia Political Committee and prevent political candidates from running up big bills that they do not pay. It is far more important to insure that political candidates do not violate the law getting elected to office than it is to tell them how they should allocate their resources in a campaign. It is most important that the financing of political campaigns be subject to full and complete disclosure so that the voters can know where a candidate gets his money and how he spends it.

I hope that every Member of this body fully understands the significant difference between spending limitations and all other parts of this bill. Spending limitations by their very nature have a limiting effect while all other provisions have the effect of encouraging above-board honest elections.

As we consider this bill, Mr. President, I hope that the broad perspective I have just outlined will be kept in mind. Amendment No. 308 chooses a method for limiting expenditures which is far inferior to the method adopted by the Rules Committee. By trying to impose separate spending limitations on broadcast and nonbroadcast communications media, amendment No. 308 ignores all of the testimony presented before both committees.

Our distinguished majority leader (Mr. MANSFIELD) submitted testimony and a number of letters to the Senate Commerce Committee. In his letter to Joseph Sample, Senator MANSFIELD probably best summed up the problem when he stated:

I am hopeful the final version of the bill will contain the type of leeway and discretion to each candidate to permit the transfer of amounts from one category to another, depending upon individual judgment and needs of that candidate. I do believe that the overall limitations provided in the bill are adequate, but it is true that a challenger to an incumbent may justly and validly need to expend more of his campaign funds on name identification which can probably more validly be achieved through the electronic media. I would not want any bill with which I associated to be considered a bill for the protection of incumbents.

We all know, Mr. President, that a campaign for the U.S. Senate in Wyoming or Maine is going to have very different requirements than a campaign for the U.S. Senate in New York or California—or even Rhode Island. We all know, Mr. President, that a congressional candidate in New York City may not even be able to afford television at all, while a congressional candidate in Wyoming may find that television is the only way to reach all of the voters.

What rational basis is there for setting separate limitations? Let me read to you the reasons contained on page 30 of the Commerce Committee report:

Some of the witnesses who testified before your Committee urged there be one total limitation on all media spending with discretion left to the candidate to determine what amounts to spend on broadcast and nonbroadcast advertising. There is merit to this contention especially since campaigns differ according to the personal style of a candidate and the area of the country in which the election is being held.

On the balance, however, your Committee opted against such an approach. Television is unquestionably the most used media in political campaigns, and it has been the most significant contributor to the spiraling cost of these campaigns. If candidates were given complete discretion to spend on the use of this media your Committee was fearful that in the closing months of a campaign the airwaves might become inundated with political broadcasts to the exclusion of entertainment and other public interest programs.

The Deputy Attorney General of the United States, Richard G. Kleindienst, replied to that report language in his testimony before the Rules Committee. He stated:

We think the economic facts of life in the broadcasting industry and the long term self-interest of broadcasters will adequately protect the public from any real possibility of an inundation of the air by political advertisements. We also believe that compartmentalized spending limitations ignore differences in candidates and variances in media coverage capabilities and media rates throughout the Nation. Candidates should have the flexibility to structure their campaigns to produce the most efficient and effective communication with the electorate.

Mr. President, let us, in establishing a spending limitation, be realistic. Let us face the facts. Candidates for Federal office should be given the flexibility necessary to insure that all of the voters in their State or congressional district have the maximum flexibility in deciding the best way to adequately inform all of the voters.

The proponents of the approach used in the Pastore amendment argue that if interchangeability were permitted, all candidates would spend all of their money on radio and television. Can they prove such a charge? The answer is no. But I suppose they would argue that the reasonable man knows that television and radio are the most important means for reaching the electorate. Perhaps they are right. However, all of the evidence seems to suggest they are wrong.

Today we do not have any accurate facts showing the amount of money spent by political candidates on billboards or newspaper advertisements. The reason we do not have those facts is that the disclosure laws now on the books are ineffective, both at the Federal and the State level. Herbert E. Alexander of the Citizens Research Foundation is acknowledged by everyone to have done the most work in this area and to be the most knowledgeable. In his recent book, Financing the 1968 Campaign, Mr. Alexander makes some important points. For those who believe that television and radio is the most important part of a political campaign, Mr. Alexander makes the following observation:

Viewed in terms of candidate selection, the impact of broadcasting on our political life, at least at the Presidential level, is probably less than some have warned.

If one tried to judge the impact of political broadcasting on the outcome of the Presidential election, contradictory conclusions can be drawn from the evidence of 1968. On one hand, some political experts believe that Humphrey would have won the election if he had had sufficient funds to properly plan and fully execute his television campaign. It is suggested by these observers that lack of adequate television exposure caused by lack of funds cost Humphrey the election.

On the other hand, it has been noted by some observers that in spite of the most massive television campaign in history, and the biggest television spending advantage over his opponent in history, Nixon's rating in the polls was virtually unchanged from May to November (ranging around 42 percent). This could mean that Nixon's non-supporters or waiverers may have been largely unaffected by his expensive media campaign and that his media campaign served mainly to reinforce the favorable tendencies of his existing constituency.

It is impossible to resolve these two conflicting views on the importance of television on the basis of the 1968 Presidential election. One can conclude that other factors are probably at least as important, and that very little is really known about the way and the degree to which television influences voters.

Let us face the facts, Mr. President—television costs have been rising at a rapid rate. Political candidates do spend more money on television than they did in the past. When one stops to think of it, that is not too surprising. Until the 1960 Kennedy-Nixon debates, I am not sure that political candidates had given a great deal of thought to the fact that television could be used to inform the voters about the issues in a campaign. In no way, however, does the mere fact that television costs money lead to the conclusion that political candidates should be limited in using television.

Just the opposite conclusion might be reached, Mr. President.

A recent article in the June 10 edition of the Washington Post gives some indication as to the escalation of media advertising costs. In the Washington, D.C., area alone, media advertising costs rose 8.8 percent between April 1970 and April 1971. The article went on to point out that this was a smaller increase than the average 10.8-percent rise in media costs over the previous 5 years. Of all media costs, television rates rose the sharpest. Over the past 6 years in Washington, D.C., television rates rose 80.2 percent. This far outstrips any future adjustments which may be made in the formula as a result of the cost-of-living increase provision contained in the bill.

I would only conclude on this point, Mr. President, by pointing out that even the distinguished chairman of our Communications Subcommittee (Mr. PASTORE) seems to recognize the necessity for at least some degree of interchangeability. During the course of hearings before our Commerce Committee, in a colloquy with Mr. Wasilewski, president of the National Association of Broadcasters, the few following exchanges occurred:

Senator PASTORE. We thought of that. What you would do in that particular case, you would transfer to the other area.

Mr. WASILEWSKI. I think this ought to be a matter that is in the broad discretion of the candidate himself.

Senator PASTORE. You are absolutely right, because we have said this time and again here, especially during the testimony of some of the networks.

He can better spend his money in another way; that is, either by mailing or by billboards or however he wants to do it.

We have been thinking of the idea that no more than 7 cents per vote, if that is the figure, and any candidate who does not use up to 7 cents can take the slack and transfer it to the other areas. (Commerce Committee Hearings, Serial No. 92-6 at 478, 479.)

Mr. President, all of the foregoing evidence simply begs the question; why not face reality and provide the necessary interchangeability?

Mr. President, I yield such time as he may desire to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator from Vermont for yielding.

Mr. President, this is an amendment which I offered in the Commerce Committee and which was discussed at great length at that time. It has a practical aspect that has been discussed thoroughly and ably by the Senator from Vermont. It has a deeper and more philosophical aspect that I should like to touch on for just a moment.

I think we can begin by agreeing that there is a substantial need for upgrading and modernizing the laws of the United States dealing with the election of Federal officials. Most of us would agree that such improvement and such legislation must embrace some sort of appropriate, enforceable and practicable reporting requirement, as well as some sort of disclosure of the amount of the contribution, at a time which is useful to the electorate.

Most of us probably would agree that there needs to be some sort of regulation of unfair campaign practices. But beyond that point, I am not sure all of us could agree on the techniques that should be employed to accomplish those purposes.

For instance, I am convinced that the lack of interchangeability of campaign allowances, as it is written into amendments Nos. 308 to S. 382 now before the Senate, is a distinct step backward instead of a step forward, because, while we need regulation and improvement in the Federal election laws, we do not need to regiment and institutionalize the process of campaigning. I resist with all the vigor of which I am reasonably capable any effort, for instance, to require that expenditures be made through a Federal agent. That is not seriously suggested nor implied in this bill, but it is one idea that has been considered by those who turn their attention to electoral reform.

By the same token, I would stoutly resist any effort by anyone to say one could or could not use television or could or could not use radio, or mass mailing, or any of the other several techniques that are available for campaigning in large, populous areas.

It seems to me that if we cannot all agree on the danger of institutionalizing or federalizing the very delicate and personal business of campaigning for the right to represent the people in this Federal Republic, then there is very grievous danger in requiring that a candidate dedicate a fixed percentum share of the amount which he is allowed to spend on advertising to either the electronic or nonelectronic media.

I personally resist the idea that all of us, in our collective judgment, can decide how best and how most efficiently and most equitably the respective viewpoints of candidates in all of the several States of the Union can be presented. As the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. CORROR), the distinguished ranking minority member of the Committee on Commerce, pointed out, television is almost useless in the State of New Hampshire when it comes to statewide campaigning. As I recall his comments and statements before the Commerce Committee, he wishes that he could utilize television effectively in New Hampshire, but he finds he cannot.

In the State of New Jersey, for instance, there is no television station, although New Jersey is certainly one of our great urban centers in the United States. If a candidate for statewide office in New Jersey desires to campaign through the electronic media, he must purchase time on broadcast stations in New York and Philadelphia. The candidate would therefore, be spending a great deal to reach relatively few potential voters in his State.

This, it seems to me, Mr. President, is a fair example of why we cannot by stature structure the allocation of the available funds between the candidates and between the media.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BAKER. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. COOK. The same thing could be said as to the State of New Jersey, could it not, as far as nonbroadcast media are concerned? If a candidate for the U.S. Senate wanted to place a full-page advertisement in the New York Times, although it covers a good percentage of the State of New Jersey, actually the cost of the advertisement would be based on the entire circulation area, which would take in a tremendous area in addition to the State of New Jersey; so the principle applies at both ends of the spectrum.

Mr. BAKER. The distinguished Senator from Kentucky is very accurate indeed, and I agree with him. It is a further example of the fact that we cannot effectively and appropriately allocate the funds to be spent in a rigid way. We cannot institutionalize the business of campaigning by requiring a certain percentage of the money to be spent either in the newspapers, as the Senator points out, or in television, according to the formula written into this bill.

I think there should be full interchangeability. I agree that there should be a limitation on the amount that can be spent. I think that that is the very essence of campaign reform. But I think there should be maximum flexibility for each candidate to decide how to spend it. I do not think Congress should indicate what percentage share can be spent for television or nontelevision advertising, and I wonder, if this measure were enacted, if our next step would be to say that a certain percentage has to be spent in mass mailing, or on billboards, or on magazines, or handout material, or buttons or badges or whatever. Because you see, Mr. President, I contend, and I believe, that it is just as rational and just as logical to require that you spend a certain fractional share of your allowance for rubber balloons as it is to require that you spend a certain percentage share of your allowance for nonelectronic media as distinguished from electronic media.

I want the freedom, Mr. President, to decide how I will spend the statutory allowance which I may spend in any future campaign in which I may engage as a candidate. I do not want, as much as I respect every Member of this body and the judgment of every Member of this body, my peers and colleagues to tell me how to run a campaign in Tennessee.

I think, Mr. President, there should be full interchangeability. This does not act in derogation of the effectiveness of modernized campaign reform. I think we should move about the business of trying to make it practical and workable. But I do not believe we should go this step backward toward the regulation of the allocation of campaign expenditures. Therefore, Mr. President, I join with the Senator from Vermont in offering this amendment to change that provision, instead, to provide 100 percent full interchangeability from one medium to the other, according to the judgment and discretion of the candidate, still within the expenditure limitation framework. I think the Committee on Rules and Administration did an excellent job in this respect. I do not agree with my own committee's version, which is that of the Committee on Commerce. I support the Prouty amendment.

I thank the Senator from Vermont for yielding.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, in the last issue of the Congressional Quarterly, this whole question of media spending was gone into in considerable detail. I shall take only the time to read a brief portion of the article, under the section headed "Media Studies":

One difficulty in assessing the effectiveness of political broadcast advertising is that no one really knows what the public thinks about the massive media campaigns or whether voting behavior is influenced.

Very little evidence has been gathered through research by social scientists in the field. Many persons presume that in politics name recognition automatically means votes, "image" ads are better than "issues" ads, spot announcements reach the widest audience and the more ads the better.

However, there is no proof that these presumptions are correct, and some recent research tends to indicate that they may be misleading.

Mr. President, I remember one very articulate and very able former Member of this body, a great orator and a great thinker, who, when he became involved in television programs, was completely helpless, overcome with fear and trepidation. He was most ineffective. Others do a better job on television than some of their opponents. But it seems to me that as long as we are requiring full disclosure and placing limitations on the amount of money that a candidate can spend, it seems to me that the candidate himself should have the right to determine how that money is going to be spent within the imposed limitations.

In my own State of Vermont, it was necessary for me to utilize television stations in New Hampshire, Maine, New York, and Massachusetts in order to cover my State of Vermont, which is a small State. There was no other means of doing it. In some areas where there are no television stations, certainly a man could not be required to limit his expenditures to just half of what he would spend if television facilities existed.

It seems to me this is a fair and reasonable approach, and it was approved overwhelmingly by the Committee on Rules and Administration.

I am now very happy to yield to the distinguished Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, we debated this proposition at length in committee. I think the theory of dividing broadcasts from nonbroadcasts, and making them noninterchangeable, as they are now, runs totally contrary to the basic concept of the bill. When you set up that a candidate is entitled to so much money to reach his constituents. If, in fact, one is entitled to 5 cents per eligible voter for broadcast media and 5 cents per eligible voter for nonbroadcast media, it means that he has the opportunity to reach his constituents at that level of expenditure.

The basis for the noninterchangeability does not allow one to reach all his constituents at this value.

Take the example of the Commonwealth of Kentucky. In order for a candidate to go on television in the State of Kentucky, he not only buys the station's time in Louisville, Lexington, Paducah, Bowling Green, and Hazard, but also buys time on television stations in Charleston and Huntington, W. Va.; in Cincinnati, Ohio; in Evansville, Ind.; in Harrisburg, Ill.; in Cape Girardeau, Mo.; in Nashville and Knoxville, Tenn., and in the Tri-Cities area of Bristol-Johnson City.

If, in fact, we mean that a candidate is entitled to spend 5 cents per eligible voter in the area in which he lives, obviously we are not allowing him to do it; because when he buys time in Cincinnati, he is immediately dissipating out of every 5 cents per voter—if that is what he is doing on the station—about 65 percent of his allocable funds, because that is how much is wasted in the States of Indiana and Ohio when one tries to reach Northern Kentucky.

The point is that when you have this degree of non-interchangeability, what you say, in essence, to candidates in some States is this: "Your money will be totally diffused. Yet, if you happen to be from the State of Alaska, where you cannot be reached from any of the other 48 States, you may spend all your money within the framework of that State, and it can be utilized in that State. So you get a 100 percent value."

The distinguished Senator from Tennessee gave the example of the State of New Jersey. No one from my part of the country, by the furthest stretch of the imagination, would believe that the State of New Jersey has no television stations. It is a State with a large population, far greater than mine, and its only television outlets are in Philadelphia and New York City. How much of that nickel per voter on broadcast media does a candidate in New Jersey get if he buys time on a New York station? In the first place, he has how many other stations to compete with? I only pose the question to the Senator from New York. I have no idea how many television stations are in New York City with which he has to compete. He has the most expensive market to compete with, and he loses approximately 75 or 80 percent of his allocated funds per voter because they do not even live in the State in which he is trying to get to the voter.

I should like to read two very interesting comments in our hearings on the Federal Election Campaign Act. These are letters that were put into the record by the distinguished majority leader, who wrote to station managers in his home State of Montana. He wrote to Mr. William A. Merrick, who is president and general manager of KBMN. The distinguished majority leader wrote:

I believe that there should as well be some discretion to the candidate that would permit transferring from one media allocation to the other depending upon the individual needs of each candidate.

In a letter to Mr. Sample of Montana Television Network, the majority leader wrote:

In addition, I am hopeful the final version of the bill will contain the type of leeway and discretion to each candidate to permit the transfer of amounts from one category to another, depending upon individual judgment and needs of that candidate. I do believe that the overall limitations provided in the bill are adequate, but it is true that a challenger to an incumbent may justly and validly need to expend more of his campaign funds on name identification which can probably more validly be achieved through the electronic media. I would not want any bill with which I associated to be considered a bill for the protection of incumbents.

I could not agree with that more.

It is my intention—I say this to the Senator from Rhode Island—at the appropriate time to offer an amendment. I know the conversations that have gone on, the discussion that has been had, the reports relative to the disposition of this subject on both sides of the aisle, that the question of total interchangeability is going to be very difficult to get through. It will be my intention to offer, in the nature of a substitute, if the Senator from Vermont will agree, or as a separate amendment, an amendment that will allow a 50 percent discretion one way or the other. This degree of leeway at least will allow a candidate to make up for the inefficiencies he finds in one media establishment or another where he cannot honestly get to all the constituents he wants to, for the amount of money he is allowed under this allocation.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I commend the distinguished Senator from Kentucky for his suggestion. I think we have been trying to cooperate. I certainly want to pay tribute to the distinguished floor manager of the bill, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE).

I would be perfectly willing to modify my amendment along the lines suggested by the Senator from Kentucky, if that would meet with the approval of the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PROUTY. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. We all have lived in a very cooperative spirit here today, and I congratulate my colleagues on the other side of the aisle for some of the amendments that have been proposed.

But I hope that this afternoon we do not end up adding insult to injury. After all, the common denominator in this bill is, How much are you allowed to spend? When we get into this transferability, which is a 100-percent total, or even 50-percent total, I am afraid that we are going to end up in a very chaotic condition.

Looking at the chart in the report, we know that it spells out how much one can spend in each category in each State. This is alone for the television and the radio time one buys, irrespective of what it costs for production. Taking the figure in California alone, if there is transferability of $1,423,700 for radio and television time, I say that we have to kiss Bob Hope goodbye, we have to kiss "Bonanza" goodbye, we have to kiss "I Love Lucy" goodbye. We are going to knock off every entertainment on the television screen if we are going to devote this kind of money to radio and television. It will be impossible.

I say to the Senator, frankly, that I want to be compromising and I want to be fair. If he will make that a 20-percent transferability, I will go along with it, because I think that will allow the leeway to take in the situations which are marginal, such as New Jersey or Kentucky.

Let us face it. If we transfer all this money to radio and television, we are going to have utter chaos. The reason why we made it 5 and 5 is that we did section it off. If we are going to have transferability, 10 cents is really too much, for this reason: No. 1, we are not talking about the registered vote. We are talking about the eligible vote—the eligible vote that is determined by the Bureau of Census on the June before the year of the election—which means every person over the age of 18, male and female, whether they have registered or not; and that is a larger total than the number of people who will go out to vote. That is very generous.

So the 5 and 5 is predicated upon that formula. Then add to that the lowest unit cost, which will give a discount on the television time that is bought of between 35 percent and 50 percent. Add that to it, and I say that we will end up with a scandal. Every office in this country will be put on the auction block.

The time has come when public life and public office will be put up for sale. That is not what we are trying to do. We are trying to cut down the astronomical costs of campaigning. In the last campaign, the President spent on radio and television $12.7 million. If the Senator invokes this formula, the President will have to spend over $15 million.

What are we doing?

If we are going to add to it, then I say we are wasting our time. Frankly, we have to have some transferability, which is the argument made by the Senators from Tennessee and Kentucky, and I am perfectly willing to go along with that, but for goodness gracious sake, make it reasonable.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I yield now to the distinguished Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, this is the second chorus that the Senator from Rhode Island is singing. He put this before the Committee on Commerce previously. We have argued the—

Mr. PASTORE. I sing it in the key of C and the Senator sings it in the key of G.

Mr. BAKER. There is no point in arguing this now, except to say that what we are discussing now are two of the most difficult parts of the bill, both the unit rate and institutionalizing the apportionment of the power. I lost on that. The pending bill came out of committee that way. Sooner or later we will regret it. I commend the Senator from Kentucky for trying to compromise a difficult situation. Twenty percent is better than nothing. I hope that some day we will have the interchangeability.

Mr. PASTORE. If it does not work out, we will change it.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, I would like everyone who reads the Record to think that we had full interchangeability for every candidate running for public office, including the President, in some degree to spend his money on television and radio. We just had an election—

Mr. PASTORE. I say to the Senator from Kentucky that is where he is going to put his money.

Mr. COOK. We had just finished a presidential election before then, and the President who was running for office did not spend all his money on radio and television. I did not spend all my money on radio and television. Those Senators, all of whom are here, did not spend all their money on radio and television. There were no restrictions on interchangeability then. There have never been before. So when we say, all of a sudden, that something will happen, it has not happened in the past. With interchangeability, we can still get out the pamphlets, use the billboards, or buy balloons, as the case may be. The only thing I can tell the Senate is, we did not have this and we could have spent every dime of our money on radio and television, but we did not think it was practical and we are not going to think it is practical in the future.

From the standpoint of the offer made by the Senator from Rhode Island, let me say that I conveniently have already changed my amendment and I hope that the Senator from Vermont can accept it.

Mr. PASTORE. And the Senator from Rhode Island will buy it.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Oregon (Mr. PACKWOOD), who wishes to ask one or two questions.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I wonder whether the Senator from Rhode Island would permit me to ask one or two questions.

Mr. PASTORE. Certainly.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I do not understand how, if we put in interchangeability, that it will cut down 1 cent from a campaign. If we do not put in interchangeability, how will it change campaign costs by 1 cent? How will it prevent a Senator from spending money on billboards, bumper stickers, pamphlets, or utilizing people going door to door?

Mr. PASTORE. The point is, we have been generous in allocating the formula and the amount. The reason why we were generous in advocating the formula we did was that we limit it to 5 cents on television and radio. We took that into account. The figure adopted is slightly more than the figure spent on the average throughout the entire country in the last election.

Mr. PACKWOOD. This bill, then, is not a campaign spending limit bill, is it?

Mr. PASTORE. Of course it is.

Mr. PACKWOOD. How are we limiting the spending of the money?

Mr. PASTORE. By limiting it to 5 cents on every eligible voter where radio and television are concerned. On a non-broadcast item, it is 5 cents. A candidate is limited to what he can spend. I think every candidate for public office spends twice as much as he should, twice as much as is necessary.

Mr. PACKWOOD. He spends everything that he has.

Mr. PASTORE. The Senator knows what happens. The candidate is riding along in his automobile and he sees his opponent's sign on the other side of the street, with a big, big billboard, so the candidate does not sleep unless he puts up a billboard on the other side of the street. That happens all the time.

The candidate sees an ad of his opponent's in the newspaper and he has to have one in the newspaper the very next day. If his opponent is on television and he calls you a name, you have got to go on television and reply to him. After the election is over, you say to yourself, "My goodness gracious, how stupid I was. I could have saved half that money."

Mr. PACKWOOD. Let us look at what will happen. If we have interchangeability, every candidate can spend all the money he has plus what he can borrow, unless we limit the amount he can borrow in this bill. If he wins, he can possibly pay off the deficit.

I say, if we want to bring it down, let us bring it down to nothing but do not let it apply to radio, television, or the newspapers.

Mr. PASTORE. I agree with the Senator that if we are going to have interchangeability, we have got to do something about reducing the 10 cents. We have got to do it.

Mr. PACKWOOD. We do not have to do it at all. We can cut it out entirely. Then it will be a bonanza if we do not allow advertising.

Mr. PASTORE. It could be very well, and bring spending into its proper context. If we have interchangeability, then we have to reduce the total amount.

Mr. PACKWOOD. What the Senator has here is not a bill allowing campaign spending but a bill against broadcasting. Perhaps that is what the Senator wishes to do.

Mr. PASTORE. My goodness gracious, no. I have nothing against the broadcasters. As a matter of fact, in some quarters, I have often been called a patsy—which, of course, it not true. Now do not label me with that. I have been stigmatized enough as it is.

Mr. PACKWOOD. I will state for the record, with or without this limitation, that campaign costs on the average will exceed what was spent in 1970 to run for the Senate. This bill is a disclosure bill and a good bill. We should have disclosure. But it will not save 1 cent or put a limit on spending for campaigns. What we are doing is to transfer support from broadcasting to support from the print media and we will find some other way, whether loudspeakers, bumper stickers, or billboards, to spend every red cent that every candidate can raise for his campaign.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I am willing to yield back my time now.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island yield for a question on the amendment?

Mr. PASTORE. I yield.

Mr. PERCY. I wish to inquire, because I was not here for the entire colloquy, the distinguished Senator made the statement that every candidate could figure out that he could save half his campaign expenditures. I agree as to the campaigns I have been in, but has the distinguished Senator figured out which half?

Mr. PASTORE. Both halves. [Laughter.] I wish the Senator would ask me a hard question some day.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to accept a modification of my amendment as suggested by the distinguished Senators from Kentucky and Rhode Island and yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. FANNIN). The Senator has a right to modify his amendment. Does the Senator so modify it?

Mr. PROUTY. I so modify it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment is modified as requested.

The text of the amendment as modified is as follows:

On page 4, line 16, strike "No" and insert in lieu thereof "Except as provided in section 104 of the Federal Election Campaign Act of 1971, no".

On page 8, line 6, strike "No" and insert in lieu thereof "Except as provided in section 104 of this Act, no".

On page 10, immediately after line 3, insert the following new section:

"LIMITED INTERCHANGEABILITY BETWEEN EXPENDITURES LIMITATIONS

"Sec. 104. (a) A legally qualified candidate in any primary, runoff, general, or special election for Federal elective office may, at his option, transfer not to exceed 20 per centum of the expenditure limitation under section 315(c) of the Communications Act of 1934 as amended or section 103(c) of this Act between one or the other to be spent on either the broadcast or nonbroadcast media on behalf of his candidacy in such election. Any amount so transferred from the one expenditure limitation to the other shall be deducted from the expenditure limitation upon the media from which such transfer is made.

"(b) Any such legally qualified candidate exercising this option shall promptly notify the Federal Elections Commission in writing of the amount so transferred and spent, and shall provide such Commission with such information as the Commission, in its judgment, deems necessary and proper in the exercise of this option.

"(c) The Federal Elections Commission is authorized to develop and promulgate appropriate rules and regulations to carry out the purposes of this section.

"(d) The definitions contained in section 315(c) of the Communications Act of 1934 and in section 103(a) of this Act are applicable to this section."

On page 10, line 5, strike "Sec. 104." and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 105".

On page 11, line 2, strike "Sec. 105." and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 106."

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified, of the Senator from Vermont.
* The amendment was agreed to.

REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY FROM EXECUTIVE I, 92D CONGRESS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, as in executive session, I ask unanimous consent that the injunction of secrecy be removed from the Locarno Agreement Establishing an International Classification for Industrial Designs, Executive I, 92d Congress, first session, transmitted to the Senate today by the President of the United States, and that the agreement, together with the President's message, be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed, and that the President's message be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROTH). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The message from the President is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith a certified copy of the Locarno Agreement Establishing an International Classification for Industrial Designs, signed October 8, 1968. I transmit also, for the information of the Senate, the report of the Secretary of State with respect to the Agreement.

The countries which are parties to the Agreement constitute a Special Union. The principal purpose of that organization, which will consist of an Assembly of all contracting parties, and a Committee of Experts, is to establish an international classification for industrial designs. Such a classification system will be of great assistance in researching the existence of exclusive rights respecting a specified design or any variants thereof. This arrangement will be generally similar to that set forth in the Nice Agreement Concerning International Classification of Goods and Services to which Trademarks are Applied as revised at Stockholm July 14, 1967.

I recommend that the Senate give early and favorable consideration to this Agreement.

RICHARD NIXON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, August 3, 1971.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the joint resolution (S.J. Res. 105) authorizing the President to issue a proclamation designating 1971 as the "Year of World Minority Language Groups."

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 7960) to authorize appropriations for activities of the National Science Foundation, and for other purposes.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 382) to promote fair practices in the conduct of election campaigns for Federal political offices, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time? The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read the amendment as follows:

On page 3, line 14, strike out "amount of time" and insert in lieu thereof "class and amount of time and same frequency of use"

On page 10, line 6, strike out "amount of space," and insert in lieu thereof "class and amount of space and same frequency of use."

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, this is the amendment mentioned in the unanimous-consent agreement for a limitation of 2 hours.

I yield myself 20 minutes at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Alaska is recognized for 20 minutes.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island is an extremely fair man. We have had an interesting discussion in committee about this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator ask that the amendments be considered en bloc?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes—two amendments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments will be considered en bloc.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, the provision I am most disturbed with in this bill is one that apparently attracts little attention. If it were said that a typesetter would have to work for 50 percent while he was setting type in a political ad, that a broadcaster would have to work for 50 percent while he read a political ad on a radio station, or that a television announcer would get paid 50 percent while he was reading a political ad for a candidate, I assume that would cause a little more attention to be attracted to the matter. However, it does not.

What it says is that the media, both the air medium and the printed medium, must carry the political advertising at the lowest unit rate available in this 45-day period before a primary election and 60-day period before a general election.

Mr. President, I had printed in the RECORD on July 21 some examples of what would happen in Alaska—and this is comparable all over the country—with small radio stations, small newspapers, and small television stations that are independent of these massive networks or are independent of these very large newspaper chains.

This is what will happen to them. A fixed rate cut, for instance, shows that for a prime time, one spot, a 60-second spot, will cost $12.50. That would be the cost to anyone who went in there. There is no discrimination against a politician. He will not get it at any more expensive rate or any cheaper rate. However, if this bill passes, the politician will get that time at $4.50 instead of $12.50.

I have had discussions with the Senator from Rhode Island in committee, and I am certain from what he has said here that this is the intended result. I do not argue with his intended result in terms of purpose. I argue with it in terms of whether it is fair and whether we should, in fact, require the news media to subsidize political campaigns throughout this country from now on and require, as I have pointed out, this one station to provide political advertising at one-third the cost that it was provided in the last election.

In the last campaign the record shows that my opponent spent twice as much money as I did on radio and television.

Under the pending bill, the Senator from Rhode Island very generously raised the amount for each medium. But under the bill the $30,000 would be worth at least $60,000. So, if we are talking about putting a limit on expenditures, it is not in this bill with that provision. It is highly discriminatory to say that this can happen in terms of newspapers. I know of no legal basis or constitutional basis whereby the Congress of the United States can order a newspaper to provide advertising to a political candidate at the lowest rate it provides advertising media to any other advertiser.

With respect to the air medium, I can understand it, because we regulate the airwaves. But I would challenge anyone to show me the constitutional basis for requiring the printed medium to provide a political candidate for federal office with advertising at the lowest unit rate at which it sells advertising to the grocery store on an average of 6 days a week, 52 weeks a year, and get an earned rate discount.

I call my amendment the comparable rates provision. It requires that no one can discriminate against politicians in terms of their advertising. It says that they cannot charge us any more than they charge anyone else for the same class of time, the same amount of time, or the same frequency of use, or the same class or amount of space or the same frequency of use of the printed medium.

I call the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island to the testimony before the committee in terms of this lowest rate provision when Mr. Wasilewski, from the National Association of Broadcasters, testified before the committee. He was very plain, quoting from page 483 of the hearings before the Commerce Committee, when he said:

Some of the bills introduced would require that broadcasters sell candidates' advertising at the lowest rate available to any advertiser for an equivalent time period, regardless of volume or other considerations. Present law requires a broadcasting station to charge political candidates no more than it would an advertiser for the comparable time. This insures that the candidate will get treatment equitable to anyone else who purchases air time. To require broadcasters to charge political candidates a lesser rate than charged other comparable purchasers of time would constitute an enforced subsidy for political broadcasting—a subsidy required of no other industry.

Mr. President, I underline that. It is certainly required of no other industry.

We are not going to say to anyone else involved in the campaign activity, whether a person who prints billboards, sells billboard space, prints placards, bumper stickers, sells balloons, or whatever it is, that he has to give a politician a favored rate.

But the pending bill cuts right into the small, individually owned radio and television stations and newspapers throughout the country.

I had hoped that we might be able to get a comparison of some of the similar things throughout the country, of similar rates quoted for news media throughout the country. I have not been able to do so, because I guess they do not provide these. They are printed in the FCC records. However, I have not been able to get the individual ones.

Just to show what will be required of the radio, television stations, or newspapers in Alaska—according to information which I have readily available—the Alaska newspaper rate for 1 inch on a display rate is $3 a column inch. Based upon frequency of use, that is reduced down to as low as $1.30 an inch. Under the pending bill, it would mean that the politician would pay the low rate. I think it must be a difficult thing for a newspaper to handle every 2 years or 6 years when the politicians come in with advertising that is not very well prepared and not made up in the careful way in which the grocery store ads would be made up in terms of regular ads coming into the newspaper office. But they are to get the grocery store rate available in the small weekly and monthly newspapers in my State that barely survive. They would have to provide the politicians with that rate.

Make no mistake about it. The bill is not a limitation on expenditures.

Under this provision, it becomes a bill which strictly requires a news medium to give the political candidate at least a 50 percent preference in terms of advertising.

If I might have the attention of the Senator from Rhode Island for just a minute, I will ask him if I have misinterpreted this in any way. It is the intention now to have the lowest unit rate in either the 45- or 60-day period available to any advertiser regardless of volume or class of time.

Mr. PASTORE. The Senator is correct.

Mr. STEVENS. I wanted to make sure I was not overstating the case as far as this provision is concerned.

Mr. PASTORE. No. The Senator took occasion to raise the question of the constitutionality of imposing this low unit cost on the newspaper. There is no case as far as we have been able to research that declares such a law unconstitutional. However, there is a New Hampshire case that went before the Supreme Court of New Hampshire. And the supreme court held:

The statute establishing the commercial advertising rate as maximum rate for political advertising in newspapers or by radio stations does not abridge freedom of the press.

That is the language of the Supreme Court of New Hampshire. The case was brought before the Supreme Court of the United States and certiorari was refused. Then, they asked for a review of the refusal and it was refused again. That allowed the supreme court decision of New Hampshire to stand.

We were guided by that. I am not saying the question of constitutionality cannot be debated; it can be.

We are merely saying that a campaign is in the public interest to bring to the people not only the quality of the candidates but also the various issues that affect the community, State, or the Nation.

We are saying that a political candidate is not that kind of customer either for the newspapers or the news media that he can actually undertake a contract to be on radio or in the newspapers throughout the entire calendar year, like, let us say, Procter & Gamble, or some cigarette manufacturer which has prime rates. All we are saying to a newspaper is, "You yourself establish your prime rate, but whatever you establish, that rate you must give to a candidate for public office, in the public interest, for 45 days preceding the date of a primary election and during the 60 days preceding the date of a general or special election." That is all we are doing and we think that is in the public interest. We are doing that to make it available for the man without great means, in order to challenge another candidate, who may be just as worthy, but who has tremendous means, to put them on the same level so that money will not be the common denominator but so that wisdom, talent, and the issues will be the common denominator. That is what is behind this.

I know the Senator from Alaska is absolutely sincere about his position. There is no doubt about it. But that is why we decided it this way and I think we did the right thing. We are not saying to anyone, "You have to give a certain party a rate you do not give anyone else." What we are saying is, "You make your rate and establish it. The lowest unit cost you charge anyone is that section of time on television, on radio, or in newspapers you have to charge the candidate for public office, whether he is running for the school committee, dog catcher, or the President of the United States. You have to give him the same rate."

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator from Rhode Island that he stated his case very fairly. I only rebut that by saying: Look at the stations. We have small stations. For instance, in Anchorage, Alaska, we have three television stations, four FM stations, four AM stations, two newspapers, and we have less than 100,000 people. The thing that made that available was a group of people who were very aggressive and very competent. The rate cards show that for prime time it is $300 for a 60-minute program. On the same station for class C time it is $100.

What the Senator from Rhode Island is really saying is that the politician will walk in and get prime time that is worth $300 if anyone else were to buy it—and believe me, they do buy it—and that time is put aside for them and they pay only $100.

Mr. PASTORE. The Senator is 100 miles off course.

Mr. STEVENS. Tell me where I am off course.

Mr. PASTORE. That same time that the Senator is talking about is prime time for Proctor & Gamble for which they charge Proctor & Gamble $300, and they cannot charge the Senator $400.

Mr. STEVENS. That is not what the bill says.

Mr. PASTORE. Yes, it is.

Mr. STEVENS. It has nothing to do with time, or frequency, or use. We took it up with the staff and the FCC. If the Senator is willing to concede class of time I am ahead and I am willing to quit.

Mr. PASTORE. I do not know where the Senator gets "class of time." I am talking about the same period of time. In other words, if there is an agreement on the part of any radio station or television station that between 6 o'clock and 7 o'clock anybody can buy time for $200, and that is the lowest unit cost for that time, if the Senator buys that same time between 6 and 7 o'clock they cannot charge the Senator more than $200.

Mr. STEVENS. Will the Senator go one step farther? Suppose the Senator buys it 10 times and I buy it one time; then, the Senator would get the earned rate discount.

Mr. PASTORE. The Senator cannot buy it 10 times because he does not buy 10 times a year; he buys it one time.

Mr. STEVENS. We are in agreement on class of time.

Mr. PASTORE. I do not know where the Senator gets the expression "class of time."

Mr. STEVENS. There is double-, triple-, and third-class time; and that is prime time, middle time, and run-of-the-station time. It is in the FCC journals.

How about newspapers? Can we go into newspapers?

Mr. PASTORE. Yes. If in the Sunday newspaper, page 5, anyone can buy it for $300, they cannot charge the Senator more than $300 for that same page 5 on Sunday. That is all I am saying. In other words, they have to treat the man running for public office in the same way they treat their own best customers. What is wrong with that?

Mr. STEVENS. I still think there is something wrong with that.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEVENS. I will yield in just a moment.

The Senator says there is a premium for advertising on page 2 and if the grocery store buys page 2, it would pay the same price I would pay as a candidate; but if the grocery store bought the page for 52 weeks and at a special price, the Senator would get the special price or discount.

Mr. PASTORE. The Senator is correct. The Senator is headed on the right course. The Senator has come around to where he should have started.

Mr. STEVENS. I respectfully suggest that we need to put that language in the bill in respect to class and time. It is not understood by the industry. I have a letter here concerning that.

Mr. President, I am happy to yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. MILLER. I have already discussed this part of the bill with the Senator from Rhode Island.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I yield myself another 20 minutes and I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, I have already discussed this part of the bill with the Senator earlier this morning. I think that as far as one part of the Stevens amendment is concerned there is a meeting of the minds. While I do not think the bill quite says what the intention is, reading the committee report, page 27, especially, I think the intention is stated and I see no reason why the Senator from Rhode Island, the manager of the bill, and the Senator from Alaska cannot get together on this one part; that is, for the same class or quality of time the unit charge will be the same, whether it is for a political advertiser.

I think the Senator is getting to another angle, and that is if the commercial advertiser is given a certain rate because he is going to advertise for two times a day for 30 days and therefore he may get a discount of 20 percent, the question is whether the political advertiser who comes in for just one time a day for 10 days can get the same unit price.

I do know the answer but I know the way the bill reads it would permit the political advertiser to get that unit price even though he may only advertise for 10 days, whereas the commercial advertiser gets it because he is going to advertise for 30 days.

I would like to have the comment of the Senator from Rhode Island because I am sure the committee went into this aspect and it is a troublesome matter.

Mr. PASTORE. This is the way the bill reads:

During the 45 days preceding the date of a primary election and during the 60 days preceding the date of a general or special election in which such person is a candidate, the lowest unit charge of the station for the same amount of time during the same period;

Mr. President, you could change that and say "lowest unit charge of the station for the same amount and period of time."

Mr. MILLER. The same amount and class of time?

Mr. PASTORE. No, it is the period that counts, because in television it is the period that constitutes prime time. The Senator calls it class; I call it period. If class means so much the Senator can use "class." But we want to make sure we are talking about the same thing. Class is quality. Period is time.

Mr. MILLER. Will the Senator from Alaska yield further?

Mr. STEVENS. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. I think the Senator from Rhode Island has recognized that we are talking about the same thing insofar as class of time is concerned, whether it is prime, triple A, or class D time. The language can be worked out on that. But the Senator from Alaska has a point here, and that is that if during that period of time which is 45 days preceding a primary election and 60 days preceding a general election a commercial advertiser would be given a unit cost at the 20 percent discount because he is advertising each day of the 30 days, and the political advertiser is coming along and advertising only in 5 days, or perhaps 2 days, in the same class of time, yet the political advertiser will get that discount. I think that is the point the Senator from Alaska is making. I think there is agreement between the Senator from Rhode Island and the Senator from Alaska.

Mr. PASTORE. The committee was in agreement on this point. Insofar as candidates for public office in any State, municipal, or nationwide office were concerned, as a public service, they ought to be entitled to the lowest unit charge. Frankly, there was not too great an objection to it. Naturally, of course, the broadcasting industry would like to have it out. The newspapers would like to have it out. We know that, but I think they owe the country something. They are given licenses. They enjoy lucrative businesses. They have more or less monopolies, to a certain extent. I do not see any harm in it at all.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Alaska yield further?

Mr. STEVENS. I yield.

Mr. MILLER. What the Senator from Rhode Island is saying is no doubt the truth, but I do not think we have developed here on the floor what that amounts to. I do not know, in dollars and cents, what that particular aspect of the Stevens amendment is going to mean to a small radio or TV station. I do not know whether we are talking about a small amount of money or a large amount of money because I am not that cognizant with the rates on prime time.

Mr. PASTORE. The committee limited it to 45 days for a primary election and to 60 days for a general election. We were shortening the campaign time, in effect. Not only that, but there is a tendency to wait to come within those 45 days and those 60 days because the candidates will get the lower rates. The discount may come to 30 percent or 50 percent—I do not know—for radio and TV. I do not think the newspapers get into the lowest unit cost, only the radio and television, because most of the radio and television stations are connected as affiliates with the networks, and the networks enter into agreements. They make certain concessions to the licensees for the time they use in showing national broadcasting programs.

I will tell the Senator very frankly what I think is a remarkable thing. Metromedia, WTTG; NBC, Dr. Goldman; ABC, Mr. Goldenson; CBS, Dr. Stanton—all four of them came in and said, "We are willing to give a discount voluntarily."

When it was put up to the committee, the committee said, "No; it ought to be placed in the law."

Mr. STEVENS. This is the very problem. The networks can come in and say, "We are willing to be big guys," but what about Cordova, or Ketchikan, or Fairbanks, stations which are selling time to a local grocery store or a drugstore or a drive-in. They have to scratch for it. That comes to one-third of the time, going by the class of time and frequency of use. The difference is one-third on the frequency and the class of time. If we are agreed on what prime time is, the class it is, we are still talking about frequency.

Mr. PASTORE. There is nothing in the law which compels the radio or television station to sell any time. They do not have to sell a nickel's worth of time.

Mr. STEVENS. That may be the law, but if there is a presidential or senatorial or gubernatorial campaign and those stations try to prevent campaigners from using their facilities, there would be a great protest.

Mr. PASTORE. I was just reminded that they do have to sell a reasonable amount of time. That provision was inserted in the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. There is a provision that requires them to sell.

Mr. PASTORE. But they cannot inundate the broadcasting; it has to be reasonable. In my State the radio and television announcements tell the people that so much time will be made available for political purposes. They wait for the applicants to come in, and they allocate.

I realize there may be difficulties in some places, but looking at this from a panoramic view, I do not know of a situation where there is not some difficulty. Perhaps the answer for Alaska is that they may have to charge the candidates the full time. I do not think we are asking too much in this bill.

Mr. STEVENS. I would say throughout the country, where there is a weekly or local newspaper, the situation would be the same.

My amendment would strike out the words "amount of time" and use the terminology class and amount of time and same frequency of use, whether we call it unit or class or time. We are in agreement.

Mr. PASTORE. What the Senator from Alaska is doing is repealing the lowest unit cost provision, and I cannot accept it.

Mr. STEVENS. The Senator said he agreed on class of time.

Mr. PASTORE. I am telling the Senator that anything he does to disturb the provision for lowest unit cost I am against. If the Senator tells me that his amendment carries the lowest unit cost provision, we will get together on the language, but if he is out to destroy the provision for lowest unit cost, I am against it.

Mr. STEVENS. I am trying to preserve the lowest unit cost basis on a comparable basis. I had understood the Senator from Rhode Island agreed on it.

Mr. PASTORE. I agreed on what?

Mr. STEVENS. On the same class of time. The Senator wants prime time to be paid as prime time.

Mr. PASTORE. I suggested that we would use the words "amount" and "same period of time." If the Senator wants to correct it that way, I will accept it.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum so we can take a look at it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Out of whose time does the time for the quorum call come?

Mr. STEVENS. The Chair can take it out of my time. I do not care.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment on page 2, line 23 of the Pastore substitute. Strike out everything after the word "amount", insert a comma, and have it read, "class and amount of time during the same period".

On page 3, line 5 after the word "amount", insert "and class".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator send his modification to the desk?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, with these modifications, which are agreeable to the committee, I am perfectly willing to accept the amendment, and I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all remaining time yielded back?

Mr. PASTORE. Let me repeat the modification, in order to make it clear.

On page 2, line 23, after the word "amount" in the middle of the page, we delete everything to the end of the paragraph on page 24, and substitute in lieu thereof "class and amount of time during the same period"?

Mr. STEVENS. And on page 3, line 5, insert after the word "amount"—

Mr. PASTORE. After the word "amount" insert "and class of space".

Mr. STEVENS. That is correct. Has my amendment been so modified?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator send the amendment to the desk?

Mr. STEVENS' amendment, as modified, is as follows:

On page 2, line 33, strike out everything after "amount" and insert in lieu thereof "class and amount of time for the same period."

On page 3, line 5, after the word "amount" insert "and class of space."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all remaining time yielded back?

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I want the RECORD to be clear that this in no way rejects the committee report recommendation as to the lowest unit cost.

Mr. STEVENS. That is absolutely correct. It is the lowest unit cost for the same class of time and the same period of the day, during the same 45- or 60-day period. We have not done anything about the frequency of use. We concede that, but we have gone to the prime time concept.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all remaining time yielded back?

Mr. STEVENS. I move the adoption of the amendment, and yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. PASTORE. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROTH). All remaining time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS), as modified.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PASTORE. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

THE HIGHER EDUCATION BILL— UNANIMOUS-CONSENT AGREEMENT

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I am authorized by the majority leader, after having consulted with the minority leader and the principal parties on both sides, to present the following unanimous consent request:

I ask unanimous consent, with respect to the so-called higher education bill—when it is called up—that debate on that bill be limited to 6 hours, the time to be equally divided between and controlled by the distinguished junior Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL) and the distinguished senior Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS).

Ordered further, that the time on any amendment be limited to 1 hour, the time to be equally divided between and controlled by the mover of such amendment and the distinguished manager of the bill (Mr. PELL), with exceptions as to the time on the following amendments:

An amendment by the Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK), on which there be 3 hours.

Two amendments by the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), on each of which there be 2 hours.

Provided further, that time on any amendment to an amendment be limited to one-half hour, the time to be equally divided between and controlled by the mover of the amendment in the second degree and the distinguished manager of the bill (Mr. PELL).

Ordered further, that no amendment not germane be received.

Provided further, that Senators in control of time on the bill may yield therefrom to any Senator on any amendment, motion, or appeal, with the exception of a motion to lay on the table.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, in connection with the limitation on germane amendments, I should like to get a ruling at this time, before I agree to that, that the Foreign Service scholarship program is germane.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, in response to the able Senator, I ask unanimous consent that all amendments which have been enumerated be in order.

Mr. JAVITS. And amendments to those amendments, because otherwise the rule of nongermaneness would apply to an amendment to his amendment.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I so modify the request.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I want to get one thing clear. I thoroughly agree with the objective, but I do want to clarify one point:

We may not be able to reach this bill this week, or may not be able to finish it. What is our understanding as to whether this unanimous-consent agreement on the part of everybody—it is fine with me, I say in advance, but I think it should be clear whether it will or will not carry over the recess.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I would respond by saying that in my judgment, and I hope the majority leader will say something on this, we will reach the bill and ought to be able to complete it before the recess.

Mr. JAVITS. And even if we do not, is it the intention to carry it over the recess?

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Yes, I would hope so.

Mr. JAVITS. As a result of some of my discussions with some of the minority members who feel strongly on the poverty bill, I thought we had better take the precaution on this one that this unanimous-consent agreement will apply whenever the bill is called up.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. That is true. I believe that, operating on the double-track system, as we intend to do, we will be able to take it up and complete it before the recess.

Mr. JAVITS. As a matter of fact, in good faith—and I think the majority leader can help us in this—every effort is going to be made to reach it; and if it is not reached, it will be right on the calendar when we get back. We would not want this matter to drag along and have a unanimous-consent agreement outstanding, because circumstances might change.

Mr. MANSFIELD. We are going to make every effort to finish it before the conclusion of business on Friday, and we have every expectation that we will.

Mr. JAVITS. Or, if we do not, that it will be on the calendar when we come back.

Mr. MANSFIELD. It will be. But, frankly, the Senator from Montana is not looking too far ahead on this bill.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, reserving the right to object—and I do not anticipate objecting—I would like to follow up what the Senator from New York has said. In the event we do not reach the bill or do not finish it prior to the recess, it is entirely possible that during the recess period we will find, from some of the education groups or other people involved, amendments which are not enumerated in here and which may be of some significance. The question, then, is whether the mood of the majority leader and the majority whip would be to modify whatever unanimous consent we have to include additional amendments which might be of more significance that just the 1-hour time limitation would permit us to debate.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Of course, if they were germane.

Mr. JAVITS. That is, if they related to the subject of higher education.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I thank the Senators.

The unanimous-consent agreement reads as follows:

Ordered, That, during the consideration of the Higher Education bill (S. 659) debate on any amendment (except an amendment by the Senator from Colorado (Mr. DOMINICK) which shall be limited to 3 hours, and 2 amendments by the Senator from Montana (Mr. METCALF), which shall be limited to 2 hours each) shall be limited to 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the mover of any such amendment and the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL).

Ordered further, That, on the question of the final passage of the said bill, debate shall be limited to 6 hours to be equally divided and controlled, respectively, by the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PELL) and the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS). Provided, That the said Senators, or either of them, may, from the time under their control on the passage of the said bill, allot additional time to any Senator during the consideration of any amendment, motion, or appeal, except a motion to table.

Provided further, That, no amendment that is not germane to the provisions of the said bill shall be received, except the amendments enumerated above and amendments to amendments which are germane thereto.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 382) to promote fair practices in the conduct of election campaigns for Federal political offices, and for other purposes.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Virginia has an amendment. I think we can dispose of it in short order.

AMENDMENT NO. 263

Mr. SPONG. Mr. President, I call up my amendment No. 263, and I have modified it to conform to the Pastore substitute. I send to the desk the modifications.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment, as modified, will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 22, line 4, strike "and".

On page 22, line 5, before the period insert the following: "and the name and address of, and office sought by, each candidate on whose behalf such expenditure was made".

On page 26, line 23, strike "and".

On page 26, line 24, before the semicolon insert "and the name and address of, and office sought by, each candidate on whose behalf such expenditure was made".

Mr. SPONG. Mr. President, I believe that this amendment would improve the reporting procedures required of political committees. It would require those committees to list, in addition to how they spend the money, in whose behalf—the candidate's name—the money is spent.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I have studied this amendment. I believe it would strengthen the disclosure section. If it is agreeable to the Senator from Nevada, I think we can accept this amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SPONG. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. Do I correctly understand that this amendment would require disclosure of specific expenditures that a committee might report on behalf of each candidate?

Mr. SPONG. That is correct.

Mr. CANNON. I see no objection to the amendment.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, I am in favor of the amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. SPONG. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment, as modified.

The amendment, as modified, was agreed to.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I call up my amendment and ask that it be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

On page 21, line 10, after the word "contribution," insert the following: "in excess of $10."

On page 21, line 24, strike the word "any" and insert in lieu thereof "a".

On line 24 after the word "contribution" insert the following: "in excess of $10."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, the Senator talked to me about this amendment. I understand that he has talked to the author of the disclosure part of the bill. The amendment seems to me to be reasonable.

Mr. HOLLINGS. This amendment applies to the small contribution of $1 or $2, so that it will not be necessary to employ a large staff and keep all these records. Having a large staff would really discourage the small contributor. This amendment applies to small contributions. Tremendous recordkeeping would be necessary unless we provided that in the case of contributions of $10 or less all these records would not be required.

Mr. PASTORE. I find the amendment satisfactory.

Mr. CANNON. Would this amendment eliminate the detailed accounting and recordkeeping for contributions under $10?

Mr. HOLLINGS. Under $10.

Mr. CANNON. I have no objection.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HOLLINGS. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from South Carolina.

The amendment was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, the quorum to be stopped at 4 p.m. At that time, the distinguished Senator from North Carolina, under a previous agreement, will be recognized for the consideration of the conference report on State, Justice, Commerce, and the Judiciary.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, would the distinguished majority leader advise whether it is the intention to return to the consideration of S. 382 or whether it will go over until tomorrow?

Mr. MANSFIELD. It is up to the distinguished Senator from Nevada and the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island. Whatever their wishes are, the leadership will be glad to accede to them.

Mr. CANNON. I ask the Senator from Rhode Island whether consideration of S. 382 will go over until tomorrow, after the matter to which the majority leader has referred is laid before the Senate.

Mr. PASTORE. Yes. What time will the Senate meet tomorrow?

Mr. MANSFIELD. 10 a.m.

LINCOLN HOME NATIONAL HISTORIC SITE

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate a message from the House on H.R. 9798.

The Chair laid before the Senate a message from the House on H.R. 9798, an act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to establish the Lincoln Home National Historic Site in the State of Illinois, and for other purposes, which was read twice by title.

Mr. BIBLE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, this is the so-called Lincoln boyhood bill, to establish the Lincoln Home National Historic site, in Springfield, Ill.

We have extended discussion and extended hearings on the Senate side. The Senate committee reported it favorably and unanimously to the Senate. It was before the Senate and it was approved. This is the House counterpart of the bill.

I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, passage of H.R. 9798 today will be a great tribute to Congressman PAUL FINDLEY. It is he who has been the moving force behind this legislation to make Abraham Lincoln's home in Springfield, Ill., a national historic site. This bill will make possible the purchase of a four-block area around the Lincoln home and restoration of the site as it appeared when Lincoln lived there before becoming President in 1861.

I commend Representative FINDLEY for his leadership in this bill and feel it is only proper that the President should sign the House of Representatives version of this legislation so that it will be clear that this originated with Representative FINDLEY in the House. I have been happy to cooperate with him on this side of the Capitol, and I wish to express appreciation to my colleagues in the Senate who so enthusiastically backed a companion bill I introduced in the Senate. Our actions here today will result in final congressional action on this bill.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. President, this afternoon the Senate has a rare opportunity to honor one of the country's greatest Presidents, as well as the State and the city which he called home.

A little over a century ago the country faced the first real challenge to its national existence. It was saved by a unique American who came from the prairies of mid-America—from Illinois. Abraham Lincoln had faith in the good sense and decency of men and believed in the possibilities for reason and progress in the world.

When he left Springfield, Ill., on February 1, 1861, he could not have foreseen the enormity of the task that lay ahead. We will never be sure what events or good fortune conspired to give us this man in that moment of need. We do know that a homespun, self-taught man, unequipped by conventional standards to assume the Presidency, emerged from Springfield in 1861 to reunite a country almost destroyed by open rebellion.

It is only appropriate that the place where Lincoln unknowingly prepared himself to meet the challenges of his fateful Presidency be preserved and designated the national historic landmark that it is.

The Lincoln home, located on the corner of Jackson and Eighth Streets in Springfield, was the only place Lincoln called home for the 17 years preceding his Presidency.

Currently maintained by the State of Illinois in its original condition, it is one of the 10 most popular historic sites in the country. The neighborhood surrounding the home has been increasingly subject to the deterioration of commercial urbanization. The Lincoln Home National Historic Site bill, on which we will vote today, establishes a four-square block area surrounding the house to be administered by the National Park Service and restored to its original condition at the time Lincoln lived there.

At the Lincoln Home a smalltown lawyer and political novice became a statesman of world renown. I trust that the Senate will insure the preservation of this important part of our national life.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 9798) was ordered to be read a third time, was read a third time, and passed.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BIBLE. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, first, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROTH). The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 382) to promote fair practices in the conduct of election campaigns for Federal political offices, and for other purposes.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is S. 382. The pending question is the amendment offered by the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I thank the Chair.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that amendment No. 282, offered by the senior Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), be called up at this time, that it be stated by the clerk, and that the Senate proceed to its immediate consideration, but that time on that amendment not begin to run until tomorrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HART). Without objection, it is so ordered.

U.N. MEMBERSHIP FOR CHINA

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, U.S. overtures toward the People's Republic of China experienced a major escalation yesterday, when Secretary of State William P. Rogers made the inevitable announcement that American opposition to United Nations membership for mainland China would cease after 21 years.

There have been a number of developments over the past few years that made yesterday's announcement somewhat less surprising. Since October of 1970, at least six countries—Canada, Equatorial Guinea, Italy, Ethiopia, Chile, and Nigeria—have established diplomatic relations with the government in Peking. For its part, the People's Republic of China seems to have fully emerged from the isolation of its "cultural revolution," re-dispatching ambassadors to at least 28 nations.

But the most significant development was obviously the November 20, 1970, vote in the United Nations General Assembly. For the first time, a majority of the nations voting expressed support for U.N. membership for mainland China—51 in favor, 49 against, and 25 abstentions. The membership drive failed, of course, since, at the request of the United States, the vote was an "important question" and a two-thirds majority was needed.

Given the realities of the world today, no one was shocked by the new U.S. position; and the new policy apparently has been well enough calculated to win the approval of the majority of citizens.

However, we must not let ourselves get carried away by the euphoria of the situation.

Announcing the two-China policy is one thing—making it work is quite another. It can only succeed with the cooperation of both the People's Republic of China and Nationalist China. And neither of these countries has said it will sit with the other.

Mr. President, I have supported efforts to bridge the communications gap between our own Nation and the People's Republic of China. The December 1965 lifting of the travel ban for doctors and medical scientists; the July 21, 1969, automatic validation of U.S. passports for travel to mainland China; the "Ping Pong Diplomacy" event; and the President's decision to visit the People's Republic of China—all of these have contributed to bridging that gap.

But our efforts have gotten little in return from Communist China; and, if this latest move alienates a trusted and important ally—Nationalist China—then the results will be negative.

I support U.N. membership for the People's Republic of China but only if Nationalist China retains its seat, both in the General Assembly and in the Security Council.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session, to consider a nomination on the executive calendar, under Department of Justice.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HART). The nomination on the executive calendar, under Department of Justice, will be stated.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of David Luke Norman, of the District of Columbia, to be an Assistant Attorney General.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT TO 9 A.M. ON THURSDAY NEXT AFTER ADJOURNMENT ON WEDNESDAY

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, when the Senate completes its business tomorrow, it stand in adjournment until 9 a.m. on Thursday next, August 5, 1971.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR RECOGNITION OF SENATOR GRAVEL ON FRIDAY NEXT

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, on Friday, August 6, 1971, immediately following the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order the distinguished Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL) to be recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

QUORUM CALL

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum, and I assume that this will be the last quorum call of the day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE PROGRAM

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, the program for tomorrow is as follows:

The Senate will convene at 9 a.m. Immediately after the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order—and with no period for routine morning business—the Senate will proceed to the consideration of amendment No. 282 to S. 382, the so-called Federal elections campaign bill. The time on that amendment, which has been authored by the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), will be limited to 30 minutes, to be equally divided between the mover of the amendment and the manager of the bill, the Senator from Rhode Island (Mr. PASTORE).

It is assumed that a yeas-and-nays vote will occur thereon, although the yeas and nays have not yet been ordered.

It is anticipated that the Senate will work hard to complete action on tomorrow on the Federal elections campaign bill, if at all possible. If action has not been completed by 5 p.m., and if, at that time, it appears that another day will be needed for the disposition of that bill, it is likely that the Senate will then proceed to the consideration of the so-called higher education bill—S. 659—which was reported from the committee today. A time agreement has been entered thereon, and it is anticipated that the Senate will likely work into the evening on that bill.

There should be several rollcall votes tomorrow, and the first such vote could occur as early as 9:30 a.m. if the yeas and nays should be ordered on the Mathias amendment No. 282.

RECESS TO 9 A.M.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move that the Senate stand in recess in accordance with the previous order until 9 a.m. tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 7 o'clock and 12 minutes p.m.) the Senate recessed until tomorrow, Wednesday, August 4, 1971, at 9 a.m.

for the Congress to react as to what it has done. I think it is also proper for the administration to point out what has not been done. I do not think it was done from a posture of hostility, because it is necessary that the executive and legislative bodies work together. We should do as much as we can this year, because next year will be, to a degree, blighted by the pollution of politics, and the smog of ambition will descend upon our legislative bodies. It will be difficult to see, through the mist, the haze, and the smoke, the difference between what is substance and what is political. So that 1971 is a cleaner year, a year when one will be able to see farther into the distance and see more clearly the objectives than perhaps we will be able to do next year. As we get into the last 3 or 4 months before election, I have periodically warned the American people that Congress will not make too much sense. I do not want to say what I think the candidates will do.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair now lays before the Senate, S. 382, the so-called Federal election campaign bill, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Calendar No. 223 (S. 382) a bill to promote fair practices in the conduct of election campaigns for Federal political offices, and for other purposes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is amendment No. 282 of the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS). Who yields time?

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, if I may have the attention of my distinguished colleague, the Senator from Maryland, we have just had a very informal talk. The Senator has a number of amendments. Some of them go as to form. Some of them do go as to substance. I think they can be placed in the category of what we consider to be the very important amendments.

Mr. President, for that reason I have suggested to the Senator from Maryland that his staff sit down with our staff and determine which ones I could accept and which ones I would have to contest. And we would take a vote on it, whatever the result may be. We would thus have an expression of the will of the Senate.

They do have at the desk a very important amendment which has to do with the amount of money which any one individual can contribute. That is a very controversial amendment. As a matter of fact, I think that many on the other side of the aisle have very strong feelings, as some on our side of the aisle have very strong feelings, as to whether there should be a limitation on how much any one individual can give to a candidate or how much of his own money he can invest in his own campaign.

Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from Maryland, I would hope that he would temporarily withdraw this particular amendment and call up the important amendment. I think we ought to get right at the gut of this situation, and let us see if we can resolve the whole problem today.

We have this amendment and the Fan-nin amendment, which has to do with a checkoff. And apart from those, I do not know of any other amendments that we could not sit down as reasonable men and work out.

I say very frankly that if I cannot accept an amendment, I cannot do so. If I can accept the amendment, I will accept it. However, if I cannot do so, I will move to lay the amendment on the table. It does not make any difference whether the sponsor is a Republican or a Democrat. We have to solve the problem.

Mr. President, I am talking now on the time on the bill.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, I have been in attendance at conference on the HEW appropriation bill. Therefore, I could not be on the floor. Has the question concerning the interchangeability of the "five and five" limitation been resolved?

Mr. PASTORE. Yes. It has been adjusted so that it is five and five, with a leeway of 20 percent that candidates can use in one way or another. I thought that it was a fair compromise. That has been our attitude here. I do not agree with the attitude of those who say that we are not giving in enough or giving in too much. That is a lot of rhetoric. We want a bill for the country.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, I thank the Senator and commended him on the compromise. Having been confined to the conference session, and not having had an opportunity to look at the RECORD, I did not know of the resolution of this issue.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Maryland time on the bill.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I think that the Senator from Rhode Island has raised an extremely important question. I think the procedure which he has outlined is a good one. Some amendments have been proposed that I think the committee would be willing to accept and that the Senate would be willing to accept.

I am perfectly willing, after a careful staff review, to submit those en bloc, and we can dispose of them very expeditiously.

I have as a cosponsor of the amendment to which the Senator refers, the Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES). When he reaches the floor, we can proceed on that amendment. And others can probably be set aside for another day and will not have any effect on the election reform.

Mr. PASTORE. I would hope that they would be disposed of sometime this afternoon.

Mr. MATHIAS. Well, another year.

Mr. PASTORE. I see what the Senator means. He means after we have had it tested and tried thoroughly.

Mr. MATHIAS. Yes. After all, the law of the Medes and Persians are not involved here. We are dealing with the fabric of the law that will change as the customs and times change.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent at this point that I may withdraw the pending amendment, No. 282.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I will ask for a quorum call and we will try to reach Senators on the telephone to see if they can come to the floor.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum and ask unanimous consent that the time not be charged to either time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Maryland is advised that he has a right without unanimous consent to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I so do.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. MATHIAS. That is subject to the possible recall of the amendment.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator may recall the amendment.

Will the Senator from Rhode Island advise the Chair to whom the time is to be charged?

Mr. PASTORE. Neither side.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ANNOUNCEMENT OF HEARING ON DIVERSIFICATION OF DEFENSE CORPORATIONS

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Subcommittee on Production and Stabilization of the Committee on Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs will hold hearings on August 10, 1971, in Los Angeles on the problems relating to the diversification of defense corporations into nonmilitary production. These hearings will begin at 9 a.m. on August 10, 1971, in room 10220 of the Federal Building located at 11000 Wilshire Boulevard, Los Angeles, Calif.

spect to the major contours of the budget and, hence, the shape of our priorities. The establishment of an Office of Goals and Priorities with the mandate and capacity to produce a variety of budgets from which to choose would end this unhealthy dependence.

Finally, Congress currently is compelled to operate without the social data required to choose rationally between alternative resource uses, to evaluate program effectiveness, and to formulate comprehensive public policy. The Council of Social Advisors and the annual Social Report of the President authorized in Title I of the Act would help to fill this information vacuum.

In other words, if Congress is serious about employing its constitutional power over the purse to reorder the nation's priorities, it could begin at no better place than with the passage of the Full Opportunity and National Goals and Priorities Act.

With the enactment of the Full Employment Act in 1946, America acknowledged that Adam Smith's "invisible hand" could not be relied on in a society as complex as ours to ensure the economic welfare of its citizens.

Passage of Goals and Priorities Act would constitute an equally historic acknowledgment. For the "invisible hand" implicit in our fragmented and haphazard approach to many social problems is no more effective than its economic counterpart; and must similarly be replaced with disciplined, informed planning if the social well-being of our citizens is to be secured.

CONSUMER CREDIT

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, consumer credit continues to be an area of deep concern for all Americans viewing economic planning for the future.

Those of us with good memories will recall that, in the final hours of debate on the "Truth in Lending" bill Members of both the House and the Senate came to realize how little is really known about the intricate workings of the consumer credit system in this country. Indeed, the Congress discovered at that time that, never in our history, has our Nation done the kind of basic research on consumer credit that is essential to wise and prudent legislation. It was this paucity of reliable information that prompted the Congress to agree on two principles at that time: We agreed to limit "Truth in Lending" to the matter of disclosure; and we agreed to establish, on a bipartisan basis, the National Commission on Consumer Finance, whose duties—as defined by the act—are to "study and appraise the functioning and structure of the consumer finance industry, as well as consumer credit transactions generally," and to report to Congress on:

First. The adequacy of existing arrangements to provide consumer credit at reasonable rates;

Second. The adequacy of existing supervisory and regulatory mechanisms to protect the public from unfair practices, and insure the informed use of consumer credit;

Third. The desirability of Federal chartering of consumer finance companies, or other Federal regulatory measures.

I remind the Senate of these facts only because bills have already been introduced in both the House and the Senate—long before the Commission has developed the factual information that we agreed was essential to informed legislation. By various means, both bills would regulate the existing credit rate structure—asking the Congress to embark upon a course of action that we specifically, and quite recently, rejected.

I am reliably informed that the Commission is well along on its study of consumer credit and that it will meet its 1972 deadline. I am also told that research by the Commission up to now reinforces the need for added study. What has been learned to date is just how much we do not know about credit.

For example, we don't know what a law that limits the price of credit would do to the supply of credit. Would such a law make credit more or less available to consumers of low and marginal income?

We do not know whether a limit on the price of credit represents a real saving for our constituents or whether that consumer would wind up paying less for credit and more for the merchandise purchased.

We do not know what happens to people whose applications are rejected. Do they give up their desire to buy? Or, having been rejected by legitimate credit grantors, do they seek relief by turning to unscrupulous moneylenders who operate beyond the law?

Various of our States have now enacted laws regulating the price of credit. What has happened in these States? The laws differ widely. How do the results compare? Again, we do not know.

In short, there is almost nothing about credit that we do know for sure. We do not even know if a law which limits the price of credit would be a spur to our competitive system or whether such a law would make chaos of the existing and viable competitive relationships among retailers, banks, small loan companies, and other credit grantors.

My purpose in making this statement is not to suggest that the Congress close the books on credit legislation for all time. It may well be that additional legislation will be required. It is my purpose, however, to urge the Congress to act from knowledge and not from ignorance. Having established the National Commission on Consumer Finance, having spent the taxpayers' dollars to make sure we are acting in their interest, it seems to me we have no choice but to restrain our eagerness to legislate—at least until the facts are in hand in July 1972.

I would also remind the Senate of the dangers of whimsical tinkering with an economic force as intricate as credit. Our Nation is only now recovering from the economic downturn of 1970. Let us not imperil that recovery by needlessly hasty action.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the period for the transaction of routine morning business be closed.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the period for the transaction of routine morning business is closed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE— ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bills:

H.R. 2594. An act to amend chapter 19 of title 20 of the District of Columbia Code to provide for distribution of a minor's share in a decedent's personal estate where the share does not exceed the value of $1,000; and H.R. 2894. An act to incorporate the Paralyzed Veterans of America.

The enrolled bills were subsequently signed by the Acting President pro tempore (Mr. GAMBRELL).

FEDERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN ACT OF 1971

The Senate continued with the consideration of the bill (S. 382) to promote fair practices in the conduct of election campaigns for Federal political offices, and for other purposes.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, what is the pending matter now?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Maryland has been withdrawn.

The pending business is S. 382. The pending question is on the Pastore substitute amendment, as amended.

AMENDMENTS NOS. 267 AND 280

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I call my amendments Nos. 267 and 280, and I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered en bloc.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered. The amendments will be stated.

The amendments were read as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 267

On page 3, line 16, strike "(e)" and insert: "(f)".

On page 6, line 25, strike the closing quotation marks.

On page 6, after line 25, insert the following:

"(e) One who willfully and knowingly violate the provisions of subsection (c) or (d) of this section shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $5,000 or imprisonment for a period not to exceed five years, or both. The provisions of sections 501 through 503 of this Act shall not apply to violations of such subsection."

On page 10, strike lines 1 through 3 and insert in lieu thereof:

"(f) One who willfully and knowingly violates the provisions of this section shall be punished by a fine not to exceed $5,000 or imprisonment of not more than five years, or both."

AMENDMENT NO. 280

On page 20, strike lines 23 through 25 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

(1) "State" means each State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, these two amendments are technical in nature. They deal with some of what we might call the fine points of the bill.

One of the provisions of the bill as written is to provide criminal penalties for violation, and the penalties are different for the broadcast and nonbroadcast media.

The purpose of amendment No. 267 is to equalize the penalties as applied to the broadcast media and the nonbroadcast media. The amendment makes no other change in the bill except to put these two media in a state of equality.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MATHIAS. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I have considered the amendment carefully. It will bring about a high performance of standards. It is a good amendment. I am willing to accept it.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, amendment No. 280 is a technical amendment that amends the definition of "state" in title III to conform to the definition of "State" in title II so that those who have to interpret this act can deal with a uniform definition.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MATHIAS. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, that is exactly true. This merely clarifies the definition of "State," which means "each State of the United States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and any territory or possession of the United States."

I am perfectly willing to accept this amendment, as well.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Do Senators yield back their time?

Mr. MATHIAS. I yield back my time.

Mr. PASTORE. I yield back my time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendments to be considered en bloc.

The amendments (No. 267 and No. 280) were agreed to.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I send to the desk four amendments and I ask unanimous consent that they be considered en bloc.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendments will be considered en bloc. The amendments will be stated.

The amendments were read as follows:

On page 25, line 18, strike "in excess of $100" and insert in lieu thereof: "of $100 or more".

On page 27, line 9, strike the semicolon and the word "and" and insert in lieu thereof: "and a continuous reporting of their debts and obligations after the election at such periods as the Comptroller General may require until such debts and obligations are extinguished; and"

On page 21, line 14, after "address" insert the following: "(occupation and the principal place of business, if any)".

On page 21, line 23, after "address" insert the following: "(occupation and the principal place of business, if any)".

On page 22, line 3, after "address" insert the following: "(occupation and the principal place of business, if any)".

On page 25, line 13, after "address" insert the following: "(occupation and the principal place of business, if any)".

On page 26, line 6, after "addresses" insert the following: "(occupations and the principal places of business, if any)".

On page 26, line 19, after "address" insert the following: "(occupation and the principal place of business, if any)".

On page 26, line 25, after "address" insert the following: "(occupation and the principal place of business, if any)".

On page 13, line 3, insert after the word "regulations," the following: "and in the ordinary course of business".

On page 14, line 4, insert after the word "regulations," the following: "and in the ordinary course of business".

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I think the most significant of these amendments, the one with substance for the electoral process, is amendment No. 284, which requires the reporting of contributions of $100 or more. I think this is an important amendment because it gives confidence to the public that it is actually getting disclosure in a meaningful way.

The bill as written requires reporting of contributions in excess of $100 and, of course, that would exempt from reporting one of the most common devices that we know of, which is the $100 dinner. Whoever heard of a $10 dinner? It is perfectly true that these are arbitrary lines. It might be a $99 dinner, but the usual figure we see is the $100 dinner. So I think this amendment will show more than anything else the intent of the Senate to deal with election reform by requiring disclosures as to the $100 dinners to public view.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MATHIAS. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. The amendment is perfectly agreeable to the committee and to me, and I am willing to accept it, but from now on, as I said to the Senator, we will see the $99 dinner—$99.98 dinner.

Mr. MATHIAS. If I can observe to the Senator—

Mr. PASTORE. But the Senator is right. I hope he does not misunderstand me. I will buy the amendment.

Mr. MATHIAS. I was going to say that if the $99 dinner comes into vogue, at least it will be the first reduction in the cost of living for some time.

Mr. PASTORE. Well, I hope it breaks the inflationary spiral.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, amendment No. 286 requires that campaign debts remain on the books until they are extinguished. They cannot just drop out of sight and be forgotten. I think this is an important amendment, because the public has the right to know what happens to campaign debts, just as it has the right to know what happens to campaign assets.

Amendment No. 282 would require the insertion of the occupation and place of business of the contributor. This is a bit of exposure of the contributor's interest. I think it is important public business.

Finally, amendment No. 276 would exempt bank loans made in the ordinary course of the banking business from classification as contributions.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MATHIAS. I am happy to yield.

Mr. PASTORE. Here again I am perfectly willing to go along with this amendment. Of course, there are certain aspects that could be criticized. Where there is a very nominal debt, it means the committee would have to be in existence ad infinitum; but there may be cases where the debt is pretty large. That is what the Senator from Maryland is aiming at. This amendment would work out very well in that case. I am perfectly willing to accept it.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Do Senators yield back their time?

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, before I yield back my time, I ask unanimous consent that, in amendment 286, the words "Comptroller General" be changed to "Commissioner."

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I have no objection. That should be done.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the amendment will be so modified.

Do Senators yield back their time?

Mr. MATHIAS. I yield back my time.

Mr. PASTORE. I yield back my time.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendments of the Senator from Maryland en bloc, as modified.

The amendments, as modified, were agreed to en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I have an amendment, which I ask to have stated.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The assistant legislative clerk read the amendment, as follows:

On page 11, line 15, strike "and 614" and insert in lieu thereof "614, and 615".

On page 15, strike out lines 19 and 20 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Sec. 208. Section 608 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 608. Limitations on contributions and expenditures

"(a) (1) No person (other than a candidate or political committee) may make contributions directly or indirectly during any calendar year in excess of an aggregate amount of $5,000 to any candidate for Federal office. For purposes of this paragraph, a contribution shall be held and considered to have been made to such a candidate if it is paid to such candidate or his agent.

"(2) No such person may make contributions directly or indirectly to political committees in excess of an aggregate amount of $5,000 during any calendar year.

"(3) No candidate may receive contributions from, nor authorize expenditures by, political committees in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, and election, to Federal office in excess of an aggregate amount of $75,000 during any calendar year.

"(b) (1) No candidate may make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office in excess of—

"(A) $50,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President;

"(B) $35,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Senator; or

"(C) $25,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, 'immediate family' means a candidate's spouse, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons.

"(c) No candidate or political committee shall knowingly accept any contribution or authorize any expenditure in violation of the provisions of this section.

"(d) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000, imprisonment for not to exceed one year, or both."

On page 17, strike out the matter between lines 6 and 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"608. Limitation on contributions and expenditures.";

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS) had to leave the Chamber temporarily. The Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES) is here. I yield the floor.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, the amendment that was just read is the amendment that was offered by the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS) and myself to place a limit on the amount of money that an individual can contribute to a campaign; also, to place a limit on the amount that a candidate can receive from one person.

I think, when we are dealing with the subject of campaign expenditures, if we are going to have a meaningful bill, in addition to putting a lid on the amount of money that a candidate can spend, we must address ourselves to the amount of money that we are going to allow an individual to give to a campaign and the amount of money we are going to have a candidate receive from an individual.

What we are really trying to do when we put a lid on expenditures is work toward getting some public confidence into the elective process. If one wants to assume that every candidate is absolutely honest, that he is not going to be swayed by the amount of any money contributed, then there is no reason for any limitation to start with.

In many instances that can be true, but I think what we are trying to do, in addition to putting a limit on spending, is to restore some public confidence on the part of the people. The people cannot understand, today, why a candidate receives $25,000 or $250,000 from one individual, and they cannot understand how a candidate is not going to be influenced by receiving that amount of money. I cannot understand it either. If you receive that kind of money, there does not have to be any quid pro quo offered; there does not have to be any bargain struck, but from the day you take that kind of money from a contributor, you put the screw in yourself if you are running for office, because all that man has to do is look at you some time in the future and say "This is important to me" or "That means something to me," and then you are going to feel the responsibility and the debt that you owe, because you have accepted that kind of money.

We are trying to provide that $5,000 is the maximum amount of money that an individual contributor should give or that an individual candidate should receive from a contributor. As we look around this country today, we do not find many people who can make a $5,000 gift; but if we look at the campaign contributions, we find that many people made gifts amounting to more than that; and we also find that those people who gave more than $5,000 had an interest, in many instances a vital interest, in what was going on and in what they were seeking.

I have some experience with campaign contribution money. When I wanted to seek the office of U.S. Senator, most people said I could not even run for that office, because I did not have the ability to raise a war chest and get the kind of money that I would need.

I found I was in a campaign in which one candidate spent $450,000 of his own money in the first primary. All he had to do was write a check. I believe some kind of limitation on that is needed; because, for example, we have court cases which have held that if a candidate has only so much money to spend for qualifying, you cannot raise the qualifying fee to the point where you would be able to put him out of reach of qualifying for that office. But you are doing the same thing if you allow one candidate to spend his own personal wealth, as opposed to another candidate who is without such success.

I do not think we want to build into our offices the requirement that you have to be wealthy in order to seek the office of U.S. Senator or Governor or Representative. I do not think that should be a qualification, that you have to have large individual wealth. So this would be a limitation that a candidate for President could spend only $50,000 of his own money, a candidate for U.S. Senator could spend $35,000, and a candidate for Representative could spend $25,000.

I think that is an important limitation. It is most important, I think, that we put some curbs on the amount of money that an individual can give and the amount of money that a person individually can take from a contributor. I think that is important to restore public confidence. I think it is fine, if we are really dealing seriously with a campaign expenditure bill. We are just dealing with one little phase of it, if we are going to put a total limit on the amount one can spend, but do not put any limit on the individual contribution, because what we are concerned with is how a candidate is influenced.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for several questions?

Mr. CHILES. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. I think we ought to show in the RECORD exactly what this amendment would do, so that those who vote on it will know exactly what they are doing.

As I understand the Senator's amendment, one can give only to the extent of $5,000 to any candidate personally; is that correct?

Mr. CHILES. That is correct.

Mr. PASTORE. And one can give that $5,000 to as many candidates as he chooses, personally, is that correct?

Mr. CHILES. Individually, in their names.

Mr. PASTORE. In their names.

Mr. CHILES. Yes.

Mr. PASTORE. But if you do give to a committee, then all you can give is $5,000 maximum, period. In other words, you cannot give $5,000 to the committee of one candidate, $5,000 to the committee of another candidate, and $5,000 to the committee of a third candidate. Do I understand that to be the correct interpretation of the Senator's amendment?

Mr. CHILES. That is correct.

Mr. PASTORE. I mean, I would like the record to show that.

Mr. CHILES. Yes; whether you give to one committee or a series of committees, you can give only $5,000 through the committee system.

Mr. PASTORE. In other words, if, in a State, there were, let us say, 25 Representatives running for office, and two Senators—or there would be one Senator because they would not be running together unless there were a vacancy—and each of them had a committee, that would formulate 26 committees, would it not?

Mr. CHILES. Yes.

Mr. PASTORE. According to the interpretation of the Senator's amendment, the top amount one could spread out to those 26 committees would be $5,000?

Mr. CHILES. That is correct.

Mr. PASTORE. In its entirety?

Mr. CHILES. Yes.

Mr. PASTORE. I just wanted the record to show that, so that everyone will understand this amendment.

Mr. CHILES. Yes. But one contributor could give $5,000 to each one of those candidates individually.

Mr. PASTORE. That is right; but he would have to make it as a personal contribution to an individual.

Mr. CHILES. That is right. The public, therefore, would be informed of who was giving it and who was getting it, and that would stop some of this proliferation of having the committee really hiding, through the committee, who is making the gift and who is ultimately receiving it.

Mr. PASTORE. I understand. I just wanted to clarify that, so we would all understand.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. CHILES. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. Does the Senator's interpretation, then, also mean that this includes national committees as well as committees for a particular candidate? For example, would a man be able to make only a total $5,000 contribution to the political committee for Chiles, the political committee for Jones, and the National Democratic Committee or the National Republican Committee? And some of them do contribute to both.

Mr. CHILES. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. $5,000 would be the total?

Mr. CHILES. Yes.

Mr. CANNON. I must say that I find the Senator's proposal quite unrealistic. The committee has considered these matters over the years, and I must say that, without exception, the testimony before the committees by both of the political parties, by people who have considerable expertise in the field, was opposed to this type of amendment—not only the limitation on the committees, but the limitation on the candidates.

I have for years been trying to get out an election reform bill that was meaningful, and we came to the conclusion, after our hearings, that such a limitation was not only not meaningful, but perhaps was in violation of constitutional rights; and Assistant Attorney General Kleindienst testified before my committee to that effect, that he had grave doubts about the constitutionality of such a proposal and would recommend against it.

Though I do not recall precisely, in our last series of hearings I do not believe there was a solitary witness who did not testify against this sort of proposal, but rather favored the proposal of complete and full disclosure, leaving it up to the public to make their judgments based on the available information as to what the contributions are, and by whom and to whom.

I shall verify, before the discussion on the bill is concluded, whether there were any witnesses who testified in favor of that proposition.

Mr. CHILES. I appeared before the Senator from Rhode Island and his committee.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, may we have order? There is a rumbling going on here; we cannot hear.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate will be in order.

Mr. CHILES. I certainly spoke for having an individual limitation in that testimony.

I can see where perhaps the national committee of the Republicans and the national committee of the Democrats would be against this proposal, because they like to take contributions this way. It is a good way to get people to give so that their names are not disclosed. But I think the people of the country are entitled to know. I think they are entitled to have a limitation, and if we say that all you have to do is have a fair disclosure, then we do not even need the upper ceiling that we are putting on. And if we can put on an upper ceiling, for the life of me I do not understand why we cannot put on an individual ceiling.

My State has an individual ceiling on the amount a candidate can receive and a contributor can give, and that has been tested in the courts of my State and upheld. I do not have any great concern as to the constitutionality of placing a limit on what a person can give.

Mr. CANNON. When the Senator says "upper ceiling" I do not know what he refers to, unless he is referring to the amount a person can spend on radio or TV.

Mr. CHILES. I am talking about the total ceiling imposed by this bill.

Mr. CANNON. There is not a total ceiling now. That, we found, did not work. Ever since the law has been enacted, we have had a ceiling on the amount that a candidate could spend, so we have had the proliferation of committees. We are trying to get around that, because we found that that did not work and it is unrealistic, and we are trying to get to something that is more meaningful.

When the Deputy Attorney General testified before our committee, I queried him about a limitation. He said:

Yes; I know that, Senator.

This view is also supported by the 1970 report of the Twentieth Century Fund Task Force on financing congressional campaigns (electing Congress—the financial dilemma). Given full contributions disclosure during a campaign, we think the voter is capable of safeguarding the integrity of the election process. The reporting and disclosure provisions of the bill are adequate to permit contribution limitations to be set at the ballot box.

He went on further:

A further, and not insubstantial, argument against an individual campaign contribution limitation is the fact that this approach to the problem may be unconstitutional. In his testimony on this bill before the Senate Commerce Committee, Prof. Ralph Winter of Yale Law School expressed the view that a limitation on individual campaign contributions violates the first amendment. The Supreme Court, of course, has not yet ruled on this question.

He continued at considerable length.

As I have said, he and the other witnesses who testified before my committee opposed any limitations, for the reasons I have stated. Frankly, they convinced me, even though I initially did vote for a $5,000 limitation on contributions, and I was convinced in the course of the hearings; and I will have to oppose the proposal of the Senator.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Who yields time?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield myself 5 minutes on the bill.

Mr. President, I began with the same theory in discussing, over a period of years, how best to secure campaign reform; and I began with the theory that the obvious thing to do is to impose limitations on the candidates. I had no objection, and I still have no objection, to imposing limitations on contributions by candidates to their own campaign—the so-called rich man's amendment. But I question seriously the efficacy of the limitation on contributions to candidates by others.

One reason why I question it is that, as my staff went into the consideration of a bill, we discovered that almost all the academic experts on this matter—the professors of political science, agencies such as the Committee for an Effective Congress, and others who have long been interested in campaign reform—said that the way to do it is to have some very tough provisions, to safeguard the right of the public to know, to administer the law by an independent agency, and to limit the overall amount; which can be spent in a campaign—for example, through the media. The bill does all these things.

But it would seem to me to be in contravention of the approach already approved by many civic and public and nonpartisan agencies—they are all quoted in the hearings—for us to reverse the trend and attach a limitation and then wait for the inevitable evasions of the limitation, because they are easily evaded.

With respect to the limitation of $5,000 by an individual, all he has to do is to get a brother-in-law, who is not related to him. He puts up $5,000. Then his second cousin's wife puts up $5,000, and somebody else puts up $5,000, and the law becomes a shambles and a mockery.

What we are trying to do here is to get a law that will work. I want a law that will work and through which a team of mules cannot be driven, a law which would not take a Philadelphia lawyer to interpret. I am a Philadelphia lawyer, but I would not want to interpret the evasions of this bill.

So I hope we can put together a bill which the other body can accept with reasonable cheerfulness, and that we can avoid reversing our wheels when we are about two-thirds through toward passage.

I am for the reform bill, and I am for the various features we have been discussing as we have gone along. Some of the amendments have clearly strengthened the bill and improved the possibility of effective enforcement. This will not. This is an open invitation to evasion. Instead of having a large number of committees, as we do now, to evade the present laws, we will just have a large number of friends and relatives and people who are willing to lend their name and go ahead and make a donation in their name.

Every one of us in Congress knows what is wrong with the election laws. What is wrong with them is that they are not being observed, they are not being enforced, and they are being wilfully evaded, and the evasions are so widespread that there is no chance of enforcement. Let us try legislation that works. The proposed legislation has an independent agency. It has overall limitations on expenditures which, in my opinion, are a little too tight, but perhaps that is all right. It has tough reporting provisions, and that is all right. It has instructions to the regulatory agencies to come up with some rules and regulations to keep people from running a campaign on other people's money and not paying them back, particularly presidential candidates, who are notably bad credit risks for the most part.

I would not lend a presidential candidate a wooden nickel. But that is because I have been in politics long enough to understand about presidential candidates. They have to get their advertising somehow. They will travel and let the airlines pay for it if we do not do something about it. They will let Ma Bell's burden become ever greater if we do not do something about it.

So we can have a bill, and a good one, but I do not think we ought to have campaign limitations of this type, which is the prohibition of putting more than a given amount of money into a campaign by an individual. Yes, let the rich man be limited. Let the man be limited who should not try to buy public office by putting in $150,000 or $500,000 of his own money. But let us not limit the right of any individual—it is of doubtful constitutionality, anyway—to help another person run for public office. If he is limited, he will find another way to do it.

Mr. President, I think this amendment should be rejected.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I think this was one of the most controversial parts of the bill and the one problem that we had to wrestle with the most.

I am one of those who feel that there should be some kind of limitation. If we adopt the theory here that the sky is the limit, I am afraid that we can get into some scandalous situations. On the other hand, we have to be pretty careful what we do, because we may stymie the whole process of democratic elections.

Under this amendment, as it is presently drawn, it is my understanding that an individual who gave, let us say, $3,000 to one of my committees could give the national committee only $2,000, or if he gave my committee $5,000, he could not give anything to the national committee. Let us face it. It will take millions in the electronic media alone to run a presidential campaign. We have to raise the money. That is what puzzles me about this amendment. But we have to find an answer to the problem. When it comes to giving a contribution to one running for the Senate or Congress, frankly, I think that $5,000 from any one individual to that candidate is sufficient. Then we have to go around and get enough people to make a contribution, so that we can fit it into the ceiling as prescribed under the law. When we get into the question of committees, we do not find too much trouble with this interchangeability of the committees for various candidates running for Federal office, outside of the office of the President and Vice President. There, I am afraid, we do meet an unrealistic situation.

Mr. SYMINGTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island yield to me briefly?

Mr. PASTORE. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. SYMINGTON. It is necessary for me to go to a markup, but I would simply tell the able senior Senator from Rhode Island and present to him the fact that I believe there is great merit in this amendment, based on the personal experience I had in the last campaign. I will make a talk on that, if the able Senator will give me some time later on, and go into a little detail as to why I think, based on my actual experience, that this is a very important amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. Well, we may be disposing of this amendment this morning. I want to remark that to the Senator from Missouri. I also want to say to him that I am in accord with what he says, because he had a problem, where a wealthy person stated that no matter what it cost him, he was going to get his son elected to the Senate. That is one of the scandals I have been talking about. So that I think there should be a limitation on how much an individual can contribute to his own campaign so that he does not smother someone else, who has to go about scrounging for funds. What bothers me is: What are we going to do about our national committees?

Mr. SYMINGTON. If the Senator from Rhode Island would yield further for an observation, I understand that the amendment will be debated. I will be back here for the vote. The only reason I am taking the time of the distinguished Senator right now is that I heartily endorse the amendment and would hope that the Senate would agree to it.

Mr. PASTORE. Well, I realize that—
Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island yield?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, let me say that I regret the Senator from Missouri will not be in the Chamber to hear this debate on the pending amendment, because the arguments against it, I think, are overwhelming. A number of other people who have testified with expertise in this field are adamantly opposed to the amendment.

Let me say that I started out favoring the initial concept and—

Mr. SCOTT. So did I.

Mr. CANNON (continuing). But after hearing the testimony at great length, and going into the matter thoroughly, I have completely changed my position and I am adamantly opposed to it. I am sorry that the Senator will not be here.

Mr. SYMINGTON. I am very much impressed with what my good friend from Nevada, for whom I have the greatest respect and admiration, says. He knows more about it than I do. But, from what I heard of the amendment, and based on what my staff's analysis of it was, I felt it was important for me to take this position, based on my own experience.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Rhode Island yield me some time?

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, how much time do we have on this?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Florida has 1 minute remaining, and the Senator from Rhode Island has 11 minutes remaining on the amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I yield the Senator from Tennessee 10 minutes on the bill, if I have the time.

Mr. BAKER. I am not particular whose time I speak on. Five minutes?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator on the amendment if necessary, or on the bill.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. President, I have always felt that there should be a limitation on the amount that a candidate may contribute to his campaign, or on the amount that is contributed to his campaign by his family. That is a unique and special circumstance. I, too, started out, as did the distinguished minority leader, favoring a limitation on the amount any person could contribute to a political campaign. As a result of consideration of this matter in the Commerce Committee, and in the Subcommittee on Communications, as well as the diligent inquiry which was made by the Senate Committee on Rules and Administration before which I had the privilege of testifying, all of us came away with less certainty, thinking a little less ferociously about the matter than we did before the inquiry had started.

I am not convinced that there is a practical way to limit the amount of an individual contribution but I am sure, on the other hand, that if we are going to have a limitation on third-party contributions, it will have to be realistic. As the distinguished minority leader has pointed out, if it is not, then it is an open invitation to evasion and grievous injury will be done to a brand new bill. There is far more good in the bill than there is bad, but I would say that the effect of this effort would be to distort it by placing an unrealistic ceiling on third-party contributions.

I think that a distinction should be made between a limitation on the amount that a candidate and his immediate family may contribute to his own campaign and a limitation on contributions by third parties to his campaign. There should not, in my opinion, be a limitation on third party contributions. The limitation, if there is one, should apply to a candidate and his immediate family.

With those prefatory remarks out of the way, Mr. President, I should like to ask the distinguished junior Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES) a question or two with regard to the amendment, which will help to clarify its import in my mind.

Is it fair to say to the distinguished junior Senator from Florida that the effect of the bill—and I am referring now to section 203-A1—is to limit to $5,000 the amount that a third party can contribute to a candidate or a committee?

Mr. CHILES. That is not exactly correct. Under this, he could contribute $5,000 to the candidate. He could also contribute $5,000 to a committee or a series of committees. So, in effect, he could contribute $10,000, if he wanted to.

Mr. BAKER. That is the point I wanted to try to reach. Is there a limitation on the number of committees to which a $5,000 contribution could be made?

Mr. CHILES. On the committee section, in the amendment, the way it is now drawn, there would be a $5,000 limitation on a committee or committees.

Mr. BAKER. So that on the aggregate limitation of $5,000 on committees—and I came in after debate had begun, so the Senator will have to bear with me for a moment if I ask a question which has been already covered—is there a distinction between campaign money for a particular candidate and either the Democratic or Republican National Committees?

Mr. CHILES. Not the way this is drawn.

Mr. BAKER. Is there a distinction between the candidate himself and the Democrat and Republican senatorial campaign committees?

Mr. CHILES. No.

Mr. BAKER. Is there a limitation that would apply to the candidate and all committees regardless of their nature and scope? May I ask, then, do I read subsection 3 on page 2 correctly when I surmise that no single committee can contribute more than $75,000, but there is no limitation on the number of committees that can contribute $75,000?

Mr. CHILES. No, sir. Subsection 3 puts a limit on the candidate. It says that the candidate shall not receive from the committee or accumulation of committees more than $75,000 from the committee method. The rest of the contributions he would receive from individual contributions.

Mr. BAKER. Is that not, then, an effective limitation on the amount of money a candidate can spend when we combine that with the limitation the individual can spend?

Mr. CHILES. No.

Mr. BAKER. Have we not unintentionally limited the total amount the candidate can spend to $75,000 plus $50,000 that he can spend on his own behalf?

Mr. CHILES. No; because he can then receive individual contributions for any other amount. This is saying how much he will receive via the committee method.

Mr. BAKER. So, in effect, what we are doing is raising the options to three sources, that is, all committees in the aggregate can contribute $75,000. The candidate may contribute, if he is running for the Senate, $35,000 of his own funds, or those of his immediate family, and then he may receive individual contributions to take up the balance to the expenditure maximum, if he intends to spend the maximum, from personal contributions. Is that correct?

Mr. CHILES. I missed the Senator's question.

Mr. BAKER. Aside from the aggregate total of $75,000 from all committees, and in the case of a race for the Senate, $35,000 from his own funds or those of his immediate family, the balance of the funds, if he chooses to spend the funds that we allow in other sections of the bill, would have to be raised by individual contributions.

Mr. CHILES. Correct.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Tennessee yield?

Mr. BAKER. I yield.

Mr. CANNON. The Senator has very well pointed out many of the problems that exist in this amendment. Actually, it is being retrogressive rather than directly making this a meaningful election reform bill.

This would take us back beyond even the present law which we found to be completely unworkable and completely unrealistic. For instance, the present law contains the maximum of $5,000 contribution that a person can make. So he can make contributions to a lot of different committees. This would restrict it so that he could only contribute $5,000 to all of the committees together.

On the other hand, a candidate for the Senate can spend $25,000, or whatever the figure is, under the present law. It is somewhat different. But here we are saying that the committees can all pay money over to him from all committee sources, but that he can only raise $75,000. And he can only spend $35,000 of his own money.

There is no prohibition against committees going out and spending. We are leaving a loophole big enough to drive a truck through in that form if we are going to try to impose restrictions. This is the answer. We finally came to the conclusion that the best way to go about it was to go about getting a full disclosure.

There are so many ways we can get around the practicalities of what has to exist if the campaign is to be run properly.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I commend the Senator from Nevada for his perception of the whole issue. As I conceive it, we are trying to move away from an unworkable bill which has failed to accomplish its purposes in the past elections. This bill threatens to put us back in the position we were in before.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I yield 2 additional minutes on the bill to the Senator.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I thank the minority leader. I feel that if there is a limitation at all, it applies in two different ways that an individual can contribute to the candidates. I think there are two different situations. However, after having considered every effect of this that could be brought to my attention or that I was aware of, I finally concluded, and reluctantly, that it was physically impossible to have a workable limitation on individual contributions. If the Mathias amendment relates to the candidate's own efforts I think that would be related in a new amendment.

I do not feel that this is the right approach, and I will vote against it.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, on that point, concerning the limitation, a candidate to the office of Senator would be able to spend $35,000 of his own money. We do not put any limitation on the amount he can spend in a campaign.

We say that if a candidate has money, he can only spend $35,000 of his own money. However, he has to spend half of the time necessary to run a campaign trying to raise money from friends, to the extent of $5,000 each. If we are going to let a man spend $100,000, is it any worse if he spends it from his own money or spends it as a result of solicitations through the mail and the collection of contributions in the amount of $1 or $5?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, there is a point that relates to this, and that is that those who are rich have very rich friends and it would be very easy to get such contributions. And we would have a valid campaign.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I yield myself time from my own time.

The thing that bothers the Senator from Rhode Island is this: Let us assume that the President can spend $6 million. Does not the Senator think it would be improper for him to, let us say, collect $1 million from six different people to finance his campaign? Does the Senator not think that smacks of scandal?

Mr. BAKER. I think it would if it were concealed from the public.

Mr. PASTORE. Even if it were disclosed that an individual was putting up $1 million toward the election of the President, I would be wondering what position as ambassador to what country he would pick.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I point out to the Senator from Rhode Island that if any such situation as the Senator visualizes were to occur with a Republican candidate, the Senator from Rhode Island would make exactly the same speech he has made now in a public forum. And it would be very damaging indeed.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I want to say, and I hope I am not being accused of plagiarism, that in discussing the bill, the Senator came up with a solution that I thought was rather practical. What he said was that any individual could contribute to any candidates for different offices. I think one office involved the Presidency, and I think the Senator said an individual could contribute $25,000. He also said that he could contribute $15,000 to a senatorial race and $10,000 to a congressional race.

I do not see why anyone, unless they have an angle, wants to contribute more than $15,000 to a senatorial campaign—unless it happens to be a wife who loves the candidate very much.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island recalls correctly. As I said in my earlier remarks on the floor today, throughout the process of the consideration of this bill in the Commerce Committee under the leadership of the Senator from Rhode Island and in the Committee on Rules and Administration, before which committee I testified, we had three sets of opinions on this.

I finally came to the reluctant conclusion that I hold now: that the thrust of this effort must be to have a workable bill and that this amendment leads us away from that direction.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, the Senator from Rhode Island raises a very good point. The Attorney General got into that matter. We could find questions involved if we imposed a limitation. A person could make the amount of that contribution and, on the other hand, turn around and make a contribution to political committees, to a county committee, to a State committee, and to a national committee. They in turn could spend the money for the candidates.

This could lead inadvertently to a violation of the law, as the Attorney General pointed out in his testimony. Therefore, we could have a man violating the law on the matter of the limitation we impose. On the other hand, he could contribute money to respective committees that in turn spend funds for the same candidate.

The point the Senator from Rhode Island made was about the tremendous contributions that were made. This information is made public today. I am sure the Senator will recall the situation. It was given notoriety in the newspapers and concerned the tremendous amount of contributions made during the last election. But what was bad about that? The bad feature was that the publicity occurred long after the election was over.

We have tried to get at that matter. We have set the reportings we require in the bill so that they will make the information available to the public and the public can make an informed judgment as to whether it constitutes an undue influence.

We saw an example of this with relation to 16 ambassadors, I think, that were appointed who were big contributors to the party. That is not unusual. It consistently happens. However, the point is that the public knows the amount of the contributions before the election and they can make an informed judgment and make a decision. However, certainly when we do not learn these facts until long after the election, there is not any opportunity for the public to be informed in any way.

Mr. BAKER. I agree with the Senator from Nevada. I think he is right.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, there is this to be said about the bill. Subsidies have a ceiling, and the spending restriction is very tough and, I might add, brutal on disclosures. There is no question about that. But the thing that bothers me is that I do not like the idea that the sky is the limit.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, would the Senator agree that the amendment is not exactly the way it should be?

Mr. PASTORE. The amendment is faulty in several respects. There is no question about that. Whether we can reach some kind of a solution on this matter, I do not know. However, this question comes under the jurisdiction of the Senator from Nevada, who has gone into this matter thoroughly, even more so than we did on our committee, because we did not have primary or original jurisdiction with respect to the question.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, we have come a long way now in trying to get election reform. We have gone up the hill and down the hill in past years and we have not been able to get it through. We have an opportunity here at this time to take a step forward. I would hope that we do not try to take so many steps forward at the same time that we fall flat on our faces in the process.

Let us try to get a bill that is meaningful from the standpoint of the election reform and let the public know what is happening. Let us see if we cannot move along and make progress in this field, progress that is long overdue. Then, if we need to make changes as time goes on, we can do it. But let us not kill the bill by trying to get in everything that everybody wants. There are many things that I wanted. But I have changed my thinking in order to try to get a bill.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes on the bill.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I agree we should not kill this bill with kindness. What happened here is that the Committee on Commerce considered this measure at great length and with a good deal of expertise available. There were many witnesses over the years.

The Committee on Rules and Administration also considered the bill most carefully. Many Senators have worked on this bill.

In the course of working on it, a number of Senators, including several of us who have spoken, began with the idea that the way to pass a reform bill was to limit campaign expenditures. We discovered, and we were supported in testimony by nearly all who testified, that the way to reform campaign expenditures is through disclosure and an overall limitation on how much is spent in various ways, so that the public knows how much is being spent, who is spending it, why it is being spent, and where it is being spent.

The amendment process here often involves the submission of amendments, motivated by the greatest of good will, but submitted by Senators who have not heard the testimony, who have not gone through the process of changing their minds as they have heard the witnesses, and who have the same ideas now which the Senators on these two committees began with and rejected.

Mr. President, here is what the Committee on Rules and Administration said on page 121 of the committee report:

The committee carefully examined the desirability of having a limitation on individual contributions. The committee rejected placing a limitation on individual contributions for three reasons:

I especially emphasize the first reason; I mentioned it before:

(1) Such a limitation probably is unconstitutional;

(2) Such a limitation is completely unworkable; and

(3) Full disclosure makes such a limitation unnecessary.

Prof. Ralph Winter, of Yale Law School, stated the following:

"It is my judgment that the first amendment plainly prohibits the setting of a legal maximum on the political activities in which an individual may engage. This is the case whether or not the maximum is imposed in the name of equalizing opportunity or whether an actual discriminatory effect can be shown."

Even if such a limitation were constitutional, it clearly would be unworkable. Section 204 of S. 382 as originally introduced, would have limited individual contributions to an aggregate amount of $5,000, whether given directly or indirectly to a political candidate. Not only would the $5,000 limitation have invited evasion of the law—

I already mentioned that.

by encouraging backroom cash contributions but also it would have created a situation whereby both the contributor and the candidate could have inadvertently violated the law. Such a situation would arise whenever an individual gave $5,000 to a particular candidate and any additional money to an organization or committee which in turn made any contribution to the same candidate. Deputy Attorney General Richard G. Kleindienst in testifying before the committee succinctly summed up the problem:

"Further, the proposed section would impose felony sanctions for aggregate contributions exceeding the limitation in any amount, and regardless of the intent of the contributor."

So, Mr. President, you can go to jail without meaning to do so, or you can go to jail without violating the law, or you can go to jail because somebody takes part of your contribution and applies it in a way you did not know about or did not intend.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 additional minutes on the bill.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Pennsylvania is recognized.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I continue to quote the statement of Deputy Attorney General Richard G. Kleindienst, which appears on page 122 of the committee report:

In view of the perplexing array of political committees which solicit campaign contributions, inadvertent violations are likely and intentional violations may easily be made to appear inadvertent. Such a proscription would be virtually impossible for the Department to enforce and the public would be deluded if it believed otherwise.

Moreover, it was recognized that full and complete disclosure really solves the problem of large contributions. Under the new disclosure provisions contained in title II the public will know exactly how a candidate's campaign is financed. Since the disclosure provisions require reports 15 days and 5 days before an election, the voter will be in a position to make a judgement at the polls concerning the effect of large individual contributions to a political candidate.

Mr. President, this well-intentioned amendment serves only the purpose of creating a question of constitutionality in connection with an important part of the bill. Not only that, but it also raises questions of concurrence in the other body; it reverses the processes on which the bill is predicated, the process of disclosure and total limitation of expenditures through the media; it is unworkable, and, as the Deputy Attorney General said, it is unenforceable.

Mr. President, I do not know how many more faults one can find in an amendment. Then, it is said that it is against the law, that it could not be enforced if it were a part of the law. In any event, it is an evasion and contradictory to the rest of the bill. I think if those who introduced the amendment had heard the testimony they would not have pressed the amendment.

I would suggest we have the rich man's amendment separately, and some limitation on how much a man can give to his own campaign, because I can see a great evasion in this amendment. If he is limited to $5,000, what does he do? He has no limitation on his own money. He is a man of influence. He wants to find $200,000. He finds 40 friends and gives it to them and each of them gives back $5,000.

Let us close that loophole and go after the man who would bribe the election because he is so well fixed. But on top of the spending limitation and the media section let us not add something that will not work.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. NELSON). The Senator's 2 minutes have expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, what is the present time situation?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Five minutes are left on the amendment; 4 minutes to the Senator from Rhode Island and 1 minute to the other side.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, how much time do I have remaining on the amendment?

Mr. CHILES. The Senator can take time from the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. MATHIAS. Will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield me time?

Mr. SCOTT. I yield 5 minutes to the Senator from Maryland on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Maryland is recognized.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, as the sponsor of this amendment I request that we have a division of the amendment into sections (a) and (b), as offered, and a separate vote on section (a) and section (b).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator asking for a separate vote on section (a) and a separate vote on section (b)?

Mr. MATHIAS. The Presiding Officer is correct. I further request that we vote first on section (b), which the Senator from Pennsylvania called "the rich man's section."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That would require unanimous consent.

Mr. CANNON. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. MATHIAS. I yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state the parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. CHILES. Can the sponsor of the amendment, in effect, ask to conform his amendment to take up section (b), and would that require unanimous consent, the yeas and nays not having been ordered, if he asked to conform his amendment to have section (b) read section (a) and section (a) read section (b)?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that it cannot be done since the amendment is printed, unless there is unanimous consent to change it.

The Parliamentarian advises the Chair that since the yeas and nays have not been ordered, the author of the amendment may withdraw his amendment and offer section (b) as an amendment.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I will withdraw the amendment and offer section (b) of the amendment as a new amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator send his amendment to the desk?

Mr. MATHIAS. The amendment is at the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment as now offered.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, in view of the fact that this amendment is an integral part of the previous amendment, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I object. I have not heard.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard. The amendment will be read.

The assistant legislative clerk read the amendment, as follows:

On page 15, strike out lines 19 and 20 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Sec. 203. Section 608 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows:

"§ 608. Limitations on contributions and expenditures

"(a) (1) No candidate may make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office in excess of—

"(A) $50,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President;

"(B) $35,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Senator; or

"(C) $25,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Representative, or Delegate or Resident Commissioner to the Congress.

"(2) For purposes of this subsection, 'immediate family' means a candidate's spouse, and any child, parent, grandparent, brother, or sister of the candidate, and the spouses of such persons.

"(b) No candidate or political committee shall knowingly accept any contribution or authorize any expenditure in violation of the provisions of this section.

"(c) Violation of the provisions of this section is punishable by a fine not to exceed $1,000, imprisonment for not to exceed one year, or both."

On page 17, strike out the matter between lines 6 and 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"608. Limitations on contributions and expenditures."

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, the distinguished minority leader, the Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCOTT), very aptly described this as a rich man's amendment. It is a very simple amendment. It simply says that a man running for the presidency cannot contribute, either directly from his own funds or from the funds of his family, more than $50,000 to his political campaign for President or Vice President; that a man or woman running for the U.S. Senate will be limited, under the same circumstances, to $35,000 of personal or family money; or $25,000 in the case of a candidate for the U.S. House of Representatives.

I do not think these are unreasonable restrictions.

I think there is nothing more destructive of confidence in representative government and in the democratic process than enormous sums of personal or family money invested in a campaign.

Let me say—and I think it is a vindication of our system—that sometimes these investments of vast private fortunes do not work. That was the case of the Ottinger campaign in New York in 1970. Although the money was spent, it did not work; and I think that should give us some confidence, but I do not think we can allow the public trust and the public respect for the electoral institutions to depend upon these vagaries of chance, and I think we can build into the system in this bill some protection against even the suspicion that a man can buy a seat in the House of Representatives or buy a seat in the Senate or buy the White House itself.

These are arbitrary figures, of course. It is difficult to set what should be an exact or accurate figure which the law should allow a man to give to his own campaign, but I think it is essential that we do.

History is replete with lessons on this. There was, at the end of the Julian dynasty of the Caesars, at the time of Nero's death, no more of the family of Julius and Augustus Caesar to inherit the empire, and so Galba bought it. He just bought it, lock, stock, and barrel. There is a further lesson for us in the history of Galba, because he wretched on the deal. He was a man with a reputation of great wealth. He never went for a ride in his carriage without carrying with him a million cisterians of gold. So he got the reputation of being a rich man. So when the opportunity came to use his credit to get the imperial throne, he bought it on credit, and he wretched.

Mr. President, let us not have any Galbas in America. Let us not give anybody that chance. Let us not give anybody the expectation that the gold is available for that purpose.

I think this is a very important amendment, and I am very appreciative of the support of the Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES), who is cosponsor.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I wanted to ask the Senator if he knows why, in our system, in a democratic government, there should be an advantage to being born to wealth in seeking public office. Should that be an advantage, under our system, that we should give a candidate?

Mr. MATHIAS. It is not a case of whether someone is born with wealth, but the mere possession of wealth should not in itself be a qualification for political office, and the ability to control vast sums of money should not be a qualification for public office. Of course, as the Senator knows, it is impossible to totally equalize a great society such as ours, but this amendment goes in that direction.

Mr. CHILES. When we make a law with respect to qualifying fees, and when the courts have struck down high qualifying fees as denying equal protection under the law to individuals not of wealth, which would really fix it so individuals of wealth could seek office and those without wealth could not do so, are we not really talking about the purpose that is contained in the amendment—that we wish people to start equal and not give a great advantage to someone because one candidate is wealthy and the other is not?

Mr. MATHIAS. The Senator is correct.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MATHIAS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, I yield myself 5 minutes on the bill.

I respect very much the attitude and the sincerity of the distinguished Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS) and the distinguished Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES). But, as a practical matter, this amendment is very likely to backfire. It may work exactly the opposite from what these very dedicated gentlemen intend.

I happen to live in a State that has a rigid restriction or ceiling on contributions of individuals to campaigns. If one runs for the U.S. Senate, he cannot have more than $3,500 from any individual or group of individuals. That is the limit of the contribution.

Mr. President, if any unknown person is seeking to oppose an incumbent Senator, and he starts his campaign, it is going to be very difficult, in the early part of his campaign, for him to raise money. If he is not allowed to advance a reasonable amount of money from his own resources to get his campaign underway we would just be insuring the renomination and reelection of an incumbent Senator, because a well-known incumbent naturally receives more contributions.

Mr. President, there is no way on earth, and I do not believe that any human mind can devise legislation, to make a poor man as fortunate as a rich man. If you and I sit down around a poker table, it makes no difference whether we are playing for 10 cent stakes or $10 stakes, the fellow who has more money has the advantage because his losses do not concern him as much.

I certainly am not wealthy. In fact, I am of very limited means. And after 40 years of campaigning for public office, it is my opinion that the only way to prevent what the Senators seek to prevent is by rigidly enforced, periodic disclosure of who is spending what and for whom, so that before any election the public can read and know everything that has been spent or has been contracted to be spent. Such rigid disclosure will enable the public—and they are sophisticated enough—to form their own judgments when they see a rich man trying to buy an office.

For many years I was an attaché working for a Member of this body. I was here 40 years ago, when Vare of Pennsylvania and Smith of Illinois were denied seats in this body because it was found that they had spent great sums in securing nomination and election to the U.S. Senate. I remember that occasion as a young man, and others through the years.

The people can determine if a man is trying to buy a seat. But, there is nothing we can put on that will not give a rich man an advantage. What we are going to do, if we adopt this amendment in this form, is fix it so that some humble unknown, who is trying to run for Congress or trying to run for the Senate, whose name is not prominent enough to attract contributions, and who certainly at the outset of his campaign has to depend on raising money, will have greater difficulty in winning a seat.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. COTTON. Certainly I yield to the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS).

Mr. MATHIAS. The Senator, of course, speaks a great deal of home truth here. It is like the old doggeral verse with which we are all familiar:

It's the same the whole world over.
Isn't it a shame?
It's the rich that gets the gravy.
And the poor that gets the blame.

I do not deny that, and I do not think the Senator from Florida denies it. If you have plenty of money, instead of riding around in an old car that has got 100,000 miles on it—

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator from New Hampshire has expired.

Mr. COTTON. I yield myself 3 additional minutes, and yield 2 minutes of it to the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS).

Mr. MATHIAS (continuing). An old car with threadbare tires, as compared with the affluent candidate who happens to have a big, comfortable car than can get there, or maybe even an airplane, surely the rich candidate is going to have some built-in advantage. We cannot legislate all those advantages out of the system. But we can, I think, reduce them to the irreducible minimum.

That is all this proposal would do. It does not say, as the Senator from New Hampshire suggests, to some obscure but worthy candidate, that he is going to be put at a disadvantage because that obscure and worthy candidate is not likely to have more than $25,000 of his own money to put in a House race, or $35,000 of his own money to put in a Senate race, or $50,000 of his own money to put in a presidential race.

This is merely saying to that obscure candidate, "We are not going to let you be bargained out of the marketplace by someone who can do more than that." This is simply putting a limitation on the advantage of wealth.

Mr. COTTON. If the Senator will recall, I did not say a poor obscure candidate. I said a new man trying to break in—that is a new candidate. I say that even in a small State like my own, you cannot have a hotly contested battle for a seat in the U.S. Senate without spending $100,000.

Mr. MATHIAS. And you should have it.

Mr. COTTON. All right. But, I say that if John Doe who is a member of a State legislature comes along, for example, and tries to run for a Senate seat held by a popular and well-known Senator, then he is going to have to start financing his campaign in advance. The money contributions come in later. However, the Senator's amendment would fix it so that he cannot do that.

Mr. MATHIAS. But, if the Senator will yield, since he has held himself up as an example here—

Mr. COTTON. No, I withdrew that.

Mr. MATHIAS. Suppose, after the many years of loyal and effective service which the Senator has rendered not only to the people of his State, but the entire Republic, some enormously wealthy individual rides in, invests a million dollars of his own money, and puts on the kind of publicity broadside that would obscure the solid contributions the Senator has made; is that fair?

Mr. COTTON. I can tell my good friend, as a practical matter, that I would like to see some rich man run against me. I can assure you that everyone in the State of New Hampshire would know before that campaign was over that he was rich; that he was spending money; and that he was thereby attempting to "buy" the office.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator's time has expired.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for some further questions on this subject?

Mr. MATHIAS. I have no further time, but if the Senator will yield on his time.

Mr. CANNON. I yield myself 5 minutes on the bill.

This provision says that no candidate may make expenditures from his personal funds in excess of a stated amount. Does that mean a candidate could not go out and get credit in excess of that amount, and then later try to have a fundraising dinner or something to pay off those obligations? What is the situation there?

Mr. MATHIAS. I do not understand exactly what the Senator means.

Mr. CANNON. The provision says:

"No candidate may make expenditures from his personal funds, or the personal funds of his immediate family, in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, or election, to Federal office in excess of—

"(A) $50,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of President or Vice President;

"(B) $35,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Senator; or

"(C) $25,000, in the case of a candidate for the office of Representative.

What I am asking is, does that mean the candidate could not go out and secure credit in excess of that amount, with the hope of later paying it out of contributions? The question is, if he does that, then what happens if he does not raise contributions in that amount, and eventually winds up for the deficit that exceeds the amount he is permitted to spend?

Mr. MATHIAS. Of course, these are difficult questions in practice. My own feeling would be that I would take the strict construction, that a candidate should not rely on his own resources, because this could be a very neat way to circumvent the intent of Congress here, if in fact this turns out to be the intent of Congress.

If a candidate were a man of very substantial wealth, and, relying upon the statement of his banker, he could go and open the till at any time, not in reliance upon what he might hope to get because of his political campaign, but because the banker knows he has got the rest of it stashed away, I think we would nullify, really, the attempt here, which is to equalize the access to public office between those who are wealthy and those who are not.

Mr. CANNON. Does the Senator feel that there is evil inherent in a man spending more than $35,000 of his own money, rather than going out and getting $40,000 from eight of his friends at $5,000 apiece? Is that an inherent evil the Senator is trying to correct?

Mr. MATHIAS. The Senator uses the word "evil." I think what we are dealing with here is a reinforcement of public confidence in the stated ideals of this Republic, that in the eyes of the law, in the eyes of the Government, men are equal, and that we will not tolerate the personal or the natural inequalities that providence may impose upon us to become fixed as a part of our political and social system; that we are saying that we are going to give men equal access, to the greatest extent possible, to the privilege and to the responsibility of public office.

Mr. CANNON. Does the Senator feel that the public is going to have its confidence instilled by the adoption of legislation that is obviously unworkable and obviously is unreasonable and probably infringes on a constitutional right?

I pointed up one practical problem already, that of a man extending credit. He goes out and gets credit during the campaign and does not happen to be able to raise all the funds to pay it off, and he has to pay it off himself over a period of time, and it amounts to more than $35,000. Under this proposal, he would be in violation of the law.

Take the case of a man who does have some wealth and happens to have his own airplane. How is that going to be allocated, when he flies his airplane? What is the amount that should be allocated to this $35,000 if he has his own airplane that he can fly around and use to visit people to try to sell a campaign?

Is this proposal going to cover the postage which a man has to buy to send out his mailing? Suppose he buys a great many stamps and sends out a great deal of mail, and his people come in and say, "Mr. Candidate, we have a lot of letters that have to go out, and we have to have stamps, and you are up to your $35,000 limit." Can he not go out and buy stamps? Can he not pay the telephone bills that he might have incurred on an extension of credit on his telephone credit card?

I believe there are many practical problems here that are not going to help instill confidence of the public in the elective process. The public is going to have their confidence instilled, if they have it instilled, by knowing what is going on and then making a decision as to whether or not they will support that particular candidate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The time of the Senator has expired.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada and the Senator from Pennsylvania yield me 5 minutes on the bill?

Mr. CANNON. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. PROUTY. I yield time to the Senator.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, I want to inject a couple of statements with respect to this amendment. I believe many things are involved.

I think that anybody who is dumb enough to contribute that much to his own campaign probably is not going to get elected, anyway. But, over and beyond that, he has a right to do it. I would say that this is as much of a right under the first amendment as the right of free speech.

I do not agree or think it is sensible for people to walk barefooted even in a peace march to the Capitol. I do not think it adds very much. Nevertheless, those who want to do it have a right to do it, and I am not going to stop them from doing it, as long as they do not interfere with anybody else's rights.

I do not see any reason why, just because somebody's family may have some money, they are prohibited from contributing. This is an exercise of free speech. It is an exercise of political participation. Why do we take it out only on the President and the Senator and the Representative? What about the Governors?

I understand that the present Governor of Pennsylvania, Governor Shapp, spent an enormous amount of his own money in his campaign, and so did Mr. Ottinger. Shapp was defeated the first time and won the second time. Ottinger was defeated. Perhaps they were defeated because they spent so much money. I do not have the faintest idea.

I do not see why we should take upon ourselves the banner of righteousness and say that simply because somebody has some money, he should not be allowed to spend it. It seems to me that is a total limitation on the right of free speech in our country.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMINICK. I am happy to yield.

Mr. MATHIAS. I think the Senator has raised an interesting constitutional question, and I do not ignore that constitutional question. Since it has been raised, perhaps it ought to be addressed.

Let us assume, for the sake of our discussion, that there is a constitutional question. I pose to the Senator a parallel kind of problem, which is the problem we have under the first amendment, including the right of a free press and the constitutional guarantee of a fair trial. We have discovered in the course of our political experience that the guarantee of a free trial is not always compatible with the guarantee of a totally free press, and there has to be some coordination of these two very essential and basic constitutional principles.

I admit, only for the sake of this argument, that there is a constitutional problem here. But if there is, I would say it is the kind of constitutional principle which has to recognize that there are other equally and important constitutional principles that also have to be recognized.

Mr. DOMINICK. If I may say so, the constitutional restrictions, as I understand them—and I am not sure that anybody understands them—on the free-press situation at this point, the ones I can see, are those which definitely involve the national security of the country or which definitely create hazards to individuals, visible hazards, such as yelling "fire" in a crowded theater. This is the type of situation in which there is a restriction. In this case, one is not yelling "fire" in a theater by spending more money or having his family spend more money, if they want to be dumb enough to do it, as I have said.

Second, the national security is not being endangered, unless the person who is being attacked by a person who is spending that kind of money thinks he is the only savior in the United States; and if he thinks so, he should be put out of office, anyway.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DOMINICK. I yield.

Mr. MATHIAS. Let me say that I would have to disagree violently that if one condones the practice of recent years—since I have mentioned the Ottinger case, I mention it again—if there is a feeling around the country that it is all right to spend—I have forgotten the exact figures—more than $2 million of one's money or the money of one's immediate family in a campaign for the U.S. Senate, and nobody objects, and everybody says that is all right, or at least they do not say it is wrong, then I say to the Senator that he is yelling "fire" in a crowded theater.

Mr. DOMINICK. I say to the Senator that the people of that area said they did not want him, so they said they thought it was wrong, and they voted him out. I do not see any real horror in that. I do not see any crowded theater. I am happier that he spent $2 million of his own money, or whatever the figure was, than $2 million of other people's money that he went around and collected all over the place and then spent. I think it is much better for him to do it this way and let him help the economy, as the Senator from Kansas just whispered in my ear. I do not see anything wrong with that.

It seems to me that injecting the idea that we are able to limit what somebody else can say as to their right of expression or support of a candidate is just plain wrong. I think it is unconstitutional, and I think it is morally wrong.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, I yield myself time on the bill to say that we have explored this amendment thoroughly. I understand that the distinguished Senator from Florida is about to use 5 minutes. I hope it will not be taken amiss if, after he has used his 5 minutes, I move to table this amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. I yield 5 minutes on the bill to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I have been listening with great interest to a number of the discussions and arguments on this bill and on this amendment. I have heard many things about it being wrong, about it being unconstitutional, and that it will create all kinds of problems. What I hear sounds to me like a lot of nit-picking.

It seems to me that all we are talking about is really the confidence of the people in this body and in the Presidency, and whether we are going to have the people feel that one can buy an office in the Senate and Congress or in the Presidency. Some Girl Staters were up here the other day, and I sat with them in the gallery for a few minutes. They were looking down on the Senate during its deliberations and one of them said to me, "We were talking with our counselor and in our classes and we came to the conclusion that you were the only person in the Senate who is not wealthy, that you have to be wealthy to get into the Senate."

Well, of course, that is not true, but there are many people who believe that. However, it made me realize that this is a concept that not only Girl Staters have but many other people, that we have to be wealthy to be a Senator.

It is a concept that, in some ways, is true, that we have to have wealth, or some resources, or the ability to get some money together in order to seek office. I do not believe that should be true, if we are talking about gaining the confidence of the people of this country.

I do not believe that if we are wealthy, all we have to do is write out a check, because we have so much money, for all the television time we need, all the radio time we need, all the money needed for billboards, and have all that done by writing one check, as opposed to the candidate who must seek contributions from his friends and other people who are willing to support him, to try to run a campaign.

I do not believe that is the American way. I do not believe the American way is that we should be able to buy an office. The courts have already spoken to that when they asserted that the qualifying fee cannot be raised to put a man out of office.

What disturbs me is that the limitations are so high. I do not see why a candidate should be able to spend $25,000 or $35,000 in order to buy the job.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Florida yield?

Mr. CHILES. I yield.

Mr. BROCK. I personally agree with what the distinguished Senator from Florida is trying to accomplish. The Senator just mentioned the fact that the limitations are so high; $50,000 is the limitation on the presidential campaign and that is probably less than two-tenths of 1 percent of the amount which will be spent; $35,000 is the limit for a senatorial race. On the average, that is only 3 percent to 10 percent of what the total campaign cost of the race will be. As to the congressional race, allowing the $25,000, that will be maybe 50 percent, on the average cost of a House race which, it seems to me, is a figure which is high.

Another point I should mention, Mr. President, it seems to me that the Members of this body should vote for an amendment of this kind out of self-protection if nothing else, because all of us are accused of spending more money than we could ever possibly spend on our own campaigns, so that I would like the protection of law.

The Senator has a very good point with his amendment.

Mr. CHILES. I thank the Senator from Tennessee. I have a hard time conceiving of $50,000. That seems a lot of money to me, even for a presidential campaign, or if someone talks about coming to the Senate, by spending $35,000 or $25,000.

Mr. BROCK. $25,000 is a high percentage of the amount to run for Congress, but a person could almost afford that.

Mr. CHILES. The Senator has a good point. The senior Senator from Ohio in his discussion earlier said, "What is wrong with our election laws? We have disclosure in the bill." I am sure everyone will agree that disclosure is important and valid but part of it is that we are setting a standard to which all the people of this country will look. They will look at the standard and determine for themselves whether it is a good one or not.

What are we looking for in the House of Representatives or the Senate? We are looking for a body of men and women who will reflect the overall judgments of the people of this country. I do not believe that we want all wealthy people, all lawyers, or all insurance men. The whole genius of our system is to have a deliberative body made up of people from all walks of life who will come to the Senate and House and put their knowledge and expertise together to improve the welfare of all the people. They should not all be wealthy. They should all be capable of being able to run for the Senate or the House without possessing wealth.

Mr. President, I think that this is a good amendment.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute on the bill. As I said before, this is not a good amendment. It would be unenforceable completely, particularly in view of the credit arrangements that I discussed earlier. I hope that the Senate will reject the amendment, because it is unrealistic.

Let me point out that in the bill itself we have provided for complete disclosure. The public will know if a candidate is spending his money, and how much. They will form their own judgments and then they can decide whether the candidate is trying to buy the election, or is having someone buy it for him, because that information will remain available periodically and fully through a commission which we have appointed and the public will be able to make its own informed judgments.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. CANNON. I yield.

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, in my experience, I have been aware of people who wanted to serve their Government and the public was willing to share in the campaign expenses, but the candidate could afford to do it by himself, so why would we want to make someone be obligated to someone else for campaign contributions when he is fully able to take care of it himself?

Perhaps the candidate inherited the money from his mother or father and he does not want to throw any financial obligations on the shoulders of anyone else. He has plenty of money to contribute to his favorite charity. He would also like to serve in public office and do things for the good of the people. Why should he not be permitted to pay for campaign costs if that is what he wants to do? Why obligate him to someone else when he can afford to pay it? Why should we want to require that he seek contributions from people far less able to afford it than he? It makes no sense to me.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, in accordance with the notice I gave earlier, I move to lay this amendment on the table.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BENTSEN). The motion to table is not in order. The Senator from Maryland has 9 minutes left on his amendment.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I yield back my remaining time.

Mr. COTTON. Mr. President, I renew my request.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. Cor-ton) to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS).

On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the Clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLOTT. Mr. President, will the Chair please state the form of the question as it is now proposed to the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BENTSEN). The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. COTTON) to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS).

Mr. ALLOTT. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will resume the call of the roll.

The legislative clerk resumed and concluded the call of the roll.

Mr. BYRD of West Virginia. I announce that the Senator from Indiana (Mr. BAYH), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. EASTLAND), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. HARRIS), and the Senator from Wyoming (Mr. MCGEE) are necessarily absent.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I announce that the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY) is absent on official business.

The Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND) is necessarily absent.

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. MUNDT) is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Wyoming (Mr. HANSEN) and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) are detained on official business.

If present and voting, the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY) and the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND) would each vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 33, nays 58, as follows:

So Mr. Cotton's motion to lay Mr. MATHIAS' amendment on the table was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS). [Putting the question.]

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk which I ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator identify his amendment by number?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, would the Senator from Indiana withhold his amendment? There is another part to this amendment, and it was understood when action on this part of the amendment was completed that the Senator from Arizona (Mr. FANNIN), who has been on the floor for the last hour and a half, would offer his amendment.

Mr. HARTKE. Could the Senator from Indiana and the Senators from Illinois and Minnesota be recognized after that amendment?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Yes, Mr. President, I make that unanimous-consent request.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, to make the record clear, it has been agreed that after the disposal of the Mathias-Chiles amendment, which will be laid before the Senate shortly, the Senator from Arizona will be recognized, and then the Senator from Indiana and his associates will be recognized—

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, we cannot hear the majority leader.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Montana restate his request?

Mr. MANSFIELD. Mr. President, it is my understanding that it was understood that the second part of the Mathias-Chiles amendment would now be offered, to be followed by the amendment of the distinguished Senator from Arizona (Mr. FANNIN), to be followed, when disposed of, by the distinguished Senator from Indiana (Mr. HARTKE) and his associates.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HARTKE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the name of the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. HUMPHREY) may be added as a cosponsor of amendment No. 366.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the Senator from Maryland offering his amendment at this time?

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, I advise the Chair that the Senator from Florida (Mr. CHILES), who is cosponsor of the amendment, is seeking recognition, I think.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for me to make a correction of the Record?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator permit us to have the amendment read first?

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will read the amendment.

The legislative clerk read the amendment, as follows:

On page 15, strike out lines 19 and 20 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

Sec. 203. Section 603 of title 18, United States Code, is amended to read as follows: "§ 603. Limitations on contributions and expenditures

"(b) (1) No person (other than a candidate or political committee) may make contributions directly or indirectly during any calendar year in excess of an aggregate amount of $5,000 to any candidate for Federal office. For purposes of this paragraph, a contribution shall be held and considered to have been made to such a candidate if it is paid to such candidate or his agent.

"(2) No such person may make contributions directly or indirectly to political committees in excess of an aggregate amount of $5,000 during any calendar year.

"(3) No candidate may receive contributions from, nor authorize expenditures by, political committees in connection with his campaign for nomination for election, and election, to Federal office in excess of an aggregate amount of $75,000 during any calendar year.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, this is the second part of the amendment that we divided after we had offered it earlier. This portion of the amendment says that no person can give to a candidate more than $5,000 in a contribution.

The next part provides that no person can give to a committee or series of committees more than $5,000.

The third portion provides that no candidate shall receive from committees a sum in excess of $75,000 from the committee sources.

I think this provision would really complete the package of what we are talking about in election reform and in election campaign reform. Now we have done something about contributions of individuals and their families from their wealth. This amendment would go a further step that is necessary and provide that no one is going out, because he is wealthy, and buy himself a stable of Senators, Representatives, or any other candidates because he is making a contribution in excess of $5,000. This amendment is going to give the people some faith in our system that a candidate is not going to be bought, that he is not going to give special favors and consideration to someone who has paid a huge sum of money for his campaign, because they are going to know that no sum in excess of $5,000 will be given.

I think this is necessary to give us a meaningful campaign contribution bill. What are we seeking in a campaign contribution bill? We are seeking the confidence of the people. Obviously we are seeking a disclosure. We are seeking a limitation on overall spending. But, in addition to that, we are seeking to know that we are going to have candidates and officeholders who are not beholden, because they were responsible for their election to a single person. We are seeking to make sure that no person of individual wealth can use his wealth to obtain office against the public interest. More than that, we are seeking the confidence of the people in the electoral system.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHILES. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. I am rather amenable to the idea of limiting the contribution to $5,000. What disturbs me—and I repeat it—is the second part of the amendment, in which it states that no person may make contributions directly or indirectly to political committees in excess of an aggregate amount of $5,000 during any calendar year.

Would the Senator be amenable to having the provision read that no such person may make contributions directly or indirectly to political committees on behalf of any candidate in excess of, and so on?

Mr. CHILES. Yes, I would be.

Mr. PASTORE. What the Senator is actually doing here is providing that if a person is limited to contributing $5,000 to committees, if there are five people in his State running for Federal office, let us say one Senator and four Representatives, he is limited to $5,000; beyond that he could not make a contribution to the national committee, according to this amendment. Am I correct?

Mr. CHILES. Yes, I would be amenable to the suggestion the Senator makes.

Mr. PASTORE. In other words, the Senator would confine it to $5,000 for all committees for one candidate?

Mr. CHILES. Yes.

Mr. President, I would ask the Chair if, the yeas and nays not being ordered on the amendment, I could have the amendment conform to that language.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the right to modify his amendment.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, to add the following—

Mr. PASTORE. After the word "committees" on next to the last line of the amendment, add the words "on behalf of any candidate."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is the language accepted by the Senator from Florida?

Mr. CHILES. Yes, it is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the distinguished Senator, the author of the amendment, what effect this has on senatorial or campaign committees up here that raise money by the process of having dinners, such as it is the practice to have? If one gives $5,000 to that dinner, is he precluded from making a contribution to the candidate of his choice thereafter?

Mr. CHILES. No, he is not.

Mr. PASTORE. Not with the modification I made.

Mr. CHILES. With the modification, he would not be precluded.

Mr. McCLELLAN. One other question: They raise money at these dinners and they raise possibly more than the $5,000 for the candidates that will be entitled to receive those donations. Can the congressional committee which raises the money at those dinners be prohibited now from distributing more than $5,000 to any one candidate?

Mr. CHILES. Under the modification that I have accepted, under subpara-graph (3), the overall limitation will be $75,000 on behalf of the candidate who received it from the committee.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Do I understand one candidate can receive $75,000 from one of these dinner committees held here to raise money?

Mr. CHILES. Under the modification, if the money was not given to the committee of an individual Senator, it would be possible. That would be the overall limitation. Today there is no limitation at all.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am concerned about an individual Senator. I would like to know. Let us say $500,000 was raised up here at a dinner.

Mr. CHILES. Yes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. For congressional assistance for certain candidates, certain Members of Congress. They are entitled to receive contributions from that. Tell me what the limit is under this proposed legislation that one Senator can receive or one Representative can receive from this character of fundraising process.

Mr. CHILES. Today there is no limitation. He could receive the whole $500,000. Under this amendment, if adopted, there would be a limitation of $75,000.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is very intriguing, if you can give, out of this fund up here, as much as $75,000 to one candidate.

Mr. CHILES. Today, as I say, you could give as much as $500,000, under the Senator's example.

Mr. McCLELLAN. Well, that is hardly likely. It is impractical; I think we all agree with that.

Mr. CHILES. I think the $75,000 is a little impractical.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I am just trying to find out if you can still give more than the $5,000 from this fundraising to any candidate.

Mr. CHILES. Yes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is what we want to clear up.

Mr. CHILES. Yes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. So this has no reference, then, and there is no application, to these fundraising dinners that we have up here, where we ask our friends to send in money, to make contributions to the overall campaign fund?

Mr. CHILES. That is correct.

Mr. McCLELLAN. So a Senator or Representative can receive, or any committee or combination of committees can receive for him, more than $5,000 out of this fund?

Mr. CHILES. Yes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is what I thought we ought to clear up, because this fund has been raised and is available, and there will be others.

Mr. PASTORE. But the Senator should realize, if he will yield at this point, that we have got to qualify that. The question has been raised by the Senator in the context of the entire legislation that we are passing, I hope, today, and that is, No. 1, the candidate is limited as to how much money he can spend for his campaign, regardless of where the money is coming from; and No. 2, we have a very strict—and I have used the expression "very brutal"—disclosure law, whereby the candidate has to indicate where the money comes from.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is correct.

Mr. PASTORE. So thereby, if he receives $75,000 from the central campaign committee, he has to show it, and he has to file it with that independent commission that we have created.

All this proposal would do, as I understand the amendment now, is permit any individual to make a contribution of $5,000 to a candidate, or, if he has a multitude of committees, he can make a $5,000 contribution in the aggregate, for that particular candidate. But he cannot contribute $5,000 here, $5,000 there, and $5,000 somewhere else for the same candidate.

Mr. CHILES. That is correct.

Mr. PASTORE. That is all it amounts to.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I understood that in the amendment, but I did not understand how it would apply to these fund raising dinners, as to someone who may have contributed $5,000 to a dinner.

Mr. PASTORE. I wish to say to my friend that this is the crucial provision, upon which a veto might hinge.

Mr. SCOTT. Does this apply to all candidates, or just candidates for Congress?

Mr. CHILES. No; it would apply to all Federal offices.

Mr. COOK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHILES. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. COOK. Let us take the example of a candidate for the Presidency; we have a major dinner, and it is in that candidate's name as the presidential candidate. Is it correct that regardless of how much money is received as a result of that dinner, he can only, if only one committee is involved, receive a maximum of $75,000 from it?

Mr. CHILES. As a maximum.

Mr. COOK. What happens to the remainder of it, if more than $75,000 is raised?

Mr. CHILES. I am sure the money could go to the national party, or he could give it to his favorite charity.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. CHILES. The Senator from Kentucky had not completed his colloquy.

Mr. COOK. Might I say this all sounds well and good, but I am sure the contributions that are made as a result of buying tickets are made with the idea of contributing to the individual whose dinner is being attended; and I am sure that if the contributor knew the money was going to charity, he would make the contribution to charity so that he could deduct it from his income tax.

What the Senator is saying is that if a major dinner were given in the name of a presidential candidate, by a committee, that they would have to sell $75,000 worth of tickets, plus the expense of the dinner, and then stop; is that correct?

Mr. CHILES. Well, what I am saying is that they could make that contribution up to $5,000 to the candidate, instead of to the dinner.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHILES. I yield.

Mr. SCOTT. Under the Senator's amendment—and I think the mischief is beginning to come out here—suppose a person were interested in the outcome of the election in six States, where he would like to help a given candidate for the Presidency. He would like to give a thousand dollars; but, as I understand it, under the Senator's amendment, that would exceed what he could contribute, because that would be $6,000 instead of $5,000.

Mr. CHILES. That is correct.

Mr. SCOTT. So there are 50 States of the Union, and if somebody wanted to help out in all 50 States, he would be permitted to give $100 in each State; is that correct?

Mr. CHILES. That is right.

Mr. SCOTT. So a contributor is limited, in a presidential campaign, to campaign contributions, not of $5,000 per candidate, but $100 per candidate in each of the 50 States, if he were interested in doing that; is that right?

Mr. CHILES. If he would like to divide it that way, and that is the way he wanted to make the gift, that is fine. If he would like to give the presidential candidate $5,000 he can do that, but this amendment would spell out that he could not give the individual candidate more than $10,000. He could give him $5,000 individually and $5,000 through committees, but the amendment would spell out that one person could not bankroll a candidate for President of the United States.

Mr. SCOTT. Of course, my heart is bleeding for the half dozen or more presidential candidates in this body, who must be shivering in their shoes, at least, at the very thought of the impact of this amendment.

But beyond that, for the benefit of Senators who were not here earlier, I made these points, as Senators will recall:

First, the amendment is unconstitutional according to the testimony given in the committee.

Second, the Attorney General says it is unenforceable.

Third, it is open to any kind of evasion under the sun, because any candidate with means can call upon his uncles and his cousins and his sisters and his aunts, and we are back to the same old evil of having multifarious committees, except that now we are going to have multifarious relatives, if a man is fortunate enough to have the multifarious relatives.

The Senator from Nevada is opposed to the amendment, I am opposed to the amendment, and I would like to add something else: If this amendment goes into the bill, we are not going to get any bill, because the bill will be vetoed, and I would support the veto.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I think we can solve the question by deleting from the amendment section 3. If the amendment is primarily directed toward what you can contribute, why mess it up with what you can receive from committees?

First of all, this law does limit you as to the amount of money you can spend. This law does have a provision for very strict disclosure. We can solve the problem, I think, in this way. It has been called to my attention that I had the wrong piece of paper in my hand, because the Senator has added a subsection to his amendment, and that is the one that is causing the trouble. Why not just delete that subsection?

Mr. CHILES. All right. I ask that the amendment be further modified by deleting subsection 3, which would take away the restriction of the $75,000 from fund-raising dinners.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be so modified.

Mr. PASTORE. In other words, we are getting away from the collection element and getting into the contribution element, which is what we are dealing with here, and I do not think we ought to confuse them.

As it stands now, under this amendment, any person can contribute up to $5,000 to any individual candidate and up to $5,000 to any committee or combination of committees for that particular candidate; is that not it?

Mr. CHILES. That is correct.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, would the Senator further clarify what happens to all the fundraising dinners around here, to which I hope to avoid contributing?

Mr. CHILES. I think we are giving some protection to the Senator.

Mr. SCOTT. How? In other words, now you can raise it, if you want, by the fundraising dinners, and there will be no limitation; is that correct?

Mr. CHILES. No. Presently there is no limitation, that is correct, that there is no limitation now. We are seeking to put some meaningful limitations on this bill.

It is interesting, Mr. President, that on the one hand, when we seek to put the limitations on the bill, we hear the cry that that would be unconstitutional, that it is going to be vetoed, that it will bring down the wrath of heaven; but, on the other hand, when we take away what appears to be something that would be unenforceable, we are told that now we are opening up the door.

Mr. SCOTT. What I am trying to find out, though, is whether the Senator has withdrawn the $75,000 limitation.

Mr. CHILES. That is right.

Mr. SCOTT. If he has, he has opened the door; and thereby, rather than my sounding inconsistent, I point out that what the Senator is doing is encouraging the evasion. It seems to me that now they can have a half-million-dollar fundraising dinner and go ahead and give the man all he wants.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SCOTT. I think the Senator needs the help of the Senator from Rhode Island, with his mastery of logic, to see whether he can make sense out of that.

Mr. CHILES. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. With respect to the question raised by distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania, a person is limited as to how much money he can spend. Irrespective of this amendment, the Democratic Senatorial Campaign Committee or the Republican Senatorial Campaign Committee could give the Senator, provided he disclosed it, up to the maximum amount he could spend for his campaign. This does not inhibit that at all. This does not touch that element at all. That is what we are solving here now.

When we take out section 3, all we are confining this to is to what a person can contribute, not what he can receive. He can receive, provided he discloses it, up to the maximum amount he can spend.

Mr. DOMINICK. Does this mean that any one person can give to a variety of different political committees?

Mr. PASTORE. Not for the same candidate.

Mr. DOMINICK. Suppose there is the Republican Committee for Senatorial Support in Colorado, the Republican Committee for Senatorial Support in Washington, D.C., and the Republican Committee for Senatorial Support in South Carolina. Can they give $5,000 to each of these?

Mr. PASTORE. Yes, and nothing has been done in this bill to change that.

Mr. SCOTT. What do they do?

Mr. PASTORE. They distribute it, as they have been doing up to now—and I am told that the Senator's side has done a little better than we have.

Mr. SCOTT. We try. We are not always successful.

Mr. CHILES. What would be done in that situation is that now we have a disclosure. The Senator from Florida—if I may refer to myself—would disclose that he got his money from the committee in the District of Columbia, the Committee for Better Government in Florida, the Committee To Elect Good Democrats somewhere else. There are all those nefarious and hidden ways in which I could have received my money, as opposed to the standards set by this amendment, that an individual shall give not more than $5,000 and that he shall put his name on it. So that there would be a test by which the public could judge, with the disclosure in the bill and with the standards set by the individual contributions.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for some questions?

Mr. CHILES. I yield.

Mr. DOMINICK. Do I correctly understand that under the Senator's amendment, as he is proposing it, any person can give to any number of political committees so long as they are not for just one candidate?

Mr. PASTORE. That is correct.

Mr. DOMINICK. Is that correct?

Mr. CHILES. So long as they are not giving to a candidate.

Mr. DOMINICK. Without the Senator's amendment, one would still have to make disclosures of where he got his money; would he not?

Mr. CHILES. That is correct.

Mr. DOMINICK. So the only effect of the Senator's amendment would be to put up a kind of blazoning sign which is going to inhibit the ability of the Senator from South Carolina and myself to raise money for our respective candidates.

Mr. CHILES. No; it certainly is not going to prohibit the raising of money, but it is going to put a standard to the people by which the people will see that a candidate is not to take more than $5,000 from an individual, and then the standard of judging how much money he receives, whether it is from nefarious committees.

Mr. DOMINICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. CHILES. I yield.

Mr. DOMINICK. The effect of the Senator's amendment is that the Senator from South Carolina and myself, being the chairmen, respectively, of our senatorial committees, can create committees in each State and raise a great deal of money because we have a multitude of candidates. But when we come to the President, on either side, although an individual or our committees might give us as much as $50,000 for the Senators, they can give only $5,000 for the Presidency.

Mr. CHILES. No; the national committee also could collect money there.

Mr. DOMINICK. Not for an individual candidate.

Mr. BROCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHILES. I have told the Senator from Arkansas that I would yield to him.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I must attend a committee meeting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time of the Senator from Florida has expired.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, let us find out about the time. Do we have any idea of when we are going to vote on this amendment?

I yield 10 minutes to the Senator on the bill.

Mr. McCLELLAN. I should like to ask one other question, for clarification. This matter has become very complicated, as is evidenced by the colloquy that has taken place.

I present a hypothetical case now, and I ask the Senator to tell me what his amendment does. The Senator says that one person can contribute only $5,000 to a single candidate.

Mr. CHILES. That is correct.

Mr. McCLELLAN. If they have a dinner for the Democratic candidates, or for one candidate, where the plates are $5,000, or the amount for a given number of plates should come to $5,000 and one fellow buys that number of tickets, can he afterward contribute $5,000 to that candidate, if this money is distributed?

Mr. CHILES. He can give $5,000 to a committee or a series of committees for the candidate. He can give $5,000 to the candidate. So he can make a total contribution of $10,000.

Mr. McCLELLAN. He can make a total contribution of $10,000?

Mr. CHILES. Yes.

Mr. McCLELLAN. That is what I thought. I think the Senator really is simply inviting a lot of dinners. That is what the result would be—just a lot of dinners, and a fellow could contribute all he wanted. He could buy all the tickets he wanted.

Mr. PROUTY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHILES. I yield.

Mr. PROUTY. I think I am raising a rather important question, and I should like to have it clarified.

The Senator's amendment states that no person can make contributions directly or indirectly during any calendar year in excess of an aggregate amount of $5,000 to any candidate for Federal office; is that correct?

Mr. CHILES. That is correct.

Mr. PROUTY. Suppose someone is solicited for $5,000 for a certain candidate. Then he is asked to contribute to one of the political action committees such as the Committee for an Effective Congress or some other committee, such as an environmental committee of some kind, supporting the same candidate. He has given $5,000 to the candidate. He gives $2,000, perhaps, to one of the committees and does not know how that money is going to be spent. Is he not in violation of the law?

Mr. CHILES. Not with the removal of subsection (3). The provision would be under subsection (2), and subsection (2), with the modification—we changed the language in subsection (2). I do not know whether the Senator has that. With the amendment, he would not be in violation if he gave it to a committee other than a committee for an individual candidate.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHILES. I yield.

Mr. MATHIAS. I think he could be in violation if he gave to an individual the maximum amount, $5,000, and then gave to a committee an earmarked contribution.

Mr. CHILES. In excess.

Mr. MATHIAS. In excess of his original contribution.

Mr. PROUTY. But if he earmarked it, he would not be in violation of the law?

Mr. CHILES. That is correct.

Mr. SCOTT. Even if he did not earmark it and it still got to the candidate, he would not be in violation.

Mr. CHILES. That is correct.

Mr. SCOTT. That is an evasion.

Mr. BROCK. What possible effect would this amendment have? All that the respective parties would have to do would be to set up multiple candidate committees, and then everybody would be excluded from the law.

Mr. CHILES. There is the possibility.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CHILES. I yield.

Mr. PASTORE. What we are trying to avoid is the element of being beholden. If one makes a contribution to the Republican Senatorial Committee, that money goes into a pot. The candidate does not become responsible to the giver. Nobody becomes responsible to the giver.

Now we have something a little different. Where one makes a personal contribution to an individual, there is the intimate contact of the person to person. That is where we are disturbed a little, because that is where you become beholden. You can take this thing and stretch it to any ridiculous proportion you want. But what we are trying to do is to measure the amount any individual can give another individual, or any committee can give on behalf of that particular candidate. When you give it to a campaign committee, or go down here to a banquet being held by the National Democratic Committee or the Republican National Committee, you are not beholden to anyone, so that the committee gives you $50,000 and you have got to state that the $50,000 came from the committee, and the committee has got to state where they got the $50,000. But you are not beholden to the giver. That is the point we are trying to get over. We could take a quarter of a million dollars, or half a million dollars, or $1 million, and put it in someone's campaign pot. That is what we are trying to avoid. We are trying to free the democratic process. If Senators do not believe in that freedom, then vote against this whole bill.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL).

Mr. GRAVEL. I should like to address myself to the point the Senator from Colorado made, and over which the eyebrows of the distinguished Senator from South Carolina were being raised. As I understand it, philosophically, this is going to add to the structure of committees, be they the party committees, or committees for peace causes, or committees for hawk causes. It will add to these, because they will be the vehicle through which money will be able to be contributed in an unlimited fashion. It will facilitate the task. It might develop party regularity. It might throw into motion new aspects of our system that are not now there. We might move away from committees and identify more with individuals. What the Senator is doing is a sensible device that will accomplish more with organizations. It will have that effect.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I should like to comment on what the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island said. As I understand it, this means that some people are not beholden to the large givers, those in the party structure, those in the committee structure.

Shades of Carmen Di Sapio. Shades of all the bossism I have ever seen. Every candidate will be beholden to the political committees that you are forcing into the political stream today. I hope that I do not have to be beholden to any political boss. I am not beholden to anyone right now. I am perfectly willing fully to discuss every contribution I get from anywhere, and require anyone that makes a contribution to disclose it. But why create a political figure who has the power? You assume somebody will be beholden. Why not assume that the political boss will not be beholden to the contributor? You assume that we would.

Mr. PASTORE. I do not know Carmen Di Sapio. I have never met him. But I do know ERNEST HOLLINGS and I do know PETE DOMINICK, and they are not bosses. They are not bosses. They are chairmen of campaign committees of the Senate. Take Larry O'Brien, the present national chairman. Take any other names the Senator wants. He does not impress me by using the name Di Sapio.

Several Senators addressed the Chair.

Mr. CHILES. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, this amendment refers to $5,000—

Mr. CHILES. That is correct.

Mr. CURTIS. I take it that it would not include services or gifts other than dollars; is that correct?

Mr. CHILES. I do not know what the definition of the overall bill is in regard to services. I would be open to a legal interpretation on the basis of that definition.

Mr. MATHIAS. It is a thing of value.

Mr. CHILES. Yes I think it is a thing of value, so that I think services could be computed within that.

Mr. CURTIS. I still do not think it will effectively reach those situations where organizations delegate great armies of manpower to go out and carry on a candidate's campaign.

Mr. CHILES. I would answer that by saying that there are many things the amendment does not reach and a lot of things I would like to see in the bill are greater than the amendment. But I think what we are trying to do here is to set a standard that will be such that the public will be able to see that an individual should not give more than $5,000 to a candidate, and the candidate should not get more than $5,000 from an individual. He should not be beholden to anyone by more than that. That is the standard we are trying to set. If we go around it by way of a committee, we can do that now. The committees are there.

What the bill does do is to set up disclosure for the committees. When we go around it by those committees, the press, your opponent, the public, will be able to see that you did not go by the standard that was set in the bill and someone is trying to give all his money through committees, or someone is trying to receive all the money through committees. So I think we still have that standard, whereby we can judge the guy in the white hat or the guy in the black hat. The public needs that standard. They want to have us say that we are not beholden to anyone, that we are not taking money from one man and owing him for that, that we are not going out to try to buy a stable of office holders. So we will set that standard. That is what it comes down to. I think Senators can disagree with that and can also find all kinds of technical things to disagree with, all kinds of loopholes as to what the amendment does not do. There are some things that it does do. But what we are talking about is the philosophy of whether we think there should be a standard, a hallmark that we see the office is not for sale, the candidate is not for sale, a Senator is not for sale, and that we will see that we are putting a prohibition on what an individual can give. That is what the amendment does.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I yield myself at this time 10 minutes on the bill so that I may yield to the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE); but before doing that, I would like to point out a further evasion committed by this amendment. For example, if any three Senators running for office in 1972, of the same political party, get their heads together and organize a committee called "a Committee to Elect Senators We Like" or "a Committee to Elect Senators Who Will Do What We Say," whatever they want to call it—and of course they will really call it "the Committee for Clean Government," I was only suggesting the real name—but they form a Committee for Clean Government and the three of them have an arrangement whereby they can get $5,000 from each contributor only, but the committee for clean government can get all the money it wants because it is not earmarked and you have tacit consent that it may be $150,000. To the candidates' immense surprise, they send $50,000 to candidate A, $50,000 to candidate B, and $50,000 to candidate C.

The Senator from Florida indicated that the committees can spend all they want. So long as they do not earmark it, they will get it. This implies that politicians were born yesterday. It also turns over to a bunch of newly created committees the function heretofore exercised by reasonably respected organizations known as the Democratic National Committee and the Republican National Committee. In deference to my friend from Kansas I should say highly respected, since he and I held that same job.

I now yield to the distinguished Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I appreciate the Senator yielding to me. I see some great possibilities here, as the chairman of the Republican National Committee, and I have a few questions to ask the Senator from Florida.

As I understand part 2, there would be no limit on the amount of money any person might contribute to the Republican National Committee; is that correct?

Mr. CHILES. That is correct, unless he tried to contribute to a committee on behalf of an individual candidate.

Mr. DOLE. Unless it was earmarked, and I understand that part. Because President Nixon said I should be chairman, it would be all right for an individual to contribute $50,000 or $100,000 to the Republican National Committee; is that correct?

Mr. CHILES. In spite of what President Nixon said, he would be able to contribute.

Mr. DOLE. Right. Then I, in turn, as chairman of the Republican National Committee—and certainly Larry O'Brien also of the Democratic National Committee—under this amendment could make a distribution any way I saw fit insofar as a campaign was concerned, as the committee chairman, not as an individual.

Mr. CHILES. That is right. I mean, although the limitation was under the bill as to what the candidate's spending would be.

Mr. DOLE. Then I would not be guilty of any crime if I make a contribution as a chairman of a party to a candidate; is that correct?

Mr. CHILES. That is correct.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, secondly, does the limitation apply to both primary and general elections?

Mr. CHILES. Yes, it does apply. It is an overall limitation.

Mr. DOLE. So if we have John Doe, a millionaire, who contributes $5,000 to the nomination efforts of someone who wants to be elected President or Senator, he could not contribute $5,000 in the general election.

Mr. CHILES. Not individually; the Senator is correct.

Mr. DOLE. Then, he could contribute $5,000 in each calendar year. He could start preparing now for 1976 by contributing $5,000 each year, starting this year.

Mr. CHILES. The Senator is correct.

Mr. DOLE. I think it is important to point up that about all we do, as I understand it, is limit the amount that John Doe, whoever he may be, can contribute if he has money and if he is concerned about politics. He is more or less limited to contributing $5,000 to one presidential candidate, but he could contribute $5,000 to any number of senatorial candidates.

Mr. CHILES. Individually; the Senator is correct.

Mr. DOLE. So, he has to limit his contributions to a candidate for President which is rather unfair, for I think that a candidate for the Presidency is perhaps a little more important than a candidate for Senator. However, John Doe can contribute money to the national committees. Is there any limit to the number of committees to which he can contribute?

Mr. CHILES. As long as they were not set up individually for him, he could contribute to committees. But there would be a disclosure under the bill as to who was contributing.

Mr. DOLE. It occurs to the Senator from Kansas that disclosure is the way to solve the problem. However, it does appear that it would give the national committees much more power. I do not concur completely in what the Senator from Alaska said. However, it appears to me that if John Doe, a millionaire, could not contribute more than $5,000 to Mr. X's candidacy for President but could contribute to the Democratic or Republican National Committees an unlimited amount, it would put us in a strong position as chairmen of the national committees.

Mr. CHILES. I think he could contribute to the party now. Much of the money would be coming through the committee now. I do not know how that would change the matter.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, as a practical matter, we have great difficulty in the Republican National Committee—and I assume in the Democratic National Committee—raising money. It is particularly true in a presidential year. There is a lot of competition for the dollar. However, if the amendment is adopted, it would strengthen the position of the national committees and we could have, if we were so inclined, great stature in our positions.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, is there any reason the Senator should not have?

Mr. DOLE. I want some, but not all of it.

Mr. PASTORE. How much does the Senator want?

Mr. DOLE. Not all of it but it appears that if we had all the money, we might even name the candidate.

Mr. PASTORE. The point is that this goes to the amount an individual could spend. This goes to what an individual could contribute.

If the Senator does not believe in a limitation he ought to be against the amendment. I am not trying to persuade anyone to go along with me. As a matter of fact, I went out of my way to make corrections in the modification so that it would be this way. It was a labyrinth of confusion before.

If the Senator does not go along with me, he can be as sincere as possible and vote against it. However, we are trying to limit the amount an individual can give to an individual candidate.

Naturally a President does not go around collecting money for a campaign. No one collects money for a President. His national committee does it. It is always done that way. That is done by the national committee, not by President Nixon. It was not done by President Kennedy or any other President. The national committee does that.

We do not want to do anything to render the national committee innocuous. We do not want to do that. If in the process we involve the person-to-person obligation, we are better off than if we make the democratic process weaker.

Mr. DOLE. Of course, in every presidential campaign, the Veterans Committee for HUMPHREY, the Veterans Committee for Nixon—I am sorry if I used that name without permission.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Go right ahead. I like it.

Mr. DOLE. Whoever might happen to be the candidate, could that candidate get $5,000 from an individual.

Mr. PASTORE. Not to each one. An individual can give any amount up to $5,000. If he has five committees, $5,000 can be given to each committee.

Mr. DOLE. What about the candidate for Vice President? Could he also give money to Vice President AGNEW, for example, if he is a candidate?

Mr. PASTORE. That is correct. Any person could give up to $5,000 to him or to any of the committees.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, in effect, the Vice President is elected because he is connected with the presidential candidate.

Mr. PASTORE. Well, he could lend the money to the President.

Mr. SCOTT. That would constitute another evasion.

Mr. PASTORE. There is no evasion involved.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, some of us have heard about contributors who oftentimes give to both sides. Those givers could still give twice as much as the loyal supporters of those candidates if this amendment were to pass.

Mr. PASTORE. I think that the strong disclosure law that we will have would give him away.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I share that view. Disclosure would take care of the fellow who plays both sides of the street.

Mr. PASTORE. They cannot straddle the road after this.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator from Kansas that in this amendment, as in any statute passed by Congress, it is possible to evade the law or to avoid the law or to just break the law. But we have to assume that people want to uphold the policy and standard which Congress sets. That is all we are doing. We are setting a standard and a goal for the American people. I think that it is worth setting. I hope that the Senate will adopt the amendment.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. President, I have undertaken to yield to the Senator from Alaska. So I will yield 2 minutes to the Senator from Alaska and then turn over control of the time on this side to the manager of the bill on this side, the Senator from Vermont, who seeks recognition.

Mr. GRAVEL. Mr. President, is there a limitation in the bill on how much any political party or committee can spend on whomever might be their candidate? If a group for peace had $1 billion or $1 million, could they spend that as they chose?

Mr. PASTORE. Not if they are campaigning for the one candidate. All they can spend is up to the amount named. They cannot spend any money on the candidate's campaign without his permission.

Mr. GRAVEL. And what if they do not have it?

Mr. PASTORE. Then there would be a violation of the law if they were to do that. This is not my amendment that these questions are addressed to. I just sought to clarify the amendment. I just put in the amendment.

Mr. GRAVEL. I am trying to make up my mind. Although I agree with the Senator from Florida and I think this is a laudatory standard to achieve, I do not think the amendment will accomplish this. It will set into motion a brokerage system that we have gotten away from in which a person would become very powerful as a professional fundraiser. He would be able to go out and collect money and parcel it out and have great power, and yet not be an elected official.

Mr. PASTORE. I cannot imagine any person being in that position unless he happens to be chairman of either of the political parties, unless he happens to be Senator DOLE, chairman of the Republican Party, or Lawrence O'Brien, chairman of the Democratic Party.

Mr. GRAVEL. I disagree with the Senator. If I were to live in the Southwest and wanted to raise a lot of money to defeat peace candidates, I might have very good access to a very large sum of money.

I could parcel that sum out from one or two individuals to as many candidates as I might choose under this system, and it would actually be encouraged because they would be given this subterfuge. In other words, Mr. President, if you want to give a lot of money to a candidate, do it through a committee. I think the national committees are clean, but it would open up a proliferation of committees.

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, I yield myself time on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ROHN). The Senator from Rhode Island is recognized.

Mr. PASTORE. I answer that if there were no ceiling as to the amount of money that could be spent in the Senator's behalf the Senator would be correct, but the Senator must consider this amendment in the context of the entire bill. Whoever receives a dime from any person in any campaign has to disclose it under the law.

Mr. GRAVEL. But that is a virtue that would exist without this amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. But it does not exist today. That is why we are here.

Mr. GRAVEL. The Senator misunderstands me. That virtue exists in the bill, without this amendment.

Mr. PASTORE. That may be so but without this amendment any individual could give any amount without restriction. The Senator from Florida wants to do something about that. He does not want the money to come from not only any one particular source but from many sources. That is the approach of the Senator's amendment. If the Senator from Alaska does not go along with him he can vote against it.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PASTORE. Mr. President, on the bill, I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I wish to ask a question for clarification. Much of the discussion has been about the national committees, but everybody knows we have State committees, county committees, and city committees. There is a county Democratic committee, a county Republican committee, a State Democratic committee, and a State Republican committee.

Does this particular amendment deny an individual the right to contribute to those committees that do not have particularly any one man in mind?

Mr. PASTORE. No; it would not change that at all.

Mr. HUMPHREY. An individual could make a $5,000 contribution to 50 State committees, and he could make a similar contribution to any number of county committees. Second, once that happened, insofar as individual amounts of expenditures are concerned, how do we measure out, for example, if the Democratic committee of my State decides to run a full-page ad for all the candidates in 1972, starting with the presidential, vice-presidential, and county candidates?

Mr. PASTORE. It would have to be exposed to the Senator from Minnesota and they would have to get his consent to do it for him. In other words, the Senator would become responsible for any act done in his behalf. That is why this is a strong bill.

If Senators think it should not be that strong, it should be weakened, but we have made this a strong bill.

If anyone who conducts a campaign in the Senator's behalf or spends money in the Senator's behalf, that is chargeable to the Senator and it cannot be done without his permission.
